

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE:

NEW SERIES:

CONTAINING

THE DEBATES, PROCEEDINGS, AND LAWS,

OF

THE FIRST SESSION

OF

THE THIRTY-SECOND CONGRESS.

---

VOLUME XXIV.—PART II.

---

BY JOHN C. RIVES.

---

85000
CITY OF WASHINGTON:
PRINTED AT THE OFFICE OF JOHN C. RIVES.
1852.

J.11
G5

---

[For Index, see Part I.]

---

4 AUG 28
Copy 1968

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32d CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 53.

for the dry-dock, basin, and railway at Kittery, over $721,937, and $610,000 for the dock, without the basin and railway, in California. They have received, or are to receive, in all, $3,078,594; a pretty large sum for one set of gentlemen to receive. I will hereafter show how much they must have made, if they stated the truth in their original memorials to Congress.

Now, sir, how much did they propose to build these docks for originally? Remember, these are Congressional docks, for I want to show the evils of this policy of Congress making contracts. I want to condemn the contract system. I have no quarrel with these gentlemen; they have a right to make as much money as they can, and it is our fault if we allow them to get it improperly.

I want to show how this dock system has progressed.

On motion by Mr. BORLAND, the honorable Senator gave way, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 23, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. HOUSTON obtained the floor.

The SPEAKER. If the House will allow the Chair, as there is a large accumulation of Executive communications upon the Speaker's table, he will now present them to the House.

Mr. FREEMAN. If the Chair will allow me, I desire to ask the leave of the House to withdraw certain papers from the files of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will submit his proposition.

On motion by Mr. FREEMAN, by unanimous consent, it was then Ordered, That the papers in the case of Wm. B. Ligon be withdrawn from the files of the House, and that they be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FREEMAN. I also ask that the papers in the case of the heirs of Jellis Fonda be withdrawn from the files of the House.

Mr. STANLY. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri wish them withdrawn?

Mr. FREEMAN. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina, that they are papers which were presented here some years ago, and which I now desire to withdraw, for the purpose of having them returned to the claimant.

Mr. STANLY. Is the claim again to come up before Congress?

Mr. FREEMAN. The object is to return the papers to the claimant for examination, to be presented again, if deemed advisable.

Mr. STANLY. I must object, unless copies of the papers are filed in the Clerk's office before the papers are withdrawn.

Mr. FREEMAN. I am willing to comply with that condition.

Mr. STANLY. Very well; then I will not object to it.

It was then

Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of the heirs of Jellis Fonda.

Mr. FAULKNER, by unanimous consent, presented a preamble and resolutions of the General Assembly of Virginia, requesting the Congress of the United States to make a further appropriation of scrip for satisfying Virginia bounty land warrants, and for ceding to the United States the refuse lands in the military district between the Sciota and the Miami rivers, in the State of Ohio; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GROW, by unanimous consent, presented the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, viz:

1. Relative to the completion of the breakwater at the mouth of Delaware bay, and the repair of the piers in the Delaware river, so as to make them secure harbors of refuge for vessels.

2. For the establishment of a dry-dock, navy-yard, and depôt on the lake frontier.

3. Relative to the release of Smith O'Brien and other Irish patriots in captivity.

4. Declaring the Wheeling bridge an obstruction to the navigation of the Ohio river, and injurious to the commerce of Pennsylvania; which said joint resolutions were severally appropriately referred, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DIMMICK also, by unanimous consent, presented resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, of similar import with the foregoing, together with resolutions relative to the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of Sault Ste. Marie; which latter resolution was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I thought I was entitled to the floor. I only yielded it at the request of the Chair, in order to allow him to present to the House the communications upon the Speaker's table.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair proposes that the several Executive communications upon the Speaker's table shall be taken up, and that such of them as do not give rise to debate be referred, or otherwise disposed of.

Mr. STANLY. I have no objection to that. All I wish is, that they shall not be debated; for if they are to be subject to debate you might as well postpone the other business of the House indefinitely.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following messages, heretofore received from the President of the United States, viz:

To the House of Representatives:

In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 15th ultimo, requesting information respecting the seizure and confiscation of the barque Georgiana, of Maine, the brig Susan Loud, of Massachusetts, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State and the documents which accompanied it.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, January 28th, 1852.

On motion by Mr. SMART, it was Ordered, That the said message and accompanying documents be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and printed.

To the Senate and

House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit to Congress a dispatch, addressed to the Secretary of State by the Minister of the United States at Mexico, and the papers therein referred to, relative to the cemetery which has been constructed in the neighborhood of that city, as a place of sepulture for the remains of the officers and soldiers of the United States who died or were killed in that vicinity during the late war, and for such citizens of the United States as may hereafter die there. A copy of a report of the agent who was sent for the purpose of superintending the work is also herewith transmitted. It will be seen that a sum of $2,500 or $3,000, in addition to the amount appropriated by the act of Congress approved the 25th of September, 1850, is represented to be necessary to carry the objects of that appropriation into full effect. I accordingly recommend that provision therefor may be made.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, March 4th, 1852.

On motion by Mr. BISSELL, it was Ordered, That the said message and accompanying documents be laid on the table, and be printed.

To the Senate and

House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit to Congress a letter, addressed to me by the Governor of the Territory of Minnesota, with the statements, to which it refers, of the disbursements, up to the 1st of January last, of the money appropriated by the act approved 11th June, 1850, for the erection of public buildings in that Territory.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, March 4th, 1852.

On motion by Mr. SIBLEY, it was Ordered, That the said message and accompanying documents be referred to the Committee on Territories, and be printed.

The Speaker also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House sundry Executive communications, viz:

I. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting statements of the manner in which the fund for the contingent expenses of that Department has been expended during the last fiscal year. On motion by Mr. SWEETSER, referred to the Committee on Public Expenditures, and ordered to be printed.

II. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting his annual statement of the clerks and other persons who have been employed in that Department during the last fiscal year. On motion by Mr. SWEETSER, referred to the Committee on Public Expenditures, and ordered to be printed.

III. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury, respecting the light-house system of the United States. On motion by Mr. DUNCAN, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IV. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a statement of appropriations for the War Department, transferred to the Department of the Interior, showing the balances of appropriations on the 1st of July, 1849, the appropriations made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1851. On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

V. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting information in answer to a resolution of the House of the 9th ultimo, respecting the canal cut by John Grant through Shell Reef, Mobile county, Alabama. On motion by Mr. SEYMOUR, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

VI. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, in answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives, February 9, 1852, calling for information in regard to the steam mail service, the amount of money appropriated out of the Federal Treasury, under contract, for that service, and the capability of the vessels built under said contracts of being converted into war steamers, &c., &c.

The SPEAKER. This communication is a very long one. It will be for the House to say whether it shall be read.

A MEMBER. What does it relate to?

Mr. PEASLEE. I understand this communication is in answer to a resolution which I submitted to the House sometime since in relation to our foreign mail steamer service. I move that it be laid upon the table and printed.

The question was put and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PEASLEE. I also move that the Committee on Printing be authorized to inquire into the propriety of printing five thousand additional copies of that document. That committee can examine it; and, if they think it of sufficient importance as to make it expedient to publish it to the country, they can report the fact to the House.

Mr. STANLY. I think this is one of the questions which will give rise to debate; and, according to the understanding before we consented to the taking up of this communication, it must go over.

The SPEAKER. The question of printing, in the opinion of the Chair, is not a debatable question at this time.

Mr. STANLY. There is no necessity for printing these extra copies, and I therefore object to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from New Hampshire to submit the proposition that the Committee on Printing shall take into consideration the expediency of printing five thousand extra copies of the document now before the House. Is that the proposition?

Mr. PEASLEE. That was my proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know exactly what disposition can be made of the proposition if it is not now disposed of.

Mr. KING, of New York. That proposition can be debated when the committee reports.

Mr. STANLY. I do not object to the printing of the paper in the usual manner. But I do object to printing the extra copies; and I suppose, according to the understanding of the House, if it is to be debated it cannot be now considered.

Mr. PHELPS. I understand that the proposition now before the House is simply to print extra copies. The printing of the document, in the usual manner, has already been ordered. Now, that proposition is clearly not debatable. The law providing for printing extra copies of documents prescribes that all such motions shall be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STANLY. I understand that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that this is not a debatable question. A proposition to print extra copies, must, as a matter of course, under the rule, be referred to the Committee on Printing. The Chair is, however, not very clear upon that point.

Mr. STANLY. Then the House is acting under a misapprehension.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. STANLY. I rose to a question of order myself.

Mr. STANTON. The question I make is, that it is not in order to consider this resolution to-day. It must lie over one day, under the rule.

Mr. STANLY. That is the question I am arguing. I do not object, as I have already said, to the reception of this communication, or to the printing of the ordinary number. The communications were taken up with the understanding that none of them should be debated. Unless that understanding is carried out we postpone the deficiency bill indefinitely. Gentlemen should bring up their propositions to print at another time, and another day, when discussion could be admitted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under the impression, after having examined the rules, that the motion to print is in order, and that it is not debatable. It must, however, go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STANLY. But what becomes of the understanding, if we are to receive and debate propositions like this?

The SPEAKER. The Chair again repeats, that the proposition is not debatable. It is not a motion to print the document in the usual manner, but it is a motion to print an extra number of copies, which must go to the Committee on Printing, without debate.

Mr. STANLY. Then I will take up the original motion to print. I move to reconsider the vote by which this communication was ordered to be printed, and I propose to debate that proposition. Now, what becomes of this motion, with the understanding which the House have agreed upon? What I want is, that when we take up the business upon the Speaker's table, with a particular understanding, that the House should adhere to that understanding, otherwise you will get into such a debate as I predicted in the first place; and you will neglect other business which is indispensable to the welfare of the country.

The SPEAKER. The right of the gentleman to debate the motion to print, is, in the opinion of the Chair, very clear. The gentleman moves to reconsider the vote by which the communication was ordered to be printed, and he proposes to debate that motion. The communication must, therefore, remain upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. PHELPS. I appeal to my friend from North Carolina to withdraw his objection. No debate is intended upon this matter. The only question is to submit the motion, and let it be referred to the Committee on Printing, under the rules.

Mr. STANLY. I do not object to the printing of the communication in the usual form.

Mr. PHELPS. It is only a proposition to print extra copies.

Mr. STANLY. That is what I object to. Now, if the gentleman will withdraw the motion to print the extra copies, there is no difficulty. I have no sort of objection to the communication being printed.

Mr. PEASLEE. To obviate all difficulty, I will, for the present, withdraw my motion to print an extra number of copies.

Mr. STANLY. Then I withdraw my motion to reconsider the motion to print.

The communication was consequently ordered to be laid upon the table, and be printed.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Commissioner of Patents, transmitting that portion of his annual report for the year 1851, which relates to the arts and manufactures.

Mr. STUART. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Patents, and that it be printed.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would inquire whether it is not better to refer that communication to the Committee on Printing?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recollect the practice in regard to this report.

Mr. KING, of New York. I would suggest that the motion to print be deferred until the Committee on Patents report what number should be printed; and that that committee inquire in regard to the proper number to be printed, rather than that we should order it to be printed now.

The SPEAKER. That is the business of the Committee on Printing. Does the gentleman from New York submit instructions?

Mr. KING. I move then to amend the motion of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART.] so as to instruct the committee to inquire as to the proper number to be printed, and to fix upon that number.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I rise for the purpose of suggesting to my colleague [Mr. KING] to let the question of printing be referred to the Committee on Printing for consideration, where it ought to go. I will move to amend, so as to refer this question of printing to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. KING. That is the original motion, and my motion is to instruct that committee to report upon printing the ordinary as well as an extra number, and to determine what that number shall be.

Mr. STUART. My original motion was to refer it to the Committee on Patents, but as some gentlemen prefer that it should go to the Committee on Printing, I will modify my motion so that the communication shall go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I merely wish to remark that all motions to print an extra number must go to the Committee on Printing—that is the law upon the subject; and not a mere rule of the House.

The SPEAKER. That is an express rule of the House.

Mr. ORR. If I remember the former practice of the House, it is this: Whenever a Patent Office report has been submitted by the Commissioner of Patents, a resolution has been offered directing an extra number of copies to be printed, which resolution has heretofore been referred to the Committee on Printing, which fixes the extra number. At the first session of the last Congress I believe one hundred thousand copies of the agricultural part, and seventy thousand copies extra of the mechanical part were ordered.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to inquire if this report embraces, as on former occasions, two parts, a mechanical and an agricultural part?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that it does not. The agricultural part will be submitted hereafter. The Commissioner of Patents expressly states in his letter that this is only the mechanical part.

Mr. EVANS. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Printing; and upon that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] has already submitted that motion, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. KING] has moved to amend the motion, by instructing the committee to inquire into the propriety of printing an extra number, and to report the number to be printed, and upon that the previous question is demanded.

Mr. STUART. What will be the effect of the previous question upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. KING]?

The SPEAKER. It will embrace it.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. The 61st rule requires that a motion, asking for an extra number of any document, should lie over one day. This motion, if there is any objection to the previous question, would be obliged to lie over one day; the object of the gentleman can be obtained by simply moving that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. If it be the pleasure of the House, the Chair will state the action of the last Congress upon this subject. A report of the Commissioner of Patents being presented, "On motion by Mr. Conger, Ordered, That the Committee on Printing inquire into the expediency of printing an extra number of such report," the report itself having been referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. KING, of New York. It is the same motion submitted now.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I call for the reading of the 61st rule.

The rule was accordingly read, as follows:

"61. A proposition requesting information from the President of the United States, or directing it to be furnished by the head of either of the Executive Departments, or by the Postmaster General, or to print an extra number of any document or other matter, excepting messages of the President to both Houses at the commencement of each session of Congress, and the reports and documents connected with or referred to in it, shall lie on the table one day for consideration, unless otherwise ordered by the unanimous consent of the House."

The SPEAKER. This is a proposition to inquire into the expediency of printing an extra number, and not a proposition to print an extra number. The Chair, therefore, must overrule the point of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON.]

The question was then taken upon the demand for the previous question, and it received a second; and the main question was then ordered to be put.

The question was then taken on referring the communication to the Committee on Printing, with the instructions moved by Mr. KING; and it was agreed to.

LAWS OF OREGON.

The SPEAKER. The Chair presents to the House the Journal and Laws of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Oregon.

Mr. STUART. Are they in printed form?

The SPEAKER. They are.

Mr. STUART. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no action to be had upon them. I move that they be referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. LANE. Are they the laws of the last session?

The SPEAKER. They are the laws of 1851. Mr. LANE. They had better be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The question was then taken on the motion to refer to the Committee on Territories, and it was agreed to.

Mr. GENTRY. A memorial has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs by mistake, as I am informed by the gentleman who introduced it to the House. The committee ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it may be referred to the Committee of Claims.

It was so ordered.

SENATE BILLS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. BROWN. There are a number of bills upon the Speaker's table from the Senate. Some of them have laid there for a long time; and with the approbation of the House, I ask that they may be taken up and referred to the appropriate committees.

Mr. STANLY. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I ask that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] will allow me to present a memorial from the Legislature of Tennessee, merely for the purpose of reference.

Mr. STANLY. I have no objection.

The memorial, which was in reference to the mails on the Ohio and Mississippi, was presented and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

NON-INTERVENTION.

Mr. RIDDLE, by unanimous consent, presented resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Delaware on the doctrine of intervention; which were laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I move to reconsider the vote taken yesterday, by which the special order, being the bill to encourage agriculture and for other purposes, was postponed until Tuesday next. I do it with a view that we may take up the motion when this deficiency shall have been disposed of.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. STANLY, and it was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. STUART in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The business before the committee is House bill No. 207, to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1852, the following clause of the bill being under consideration:

"For constructing, repairing, and enlarging barracks, quarters, hospitals, store-houses, stables, wharves, and ways, at the several posts and army depots, for temporary cantonments, and the authorized furniture for barracks-rooms of non-commissioned officers and soldiers, gun-houses for the protection of cannon, including the necessary tools and materials for the objects enumerated, and for rent of quarters, and offices for officers, and barracks and hospitals for troops, where there are no public buildings for their accommodation, for store-houses for the safe keeping of military stores, and of grounds for summer cantonments and encampments, $219,000."

The pending question is upon the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] to strike out, in the seventy-ninth line, the words "for rent."

The question was taken upon the amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move to strike out "$219,000," at the end of the above clause, and insert "$100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order at this time. The question may be taken upon the pending amendment, and then the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] will be in order.

The question was then taken upon the pending amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MARSHALL. I now make the motion to strike out $219,000 and insert $100,000. I observe that the debate upon this bill closed yesterday by a declaration of the honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, that I had called upon him previously, informing him that I intended to demand of him an explanation as to the manner in which the money had been expended which was appropriated last year. There is no inference from his remarks, except that he intends to excuse himself for not giving an intelligible account of the manner in which it was expended, on the ground that I did not publicly ask him for an explanation as to how it was spent. Now, if the gentleman expects to rest himself upon that justification before the country, after having had a chance, in an hour speech, to give an intelligible explanation, why, of course I cannot object to the character of the justification. Had I known that the gentleman did not possess the information, it will be seen that motives of common courtesy would have prevented me from making any public interrogation.

But the gentleman says he makes a sweeping charge against this Administration, of waste of public moneys, and that he calls the attention of the country to my remarks, as evidence to prove it. Now, sir, my remarks cannot be tortured into a charge of waste against the Administration. The army went into New Mexico in 1848, and under an order issued from the War Department, which gave to the local commanders the right to fix the posts, and he who was in command of any particular line, had the right to change the posts, and fix them for his own convenience. I know that this order was changed, and I suppose, and hope, after the exposition made in Captain Sword's report, that some system of economy has been attempted to be enforced. But I want to see how it is administered. I want to see how they progress. If there is any charge of waste made by me, it is made upon the face of the exhibits which came from the quartermaster general's office, and laid before us by the quartermaster's report. I do not understand, when I comment on the manner in which the assistant quartermasters have disposed of the funds left to that bureau, that I am attacking the Administration.

The Executive, it may be, is responsible, in the last resort, for the funds which pass through the Executive Department. But it cannot be expected, and it will not be expected, by the country, that the President is to superintend, personally, the current expenditures by subaltern officers. If we content ourselves with an attempt to visit the President with the responsibility of every abuse in every department of the Army, the Navy, and Indian affairs, we shall ourselves teach the employees of the bureaus that whenever a question of practical reform arises here, they may take shelter under the theoretical responsibility of the President, and will not be subjected to any severe scrutiny from Congress.

I shall say no more. It is our duty to look narrowly into the necessity for these appropriations—to see that no waste has occurred in the management of the appropriation for the current year. We appointed the Committee of Ways and Means to look into these things, and to report here upon the necessity of the appropriation. If the country sees any attack in my remark, it will see it only as touching those whose duty it is to look closely into the expenditure of this appropriation, and who come here without any accurate knowledge in regard to it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DUNHAM. I trust, sir, that this amendment will not be adopted. As to this particular item, I have taken some considerable pains myself to ascertain as to the propriety of the amount. The object of this item is, to provide barracks for your soldiers, and necessary buildings for the shelter and protection of your commissary and quartermasters—for your ordnance and ammunition stores. I will state, that the estimates for these matters, sent in by the commanders at the different posts, were most closely and rigorously examined, and they were in all cases reduced, so far as the quartermaster general could ascertain that the public service would warrant, such reduction. Now, sir, I must call the attention of the committee to another matter. I was asked yesterday by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] and, I believe, by another gentleman this morning, why it is we of the Committee of Ways and Means are not able to give more information as to the manner in which the money heretofore appropriated for the fiscal year has been expended? Why, it is clear, sir, that it would be impossible to give it in exact detail.

Now, as to the latest returns made from these different posts, I have had them in my possession ever since this discussion commenced. I have them here; and if I had had time, I should have laid before the committee a statement of the number of horses, and of the number of troops upon every post upon the frontier. Proper regulations are prescribed for the amount of forage of every horse; proper regulations are prescribed as to the quartermaster's stores to be issued to every soldier, and every issue made to or by the officers having charge of that department. All these expenses for the furnishing of these materials have been calculated; and you have only to place these expenses by the side of the money you have heretofore appropriated to provide for them, and then decide whether you have given money enough for the purpose? I believe, sir, that within the last six months there has been a most rigid and careful investigation as to the manner in which the posts upon the frontiers have been stationed, and every exertion has been made to remedy the abuses which have taken place on earlier occasions in that country; but this is quite a question of time—a thorough reform cannot be effected in a day, a week, or a month. Every endeavor is now being made to remedy them, and I believe with much success, too; and the War Department is entitled to credit for it.

Now, if gentlemen would examine the report of the Secretary of War, which has been laid upon their tables, in which he shows the necessity for these appropriations, they can ascertain what has become of the money heretofore appropriated, for the bill which we passed last year showed how much money was appropriated for every branch of the service; and if they examine the report of the Secretary of War, they will see exactly what money is left in the Treasury, for each particular branch of the service. I do not, sir, speak of the manner in which the money has been expended heretofore. I do not believe in the doctrine that if this money has been improperly expended, you are to punish the, in some instances, innocent officers, by striking them through the service of your country; but if you can put your finger upon any officer who has neglected his trust—has not performed his duties faithfully—you will of course hold him responsible, and you could easily make the proper charges against him directly, or compel his superior officer to do so. But this doctrine of holding all the officers in the service responsible for this deficiency is monstrous. I say, sir, that there is no difficulty in ascertaining what has become of the money: and my duty as a member of this Committee of Ways and Means has made me anxious to discharge the responsibility resting upon me to the country; and I have examined this report of these calculations carefully, to see what has become of this money, and it appears to me to be very clear that this money is now needed. The manner in which this estimate has been made is this: they know the number of horses upon the frontier, and what it costs at the time of the last reports to support each horse, and they know how much it takes to support each man; and they have made a calculation of how much your former appropriations fall short of furnishing the amount needed. I will state, sir, for the information of the committee, that, after this estimate was sent here to this House, and after further returns had come in to the quartermaster's department which showed that they had effected a reduction in the expense of furnishing supplies. The estimates were cut down over $150,000 for this branch of the service, and the quartermaster general has shown a worthy determination to reduce, so far as a faithful regard to the public service would permit.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I have some little recollection in reference to this matter. At the last session of Congress I moved an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, reducing the amount to $50,000. During the last Congress, this House had presented to it by the gentleman who made the estimates, and who asked of this House to grant supplies, estimates for the War Department of the sum of $11,000,000. Some ten or eleven years since $3,500,000 was all the money required for the purpose of supplying this army of defense, with all the requisite necessities. We had increased our frontier certainly when this had increased in such an astonishing manner. The House after a full, long, and tedious examination of the matter, determined to strike off three millions of the money asked for.

Mr. HOUSTON. The item for quarters and barracks is the item now under consideration, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I propose to confine my friend from Connecticut to the amendment which opened the debate upon that item.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I will confine myself to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama rises to a question of order. The Chairman is of opinion that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CLEVELAND] is not out of order, in the course of remark being pursued by him.

Mr. HOUSTON. The item is for quarters and barracks.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I am endeavoring, sir, to show this House what I consider to be the duty of the House in reference to the question now before them; but I am surprised that the learned and distinguished gentleman at the head of the Ways and Means Committee should have taken an exception to my remarks, as he was not a member of the last Congress.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to the debate.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that we gave notice to the War Department last year that we were not satisfied with the estimates; that we were not satisfied with the manner in which the public money was used, and squandered in support of our troops abroad. They have had a year's notice, in which time they could have prepared and furnished to this House full information of what they had every reason in the world to suppose would be required before the committee reported to the House a deficiency of some $2,000,000 or $3,000,000, or before the House of Representatives would ever grant that bill if it were asked by the committee.

Now, sir, I ask this House, and I ask the country, how are we called upon to act in this matter? They have done just what their friends feared last year they would do. They have gone on and spent our money regardless of the remonstrances and the reproaches which have fallen upon them ever since they have done so. I have listened, in the course of this debate, to the arguments of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, but I cannot help coming to the conclusion arrived at by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] that they have not given us a single opportunity to point to one single item in that enormous bill, and say what ought to be rejected by this House. Not one.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I intend to vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. CLEVELAND,] and against the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] in fact, against all the amendments proposing to reduce the appropriations in this bill, unless the Committee of Ways and Means shall inform us through their chairman that some deduction can be made; and, finally, sir, I intend to vote for the passage of this bill. I do not concur in the view taken by my friend from Ohio, [Mr. SWEETSER,] that because the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BROOKS,] and other friends of the Administration, think proper to tell us we are responsible for the appropriation, and that the Administration is not, therefore we should vote against this bill.

At the last session of Congress, sir, the War Department sent in its estimates, and this House took the responsibility of cutting them down, thus indicating to the Administration that the expenditure in that branch of the public service was to be confined within certain limits. For some reason, certainly not yet explained to Congress, or to the country, the expenditure has exceeded the appropriation. They now come and ask for an additional appropriation, telling us that it is necessary for the public service. The question, therefore, is not whether there has been a proper use made of the money already appropriated, but whether your soldiers and officers, who had nothing to do with the disbursement of this money, and who rendered service to the country, shall be paid for their services? Suppose that the Secretary of War should seize upon the whole of this appropriation, and squander it, could this Government refuse, therefore, to pay its soldiers? Is not the soldier entitled to $8 a month even if this money had been unjustly and inequally disposed of? Are they not entitled to their compensation? Is not the commander of your armies entitled to compensation? Are not our soldiers to be provided with clothing and shelter? These are the questions we are called upon to try? Is not the man who furnishes your armies with pork and beef, and clothing, entitled to his compensation? That is a question you are called upon to decide.

Now, as to this matter of responsibility, I am willing that the country shall dispose of it. Let the country decide whether the Administration shall confine the expenditures within the appropriations. The Administration come and ask us for this money; we are left no discretion. Gentlemen may talk of this matter as they will; gentlemen may vote against the bill, but there is not a member of Congress who will defeat it by his vote. No, sir; I believe that gentlemen would falter if it came to that. They would not leave your army serving upon the frontier; they would not leave their officers without pay; they would not punish the innocent for the acts of the guilty. My friend [Mr. ORR] is a gentleman of too high a sense of justice for that. I intend, sir, to vote for the appropriation; I intend to refer to my constituents and the country for settlement, the question whether this Administration has made a just and proper distribution of the money appropriated last session.

If it shall appear that the appropriation was too small the Administration will stand justified in demanding, and we shall be justified in voting, it. If the appropriation was sufficient, and the money has been wasted, we shall still be justified in voting for this bill. The country will not hold the parties faultless who squandered the money. They must account. But on the other hand, we shall not be held faultless if we withhold justice from the innocent. If this money has been squandered, let the guilty be punished; but do not withhold justice from the laborer because your own unfaithful pursuer has wasted your money.

The question was then taken upon the amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. PRICE. I propose now, sir, an additional amendment of $50,000. I am one of those, Mr. Chairman, who believe that our frontiers have not received the protection that they ought to have had during the last year; and therefore, sir, I advocate increasing this appropriation. I, myself, have been upon the frontiers within the last year; and, sir, I have witnessed the outrages committed by the Indians upon our borders, and have heard the complaints of our people who are crying aloud for protection. Sir, during this last year California has incurred an expense of nearly $1,000,000 for the protection of her own people, and keeping down Indian insurrections; and yet we are told here that we must diminish the appropriations, and curtail the line of operations of our army. What was the situation of the Executive of this country by the reduction of the appropriation for the last year? Was it for him to diminish the outposts upon our frontiers? Could he have done so at less expense than he has already incurred? No, sir; the movements of our troops by the withdrawal of them from the frontier, would have increased the expenditure of transportation and the quartermaster's department far beyond what has already been incurred. Such would have been the case; and it was for him to wait the action of this Congress, to know whether he is to be sustained, and whether these outposts are to be kept up. It would have been, sir, a sacrifice of life and property beyond the contemplation of this House, to have withdrawn the troops from our frontiers, and left our settlers to the merciless tomahawk of the savages.

Sir, the gradual increase of expenditures of the departments of the quartermaster, in my estimation, is very readily accounted for from the extent of our territory; from the extent of our line of frontier posts; from the extent of the inland transportation of provisions, which has grown from two cents a pound to sixteen cents a pound transportation since 1845; and it clearly appears to me, from the small investigation which I have been able to give this matter, that it is right and proper, and that the expenditure of this department is fully justified by the amount of service they have performed. Sir, so far as the quartermaster general is concerned, he is in no way responsible for the expenditure; and, sir, as he clearly shows to you by his report, the objects of the appropriation were not diminished—he, by the report to the Secretary of War, tells him that he cannot diminish his appropriation. Sir, it is for Congress to diminish the objects of the appropriation by diminishing the army which could not be sustained upon the frontiers as cheaply and as conveniently as it would be sustained in the old States; but it is much more necessary and beneficial to the nation upon the frontier than anywhere else. Therefore, sir, I justify the President and the Secretary of War, in the measures they have adopted, and the expenditures which they have incurred during the last year; and I hope and trust that this House will vote the appropriations now asked for, and I should like to see them go beyond it, for I believe that the frontiers require much greater protection than now is afforded to them.

Now, sir, what does General Jesup say? Here is his language. It is the language of an intelligent, experienced, and zealous officer, who made his estimate based upon the schedule given to him by the President of the United States and the Secretary of War.

In answer to the Committee of Ways and Means of this House at the last session, General Jesup says:

"I stated then, as I state now, that this estimate was made on 'a careful consideration of all the circumstances of the service, and a minute calculation of its wants.' That estimate was returned to me for reduction; but as the objects of expenditure over which I have no control remained the same, and as I knew every cent would be necessary, unless those objects were reduced, I could make no reduction; to have done so, would have been to deceive the Executive, Congress, and the country. Money cannot be saved by cutting estimates down, but the service may be embarrassed, and arrears caused by it; to save money, objects of expenditure must be dispensed with."

Mr. CLEVELAND. I am opposed to this amendment, and now wish to conclude what I was about saying when the hammer fell before. I want to call the attention of the committee to this one fact. The Administration had a year's notice; they were called upon to inform the Committee of Ways and Means in regard to the necessity for this amount of expenditure, and I ask whether they have done it? If they have, it would be the committee's duty to come in and say to the House that all of this appropriation is necessary. If they would state that, there is not a member upon this floor who would not be willing to make the grant—whether one million or ten millions.

Mr. GENTRY. Do not the committee say that it is necessary, by reporting the bill, and recommending it?

Mr. CLEVELAND. I understand the chairman to state distinctly, that there has been gross profligacy in the conduct of the Department, and he charged it upon the President and the Secretary of War. If I misunderstood him, there were others who misunderstood him in the same way.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman wants it, I will repeat what I did say—

Mr. GENTRY. I will say, if the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means said that which the gentleman has just stated, that he cannot maintain it, or make it good.

Mr. CLEVELAND. All I have to add is this: They had a year's notice that this branch of Congress would require of them reasons for this extravagant expenditure of money; and when they were called upon by our committee to give reasons, they were unable to do so, and yet demanded the appropriation of this extraordinary sum of money. That committee came in here, and, through their chairman, say that we feel constrained to report the wants of the Government; but we tell you, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, that, in our judgment, both the Secretary of War and the President are guilty of misconduct in regard to the expenditure of money that has been appropriated. Now, with the time they have had to inform the committee; with this declaration made by the committee; and, permit me to say, with the disposition which is perfectly apparent upon the part of the committee to treat the Administration with the utmost fairness, it does seem to me that they have been guilty of great neglect in not informing that committee of the necessity for the appropriation which they ask at our hands. The claim which is set up here by certain gentlemen—that is, for the President to take the responsibility—an intimation which fell from my worthy friend the Chairman of Ways and Means [Mr. HOUSTON] on yesterday, and that they would not have this large sum of money go over upon another Administration, I do not think was worthy of the gentleman, and I do not think that it ought to influence the members of this committee. We have statements here that our frontier is exposed; that savages are barbarously scalping and tomahawking women and children. If we have a system of plunder of the public Treasury growing up in that Department, shall we not pause and try to arrest it, for fear that those cries which have been gotten up for effect may operate against one party, or in favor of another party. I say, we are unworthy of seats upon this floor if we do not, under almost any circumstances, endeavor to put a stop to corruption. It is our duty to settle whether the appropriations are just and right. I contend that the House of Representatives yet holds the purse-strings; and when they let them go, for any consideration—whether political, party, or otherwise—the people ought to turn them out and put others in their places; put in men who would dare to stand up here and act upon the principle of right, regardless of consequences, political or otherwise.

I understand that the only matter we are trying is, as to which party is to be injured the most by the course we are to pursue, in regard to voting the enormous deficiencies proposed in the bill. If this money is needed, I shall cast my vote for the granting of it; if it is not needed, I will go against it, and let the consequences take care of themselves. I do not care whether the whole army is disbanded. Better have it disbanded than have a system of favoritism growing up here—a system of fraud and speculation practiced, by which a ton of hay is put down as costing $50, less being paid by the officer, the change pocketed, and the Government cheated out of the money; better that it should be disbanded, than such a system of abuse should grow up under the patronage of the House of Representatives; for we have this matter all before us, and I admire the patriotism of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] who stands up here and says that, in the matter of protecting the Treasury of the country, that he knows no party. He is an honorable man, and that was an honorable and patriotic sentiment. It will do honor to him long after he shall have left this Hall. We ought all so to act. Above all things, let us learn the President and the Secretaries that we hold the purse strings, and that they should not have the control of the purse as well as the sword.

The amendment to the amendment was then rejected.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand the motion made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr.

MARSHALL is, to strike out $219,000, and to insert $100,000. I wish to amend by striking out the whole sum. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BROWN] has remarked to the committee, that we should not withhold the pay of the soldier.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman that his amendment is not in order, inasmuch as it disposes of the whole clause.

Mr. GORMAN. I move to reduce the amount to five dollars. That is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. GORMAN. I said that the gentleman from Mississippi assumed that we were striking at the pay of the soldier. The pay of the soldier is provided for in the army appropriation bill—for the pay of the army proper; but if he had gone a little further and inquired why it is that in 1844 each soldier cost this Government $404, and in 1852, $1,000, I should like to hear the reason for that. Sir, gentlemen upon this floor imagine that we must take the ipse dixit of the Committee of Ways and Means; that we must take the estimates of the Departments. I deny it as a principle. I insist that the representative branch of the Government has the right to control the expenses whenever they please. They have the same rights of information that the Committee of Ways and Means have. A gentleman who is not posted up on the subject is not fully within the line of his duty. I undertake to say that the quartermaster's department has increased the expenditures nearly fifteen times as much as it was five years ago. Why is it? I confess, sir, that there is a large increase on account of the extent of our territory; but what is the principle reason? The Secretary of War informs this House that large abuses have crept into the quartermaster's department. Officers are sent forward in the country to buy horses, who are in partnership and acting with the vender. They make millions of dollars. Where is the pruning knife? With the department. The men at these posts, they say to themselves, have strong friends—Senators and Representatives—to plead their cause, and they are retained. Who is responsible? I care not who is responsible. It is a wrong, and I should be derelict to my duty if I were to stand here and be particeps criminis to the wrong. We curtailed at the last session of Congress these appropriations nearly $2,500,000. What have they done? They have come up to that $2,500,000, and are here asking us to supply a deficiency of $3,000,000. Why is that? Is your army increased? Are your provisions increased in price? Not at all. It is because men—one man of whom I can name—are in partnership with the purchasers and stipulate to the amount of $120,000. He is in partnership with the purchaser, who pays three times the value of the property. The Government has dismissed him. He has made an independent fortune, and is living upon his means in Oregon.

Several MEMBERS. Who is he?

Mr. GORMAN. I shall certainly not name him here. I will name him to any gentleman who may call upon me for that purpose. I am responsible for what I say in relation to this matter. What does the Secretary of War mean when he says that these abuses have crept into the Department? He means something or he means nothing. What, then, is it our duty to do? To take the estimates of the quartermaster's department and pass upon them or upon some of the officers or persons who live upon the Government pay? I deny it as a principle. I insist that it is our duty to curtail when, from the information obtained, our judgment dictates that course. Why these expenditures are almost one third larger than they were during the Mexican war—a foreign war. I see, in the quartermaster's department there were eight hundred and fifty wagons transporting supplies from San Antonio, and a corresponding number of mules. They must have had a wagon for each officer and soldier. I do not know how long it took to transport them. There was a regiment about Texas and Santa Fe, and eight hundred and fifty wagons to transport supplies. Did the Committee of Ways and Means undertake to investigate the whys and wherefores of that item? I undertake to say here, in the presence of the chairman, that they have not. They have reported it to the House, and have not investigated whether it was right or wrong.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, the only object which I have in view, and which will influence me in voting for these appropriations, is to ascertain, as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CLEVELAND] remarked, whether they are just and right. Now, how am I to ascertain that? It is impossible for the two hundred and thirty different gentlemen composing this committee to investigate particularly every item submitted to us from the War Department by the Secretary of War. The best light we have is the investigation which a committee of this House gives to the subject, appointed by the Speaker, elected by a large majority, and in whom we confide; and when they come in here, a committee composed, I believe of six gentlemen of the Democratic party and three Whigs, with the estimates from the War Department—estimates submitted, I believe, by a Democratic quartermaster general, about whom I know little—how am I to be controlled? How is my judgment to be made up? I believe these appropriations are necessary, generally, to carry on the public business, and to carry on the Government. I look at the reports from your Departments, I hear the explanations of your committee, I ascertain from the most experienced in the public service, that these appropriations are necessary, and then I deem it my duty to vote supplies. Now, while I am up I wish to say to my friend and colleague [Mr. OLDS] over the way, who said that there was a time in this House when one party withheld supplies—I am happy to say to him and the country that, in the five years I have been in service here, I have never known such a party, and never hope to know such a party. I have voted the necessary supplies to the Government—to the military and the naval service of the country—and I shall continue to do so from the best lights I can get to guide my judgment.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, great reforms are necessary in regard to our war and naval establishment. I believe that if some of the gentlemen who hold positions in the bureaus under the Secretaries of War and Navy, who are professional men, sympathizing with their corps, were sent off on public duties, and eminent citizens, capable of looking into the expenditures, were put in their stead, we should have a reduction of the enormous appropriations made from year to year. I would place at the head of the quartermaster's bureau an eminent civilian, capable of investigating the necessity for these supplies, and reporting to Congress how much was necessary. I would have him ascertain by intelligent communication with the officers of the army and others all over the country. These reforms are needed, but it is impossible for a member serving two or three years to undertake them. The Whigs, as charged by my colleague [Mr. OLDS] the other day, never withheld supplies when they were in a majority in this House. During the last two years of Mr. Polk's administration the Whigs had a majority here. My colleague then, Mr. Vinton, as chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, did himself honor in the national, enlarged, sensible, and intelligent manner in which he voted and reported supplies necessary to extricate ourselves from the war with Mexico and to carry on the war. I was informed by the then Secretary of the Treasury—Mr. Walker—that a more faithful man in that position never served in this House, and that he never asked for a reasonable appropriation that was not promptly granted and promptly explained, and passed by the House, though they were against the then Administration. That is the spirit in which we must act here, no matter who is President, who administers the Departments here. We are acting for the country—for the whole country; and while we see that these appropriations are not extravagant, we are bound to vote the necessary supplies to carry on the Government.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. GENTRY. I move to increase the item of appropriation five dollars. The Committee of Ways and Means seems to be very much reproached here, because it does not exhibit the state of facts which demonstrates to the House the necessity of passing this bill. That it is a duty which that committee is doubtless competent to perform. My honorable friend from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] propounds a question, which he says ought to have been explained by the Committee of Ways and Means. He desires the extraordinary fact explained, that whereas the cost of our army in 1844-'5, per man, was so much, it now amounts to a much larger sum. And no man that is responsible seems to assume, that it can be accounted for otherwise than by attributing corruption and profligacy to the Executive officers of the Government. I have not considered it my duty particularly to take this matter in charge and show the reasons upon which it rests.

Mr. GORMAN. I did not say Executive officers.

Mr. GENTRY. I presume his remarks were addressed generally. I did not make that remark so much in reply to him as to others, who have arraigned the Secretary of War upon the one hand and the other. I take it for granted, that many of the gentlemen who have addressed the House, have not read his report. He does account for and explain in it, not in every item, and even where he fails to explain the items of abuses which have crept into the army, yet he admits that there are abuses. Did they occur but yesterday? Have they not existed for years? And when shall we hope to see the day that some abuses of this kind will not exist in every branch of the Government, where expenditures are to be made. Did they not exist in Mexico during the last war? How many defaulters there are who have not settled their accounts with the quartermaster's and paymaster's departments? Here is the Secretary of War's account of this matter of expenditure:

"In my last annual report, I adverted to the enormous increase in the expense of supporting the army, and to the causes that produced it. These causes are principally—

"1st. That, as has been already stated, more than one half of the whole army is stationed on our remote frontier, and so far as expenses are concerned, may be considered as in active service in time of war.

"2d. That the military posts on the frontier were formerly on or near navigable rivers, but now, on the contrary, are either far in the interior of the country or on the Pacific, and, consequently, can only be reached by an overland journey of hundreds of miles, or by a sea voyage of several thousand.

"The following is a list of what were our most remote posts in 1845, and their respective distances from navigation—

Fort Snelling, accessible by steam-boats.
Fort Leavenworth, accessible by steam-boats.
Fort Wilkins, accessible by steam-boats.
Fort Gibson, accessible by steam-boats.
Fort Smith, accessible by steam-boats.
Fort Jesup, 24 miles from steam-boat navigation, by wagons.
Fort Atkins, 24 miles from steam-boat navigation, by wagons.
Fort Towson, 6 miles from steam-boat navigation, by wagons.
Fort Washita, 85 miles from steam-boat navigation, by wagons.
Fort Scott, 90 miles from steam-boat navigation, by wagons.
"Compare this list with that of some of the most remote posts at the present time.
"Indianola, now the depot for the greater part of the posts in Texas, and some of those in New Mexico, is 540 miles by water, from New Orleans. From this depot it is, by wagons,

To Fort Worth.....420 miles.
To El Paso.....803 "
To Dona Ana.....659 "
To the post at the Copper Mines.....979 "
"Fort Towson and Fort Smith, both depending upon New Orleans, are the frontier depots for the posts on the north line of Texas; the transportation by wagons is, from Fort Towson to Fort Belknap, 302 miles; from Fort Smith to Fort Arbuckle, 167 miles.
"Fort Leavenworth, 420 miles from St. Louis, by water, is the frontier depot for the posts on the Santa Fe and Oregon routes. Thence it is, by wagons,

To Fort Laramie.....637 miles.
To Fort Union.....728 "
To Santa Fe.....821 "
To Socorro.....981 "
To San Juan.....1,048 "
"From St. Louis to Fort Snelling, by water, is 725 miles, and thence to Fort Ripley, by wagons, 125 miles.

"From St. Louis to Keokuck, by water, 179 miles, and thence to Fort Dodge, by wagons, 280 miles.

"A large portion of the supplies for the posts on the Pacific are drawn from the Atlantic States.
"3d. The frontier posts, as may be seen by the foregoing list, were then situated in the midst of a fertile and productive country, where nearly all the supplies for the troops could be procured. Now, on the contrary, they are, for the most part, in one of the most unproductive regions in the world, which furnishes but a small portion of the necessary supplies for an army. Those supplies must, therefore, all be drawn from the older States and transported immense distances. The consequence is that, while in 1845 the cost of transportation (of troops and supplies) was $130,053 52, of transportation (of troops and supplies) was $2,094,408 51. In the former in 1850-'51 it amounted to $2,094,408 51. In the latter it was $1,267,327 91. The great increase in this last item arises not only from the causes just mentioned, but also from the great increase of animals in the quartermaster's department, which in 1845 amounted only to eight hundred and forty-seven, and in 1850-'51 to upwards of eight thousand; and also to the fact that the mounted force has been greatly increased.

"4th. The great distance which troops have now to be transported in going to and from the several posts.

"This is a very important item. Owing to the smallness of our army, changes of station are very frequent, and instead of being made, as they formerly were, by water, they are now made by land. When it is recollected what a vast amount of transportation is necessary for an army on a long march, when not only their baggage, but supplies of every kind (including provision for their daily consumption) must be carried with them, some idea may be formed of the expense attending these changes of station. The above facts will serve, in some degree, to explain the great increase that has taken place in the expenditures of that department. For fuller explanations on this subject, I refer to the accompanying report of the quartermaster general.

"It is probable, however, that in some instances, the expenditures both of the quartermaster's and the commissary departments may have been increased by mal-administration. The transactions of both these departments involves such a variety of details, and their agents are so far removed from the supervision of their chiefs, that abuses may exist a long time before they are discovered. Every effort, however, has been used to detect these abuses, and to prevent their recurrence. Inspections have been sent to the frontiers to inquire into the manner in which the affairs of these departments are administered, and a rigid scrutiny into accounts has been ordered. I regret to say that the department has some reasons to fear that its apprehensions on this subject were not altogether without foundation.

"From statements carefully prepared by the different bureaus of this department, it appears that the increased expenditures in the army, resulting from our newly-acquired territory (including Texas) amounted to $4,556,709 75.

"Congress, at their last session, omitted to provide for a deficiency which was ascertained to exist in the appropriations for the quartermaster's department for the year ending 30th June last. Serious embarrassments would have resulted to the service from this omission, had there not existed some unexpended balances of former appropriations, which, under the act of August 26, 1842, were transferred to the quartermaster's department. Congress also reduced all the items of appropriations but one, for the same department, for the current fiscal year ending 30th June next, fifty per cent. below the estimates; the consequence of which is, that the appropriations for that department are entirely inadequate to its wants, and that Congress will be called upon, at an early period, to supply the deficiency.

"Congress having clearly manifested a determination to reduce, as far as possible, the expenditures of the army, I felt it my duty, as far as was practicable, to carry their views into effect. I have accordingly labored to reform abuses, to enforce rigidly all regulations looking to economy, and to retrench every unnecessary expense."

But it is in the item of transportation, as every man knows, who has paid any attention to this subject, from which this large increase of expenditure occurs. Now, is the Secretary of War and the President responsible for the conquest of New Mexico, California, and Oregon? Do you expect to make this vast addition to your empire, and perform the duties which you have engaged to perform in giving protection to the people there from the savage tribes that inhabit those Territories, and execute your treaty stipulations with New Mexico, by preventing the savage tribes from making incursions into their territory, without an addition to the annual expenditures in the military service?

Mr. SWEETSER. It will be recollected by gentlemen who served in the last Congress, that when the civil and diplomatic bill was under consideration before this House, a large item, amounting to about $2,500,000 was stricken down, after a full and fair discussion of the question in the House, and that they claimed that something had been gained by the manner in which they had disposed of that bill. It will be remembered, that the distinguished gentlemen, who took a part in that discussion, and more particularly the honorable gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. BURN], at the head of the Military Committee, then avowed to the House and country, that there were abuses in the quartermaster's department of the army, which required not only the action of the House then, but at a subsequent session of Congress. That promise was made, not only to the Administration, but pledged to the country, that the time had come when the representatives of the people would clamor at these abuses; and in order to redeem that pledge, we find the Committee of Ways and Means of the present House of Representatives bringing forward a deficiency bill, which sanctions what we condemned by our act in the last Congress—sanctioning the very expenditures which were then stricken out in the civil and diplomatic bill, by adding $500,000 to the aggregate amount. At this session we find the present Committee of Ways and Means coming forward and asking this House of Representatives to appropriate $3,000,000 by way of a deficiency bill, not only to sanction the extravagance of the various departments of the General Government but to sanction their contracts, made without authority of law, if not in open violation of law, when the House had given notice, that they were to remedy these abuses. This question overrides all party considerations. It is a question amounting simply to this: whether, under the forms of making appropriations as the representatives of the people here, we are compelled or called upon to surrender those functions placed in our hands by the Constitution and the laws of the country, to the Executive Department of the Government, and admit that in our action hitherto, in relation to these matters, that they have been justified in expending this money without any authority of law, and indeed in violation of law? There is no party question in this, and all this attempt to shirk responsibility and fix it upon this or that branch of the Government, in my judgment, amounts to nothing. There should be a responsibility somewhere; and if properly left to the House of Representatives by the Constitution and law to determine by their action in voting supplies, it is their duty to see that the appropriations estimated for by the Executive branch of the Government are legitimate subjects for a deficiency bill. It is not for us to hunt up the delinquent officers. The frauds upon the Treasury being admitted, as is the case in this debate, the Executive branch of the Government are bound in the honest discharge of public duty to see where the fault lies, and to apply the necessary remedy. But as one of the representatives of the people, I care not where it lies. It shall be fixed somewhere; and let the friends of the Administration take what course they please in reference to the defense of the Administration; I am entitled to withhold my vote from the sanction of any measure which seems to be so entirely subversive of the independence of the House of Representatives. We hold the purse-strings of the nation, and we might as well go forward and formally surrender them up as pass this deficiency bill. As I have said before, we sanction the course pursued by the Administration directly in the face of votes at the last Congress. I am not prepared to make the surrender, as far as I am concerned. I am not prepared to surrender that power which the Constitution has placed in our hands, and I do not regard this measure as being necessary in order to sustain the soldier. This quartermaster's department is a department complained of even by officers of the army, and I have now in my possession letters from New Mexico, Texas, and the Western frontier, that condemn the course pursued by that department. If I were to read some of these letters, they would probably disturb the minds of the Administration.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. ORR. I move to reduce the appropriation three dollars. The gentleman from Indiana, who sits near me on my left, [Mr. DUNHAM], indicated very strongly in the speech he made a few moments ago, that you will not strike at public officers through the public service. I cannot perceive any very efficient way of striking at them otherwise than in this particular manner. The Committee of Ways and Means in this House have investigated the matter, and what is their report? The chairman of the committee says one description of officers is responsible; the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks], a member of the committee, says General Jesup is responsible; and, I suppose, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] would devolve the responsibility upon still another class of officers. What, then, is to be left for the House to do, except to charge the responsibility either directly upon the President, or upon the Secretary of War? How else are you to reach them, if the President and Secretary do not apply the corrective? I think I suggested the only way in which that corrective can be applied, and that is, to refuse to vote for the appropriations until the House have an earnest from the President that, in future, the public funds shall not be squandered; and that hereafter the appropriations made by Congress shall not be exceeded. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means tells you that there are abuses. It is said upon all hands that there are abuses. Let me inquire of you, How is the corrective applied? Those abuses were known to exist two years ago; but what progress has the President or Secretary of War made in correcting them? If you go on making the appropriations they call for, or if you refuse to make the appropriations pursuant to their estimates, but afterwards vote deficiency bills to supply the original amount of estimates, there never will be a corrective applied. What is the character of these abuses? My friend from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY] says the reason why the expenses in the quartermaster's department have been increased so much within the last two years is on account of transportation. I grant to him that is one very material item of the increase, but there are other items. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, in his speech yesterday, furnishes a table showing that $100 per month is paid for the quarters of one or two officers. In other instances, $81 per month. Here is a sum of $100 per month for quarters for three officers, stationed at Santa Fe, making, in the aggregate, $1,200 a year paid by way of rent.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, it has been assumed here, upon all hands, that there are gross abuses existing in the administration of the Executive Department, or in the quartermaster's department, reaching to some material amount in this bill. I deny it. I am not able to go into the whole matter in a five minutes speech, but I am ready to meet any man who asserts it, hereafter, upon the floor of this House, and I wish him to bring his proof.

Sir, the officers of the army are not dishonest scoundrels, who would plunder the public Treasury, as has been asserted here. They are honorable, high-minded gentlemen, who are under oath to perform the duties which have been committed to them.

Why talk about responsibility? whether it is with this side of the House or with the other side of the House? or with the Administration? Sir, it is with neither. It is with that Executive and those Congresses that brought about the annexation of Texas, the Mexican war, and the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. You expect to buy a whistle and not pay the price for it. You annex Texas and get possession of Oregon, California, and New Mexico, and expect to pay nothing for it. Sir, every dollar of this expense was necessary, and has been justly incurred. It makes no difference to the Administration whether you vote it or not.

Now, as to the responsibility. Some gentlemen blame General Jesup. He does not belong to the Whig party. I do not know him. I never spoke to him in my life. But I desire to exonerate him, and to say that, so far as this expense arises from continuing the army on the frontier for the protection of the country, the Administration is responsible for it. Those gentlemen, therefore, who are attacking the quartermaster's department, may reserve their attacks for the Administration.

Now, what are the facts of the case? Congress, at its last session, cut down the estimates for this service one half. The gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL], with all his knowledge concerning military affairs, cannot justify that. It is beyond the power of his genius or talents to do it. Nobody can justify it. They struck in the dark, without information, and cut down the estimates one half. They were informed at the time by the War Department, that the way to effect a reduction of the expenses, was to decrease the army, but they refused to do it. I offered an amendment here, that in case the money appropriated was found insufficient, that then the President might withdraw the army on the frontier, but the House voted it down. Mr. Schenck, then a Representative from the State of Ohio, and now Minister to Brazil, offered a similar amendment, and it, too, was voted down by the gentleman from Kentucky and those who acted with him. They refused to withdraw the army or to reduce the number of troops, but they did reduce the appropriation, and that, too, in the face of a letter from the Department, telling them that the only way in which the expenses could be decreased, was by a reduction of the army. Nay, more, sir; they increased every company and mounted two regiments of infantry.

Sir, we are now in a state of war; and that, too, thousands of miles from the interior of the country. When Napoleon invaded Russia, his supplies had not so far to go to the scene of operations as our's now have. Our troops, instead of shouldering the musket, are now shouldering the spade, and cultivating potatoes and corn. At the post at Fort Leavenworth last year, they made a profit of $6,000 over and above the necessary expenses. Whilst our troops are thus engaged in the small, paltry, and pitiful work of trying to support themselves, gentlemen come here and talk of extravagance. Sir, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I challenge these gentlemen—not in a five-minutes' speech, but hereafter in Committee of the Whole—to place their fingers on an instance of extravagance. I can show that their own Administration—Mr. Polk's administration—expended more, in an unauthorized way, in the quartermaster's department, than has ever been expended by this Administration.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] says that the President ought to dismiss the Secretary of War and all the heads of bureaus, because, forsooth, the army costs more than was appropriated for it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. VENABLE submitted a pro forma amendment, and said: I rise simply to say what I think is due to myself, to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and to the country. I wish to make an explanation in reference to the vote which I gave upon this subject during the last session of Congress. I then voted for reducing the estimates one half, whilst we were warned at the time that if we made that reduction we would have to pass a deficiency bill. I find, sir, that I erred in voting to reduce those estimates one half. We required the Administration to raise new regiments, and to place them on the frontier for the purpose of executing the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, by protecting the Mexicans from the inroads of the Indians. If we withhold the means of support, we require them to send our troops to the frontiers, and expose them to danger without arms, equipments, bread, or provisions.

Sir, I take this occasion to say that I regret the vote I then gave. We cut down the estimate exactly one half. We were warned at the time, that we would have to pass a deficiency bill. Sir, I decline to make allusion to party tactics on a question of this sort. It ought not to be a party question whether the gallant soldiers shall be clothed, and fed, and our frontiers protected from the inroads of savages, and it never shall be with me. I will not suggest an unkind insinuation against the integrity of such men as Persifer F. Smith, and Hitchcock, and Sumner. I am proud of the army of the United States, and of the high integrity and gallant bearing of the officers who command it. A man like General Jesup, whose valor and honor are recorded on every page of the history of our country for the last thirty years, is not to be denounced for supporting and sustaining troops raised under our own laws, and by our own orders. It ought not to be made a party question. The question is whether we shall not clothe and feed men that we have enlisted, and sent to our frontiers for the purpose of protecting our frontiers? Whether we shall stand up to our treaty obligations with Mexico, or suffer these troops that we have sent out there to be sacrificed and to perish?

I shall sustain my friend at the head of the Committee of Ways and Means. I have before me the estimates which were cut down last year, and the communication of the Secretary in which he states specifically the amounts necessary.

The transportation of stores and equipments across trackless deserts, far from civilization and its comforts, amidst the dangers arising from scarcity of water and the assaults of savages, must be necessarily expensive. But we placed the troops there by our own laws—our treaty obligations to defend the frontiers of Mexico from the inroads of the hostile tribes which infest them, required that they should be there. We cannot shrink from the expenses of sustaining them. Let it be remembered that we, by law of the last session, increased the companies from forty-four to seventy-four men, and raised a regiment of mounted men without a correspondent increase of the means of support; and whilst I would most promptly hold the Administration responsible for all its faults and failures, I am not disposed to make an attack where the defense is so obvious, and completely in the hands of those I would assail. At least I am not inclined to select gallant soldiers, far from home, and surrounded by perils, as the subject of my experiment in a party conflict. I will not curtail their rations, or diminish their comforts to present an issue of mal-administration before the country.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have taken but little part in the discussion touching the deficiency estimates for the quartermaster's department. The gentleman from North Carolina, who has just taken his seat, says that we must support and feed the army. Sir, these estimates are not for that purpose. The commissary general of subsistence submitted his estimates at the last session of Congress, and doing so, he made his estimate for every man that the law authorized to be in the army, and some two or three hundred more than were actually in service. He estimated each man's rations to cost twenty cents, and, as he himself says, this covers the increased cost of contracts to have the rations delivered in the new countries. Yes, sir, and what is the fact concerning all this noise about protecting the women and children on this frontier. I have here the report of the Adjutant General, by which he shows that there are over two thousand troops in the military district of Texas. We have also a report from one of the assistant quartermasters there, who says that he has collected information under the instructions of the quartermaster general, and that it is believed there has been a great mistake as to the number of the Indians on that frontier. He says that if the reports of those who have been entrusted with this duty are to be relied upon, all the Indians of every tribe, age, and sex visiting that military district do not exceed the number of four thousand persons. That fact has been reported to us.

Now, sir, I say that when, at the last session, Congress had appropriated to this quartermaster's department nearly two million four hundred thousand dollars, they should have so conducted themselves as to have kept the expenditures of the department within the appropriation given to them. They ought not to have ordered the army about from place to place, incurred liabilities, and then come here to tell you that the faith and honor of the Government are pledged. I say that none of them, from the President down to the Assistant Quartermaster, have a right to contract liabilities and bind this Government to foot up their bills. They should have stopped the army and let the responsibility for the ills resulting to the country come where it ought to be—here—upon the representatives of the people. I, for one, would be willing to take it.

Sir, if gentlemen think that there are none here who would vote against this bill, if their votes could reject it, let them so count noses and bring it to the test, and I have the control of one vote that will defeat it if it comes to that.

The question was then taken on Mr. VENABLE's amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move to reduce the amount to $94.

I merely wish to correct an error, into which the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS,] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VENABLE] seem to have fallen in respect to the action of the Committee of Ways and Means during the last session of Congress. The gentleman from Maryland says, and the gentleman from North Carolina repeats his statement, that although the army was increased largely, yet that we reduced the appropriation for its support. He seemed to imply that the basis of our reduction was the estimates sent in before the increase in the army was made. Such, however, was not the case. After Congress had increased the army, the Committee of Ways and Means called upon the War Department to reform these estimates to conform with this increase; and these estimates were accordingly increased upwards of $1,500,000—I do not recollect the precise amount. It was upon the basis of these increased estimates, made necessary by this augmentation of the army, that our reduction was made. It was not, as those gentlemen seem to imply, upon the original estimates sent in, to provide for the army upon its old organization, but upon its new.

Mr. GENTRY. I have just a word or two to say. It seems to be assumed in this debate, that the fact of Congress having reduced the estimates for the military service of the country, during the last session, created an imperative obligation upon the part of the executive branch of the Government, to so arrange matters as not to be under the necessity of asking an appropriation for the supply of deficiencies such as we have now before us. It is assumed by some, that to come here under such circumstances is a very great insult or indignity to this House—that it is exceeding the powers recognized as existing in the Executive, if it is not absolute usurpation. Now, it is most remarkable that any gentleman should entertain such a thought as that upon this floor. I do not remember a single session of Congress, for the last six or eight years—if there has been one I have forgotten it—that such deficiencies have not been created. This has especially been so since the fiscal year was changed by law.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask my colleague if he can specify one single case since the year 1844, when the fiscal year was changed, in which a deficiency like this has been created where Congress had cut down their estimates—had positively refused to grant them in full?

Mr. GENTRY. I do not remember a case so precisely analogous, but I do not perceive that the principle is changed in the slightest degree. What did Congress mean by cutting down those estimates at the last session? Why, those gentlemen who were the most prominent in inducing that result, affirmed that they were taking a leap into the dark. These estimates seemed enormous, and they thought reform ought to be introduced somewhere, and that it was the duty of Congress to use every exertion in its power to correct abuses and to introduce reforms, and they concluded to commence with this Department of the Government. But you did not authorize the Executive to withdraw your army in New Mexico. Yet he could not do it without the authority of Congress; and Congress could not withdraw that army, placed there to carry out the treaty stipulations with Mexico, without a breach of faith, and without covering itself with dishonor and infamy. You called upon the Executive to correct those abuses, and to introduce reforms; and he has made an effort to do so. Your gallant army has been made to raise potatoes and cultivate corn-fields, instead of engaging in those military pursuits more adapted to their tastes. Then, who are the leaders of your army? Who is Persifer F. Smith? Who is General Jesup? Both of them Democrats? I am ashamed to mention such a fact in discussion; but there is not a man in the army, who, for honor, chivalry, and military skill, stands higher than Persifer Smith. I am proud to bear such testimony to his character. Who are Hitchcock and Sumner, commanders in New Mexico and Texas? Is it from their supervision that such abuses exist? Do you assume that these men are scoundrels, and engaged in the base work of trying to swindle their Government out of its money? Are the whole Army of the United States and its officers who have borne their country's flag with glory everywhere, and than which no nation ever boasted such high metal, the scoundrels? Is that the return you give them for their noble and glorious deeds? And do you intend to withhold from the appropriations necessary to furnish them with supplies? Do you intend to repudiate your obligations to protect the territory you have acquired? Aye, gentlemen, there lies the rub. You want to shrink from the consequences of your own policy. You cannot add more territory without more expense, and great expense. You cannot reduce your expenditures for your army while you continue to extend your territory, for this increase of expenditure has been brought upon us by the increase of your territory.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken upon the amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I move to strike out the whole appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that that amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. CABELL. Then I propose to reduce the amount to five dollars.

I do not propose at this time to make a five minutes speech. I arise for the purpose of information, and I deem it entirely irrelevant to discuss the question of the abuses that exist in the army of the United States upon our frontier. We all know that abuses exist, and must continue to exist, in every department of the Government, and for which the Administration is not responsible.

Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a misunderstanding in regard to the character of this deficiency. It has been stated and asserted positively, that the deficiency for which we are now asked to make an appropriation, is for debts already contracted by this Government. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLDS] said, in his speech yesterday, that "the Secretary of War, in defiance of the manifest determination of Congress, the law-making power of the people, not only expended that $1,500,000 refused him by the last Congress, but $2,500,000 more than the sum allowed him; and he comes forward now to ask of this Congress to give him this $2,500,000, and $1,000,000 more, under the pretext of deficiency, the gentleman from New York, at the same time telling us that the responsibility is not with the President, but with Congress;" and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] says the Secretary of War had gone on and expended the money that Congress had refused him. Again, the gentleman from Tennessee, who addressed the House a little while ago, says that this money is asked for to meet the contracts already made by the Secretary of War, in defiance of the manifest will of Congress. Now, sir, I cannot believe this is true; if it had been true, I cannot believe the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means would have introduced here a bill making this appropriation. If these officers have violated the law, they should be held to a strict accountability. But when gentlemen make these charges, it is essential that there should be an explanation. For if they are true, I will not vote for the appropriation without holding the parties responsible. And that I understand to be materially the position of my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL.]

Now, I have seen this impression made upon the minds of many gentlemen by these statements; but I have been informed by a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, sitting near me, [Mr. BROOKS,] that, so far from this being the case, that not one contract has been made, not one single liability has been incurred. The Secretary of War has expressly stated that no drafts were to be drawn upon the Government; that no debt is now due by that department. I ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, or some member of that committee, to state how that is. I appeal to the gentleman who sits near me [Mr. BROOKS] to give some light upon the matter.

Mr. BROOKS. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Florida. [Mr. CABELL.] My only object in doing it is to answer the gentleman's interrogatory.

The Executive—and I said the same thing in my remarks the other day—has not spent one cent beyond what Congress has appropriated, and he cannot spend one cent beyond that. Congress during the last session cut down the estimates the enormous sum of $2,315,000. Never before was there such a cutting and slashing without reason, or rhyme even. The quartermaster general now asks Congress to supply what was then cut down, to the amount of $2,065,000. This, however, the Committee of Ways and Means do not give him, for they have again cut him down to less than $2,000,000.

When this cutting and slashing took place the last session, it attracted my attention. As a friend of the Executive I went to him, and said to him that I thought it was for him to see if it was not his duty under the action of Congress, to recall the army from the distant frontiers, and to bring it home to cheaper posts of subsistence, such as could be found perhaps in Connecticut, Ohio or Kentucky, or wherever it could subsist the cheapest, and where no transportation would be necessary. He replied that he had yet some surpluses—some war contributions, some other available means from various legitimate sources, and that it was his duty to exhaust them first; that Congress was again to meet in December; that he would restate all the facts to Congress, and ask that body for the usual necessary appropriations; but if they refused, it would then become his duty to withdraw every soldier from Oregon, California, New Mexico, and Texas, and subsist them in the cheapest portions of the country. As long as the appropriations of Congress would last to keep the army on the frontiers, he would keep them there, but if Congress refused the means, then let Congress take the responsibility.

The question was then taken upon Mr. CABELL's amendment to reduce the appropriation five dollars, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I move to reduce the appropriation one dollar.

It is not the point before this committee whether we will feed and clothe the soldiery. That is a false issue, made up upon this floor. It is a false expenditure of patriotism. The point before the committee is not whether A, B, or C,—whether Sumner, Jesup, and others, were valiant and distinguished men—God knows, that if I were to speak my own sentiments—if I had the time to do it upon this or any other occasion—I would be willing to twine around their brows a wreath of glory that should remain with them till time should be no more. It is not a question of keeping that money from the officers or soldiery of the country. Who has proposed such a thing. That was the patriotism of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. VENABLE.] That was the patriotism of my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY.] This is simply a question of whether or not you shall increase the amount of expenditures in the quartermaster's department. What is the quartermaster's department? It is the department for the purchase of wagons, and teams, and mules, and supplies—not of provisions, but the mere buying and transportation of horses, mules, wagons, and similar species of property. It is not a commissary's department, but a different one entirely.

Mr. Chairman, we reduced the estimates for the War Department, during the last session, $2,000,000; and what does the commissary's department? Why, they took us at our word and reduced their expenses $700,000.

A MEMBER. $800,000.

Mr. GORMAN. A gentleman says $800,000. Well, sir, did we hear complaints from that department? Do we hear that we did not provide enough for the transportation of their provisions to Oregon, or New Mexico, or Texas? That has not been the complaint; but the complaint has been, that they have not soldiers enough of the right kind. We do not propose to take a single morsel from the mouth of a soldier, or a single dollar from his pay. Why, we curtailed one of the departments of the Government, which the Secretary of War says is known to be corrupt; or, to use his own language, "it is known that abuses have crept in." A million of dollars, and upwards; and what was the effect? It has been that they come here now, and confess that they can do, annually, with $1,000,000 less than they did before. Now, what has produced that change? Now, we propose to reduce it again. You have your wagons there, and they are not worn out. You have your horses, your mules, your teamsters, your men, and your wagon-masters already there; and cannot you economize in the expenses of your quartermaster's department? Cannot they economize in the purchase of such property as they are compelled to purchase? The gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY,] in his patriotism, asks—who is Sumner?—who is Hitchcock?—who is Jesup? Sir, they are gallant men. But they are not to blame. I am not blaming anybody. I am not blaming the President, or the Secretary of War, or General Jesup. I am asking that the representatives of the people shall apply the check, by curtailing the extravagance of this department. This matter has been brought before the country, and I propose to apply the knife there.

I have one word more. I wish the House distinctly to understand that the assistant quartermasters are not under the control of the officers of the line, so that you cannot blame those officers. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MEADE. I have been listening for the purpose of hearing some one, who has spoken upon this bill, tell this House what will be the consequence of its rejection. Let it be taken for granted that this Administration has been profusely extravagant, wantonly so; take it for granted that we have been defrauded of the appropriations which were munificently made by the last Congress; take it for granted that enough was appropriated to answer the purposes of the army, and by reason of improper agents that money has been plundered, how are we to redress ourselves? What are to be the consequences of refusing to make this appropriation? Will gentlemen tell me that? Will gentlemen tell me whether the armies that are now upon the frontier of Mexico are to be withdrawn, or whether they are to remain there without means of subsistence? Will gentlemen tell me what is to become of our forces in Oregon, stationed for the protection of our citizens there? if we can withhold this appropriation, and no bad consequence result to our army and to the service, in consequence of this mode of inflicting punishment upon the Administration, I am, for one, prepared to inflict it. But, if by means of such infliction, I shall do more injury to the country than good by saving this money, I will not consent to do it. Why, sir, we are in the very common situation of a man who has employed a steward, and has supplied him with all the means necessary to conduct his farm for twelve months, and that steward, unfaithful to his trust, has expended in six months the supplies that were intended for a year, and he comes for more. He is charged with fraud and extravagance, and is unable to defend himself in the account he renders of the manner in which he has expended it. But should the owner suffer the horses upon the farm to starve? Should he suffer the crops to perish, which are half made? Should he suffer everything to go to ruin because of the unfaithfulness of that steward? No, sir. He must furnish his plantation with new supplies sufficient to keep it up.

Gentlemen around me ask me if I would not dismiss the steward? Yes, sir; but the people who own this plantation must apply the remedy. We cannot. The people, it is to be hoped, will discover their error, and apply the remedy when the time comes. But, sir, we will not discharge our trust here upon this floor, if in consequence of one set of agents becoming reckless of the interests of the country, we do not attend to and provide for the exigencies of the country. We must supply these funds if they are necessary, although we may be convinced that the money formerly granted has been stolen and the country defrauded out of it. There is no remedy.

The misfortune of this House is in having no remedy in their hands. They must submit to the evil until the 4th of March next, when the people will have applied the remedy. If gentlemen will show me that by withholding these supplies, no greater evil will be put upon the country, I will give my vote against the bill. But I must know the fact. The Committee of Ways and Means, a majority of whom are in opposition to the Administration, have failed to discharge their duty, if, knowing the fact that these appropriations could be withheld, they have not told this House that they might be.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the clause of the bill, now under consideration, by striking out the words "two hundred and nineteen thousand dollars," and inserting the words ten dollars.

I desire, sir, to place the responsibility of the extraordinary deficiency in the appropriation made by the last Congress, for the quartermaster's department of the army, and which the honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means tells us, has rendered the introduction of this bill necessary, in the right place. The Secretary of War, General Jesup, the quartermaster general, and other officers and agents of the army, have been referred to in this debate, with the view to fix upon them the responsibility of the wasteful and extravagant expenditures, which have made this remarkable deficiency in the army fund. In my judgment, sir, this is placing the responsibility of this prodigality in the use of the public money in the wrong place. Who, sir, is the commander-in-chief of the army? The President of the United States is that commander-in-chief; and that functionary, and not his subordinates, is responsible for the wasteful extravagance in the expenditures of the army fund, of which we have heard so much in this debate. Will this House pass by the President, and attempt to hold his numerous subordinates responsible for the mal-administration of this fund? These subordinates are responsible to him, and he is responsible to Congress and the country; and this, sir, is the form in which this question should be met. The matter under consideration is a question between the legislative department and the Executive. Congress has passed a law, and the Executive, whose duty it was to see that that law was faithfully executed, has disregarded its limitations.

There is, in my judgment, a principle involved in this matter which demands the grave consideration of this House. I deem the amount of money proposed to be appropriated by this bill of less importance than the principle involved in the rebuke which, by implication, the Executive has given to the legislative authority. The issue presented is an issue between the Executive and Congress; and this House must determine whether it will permit the Executive to override the authority of Congress, and become the mere ministers of his will. Will this House determine that the Executive departments of the Government may go on ad libitum, and incur responsibilities in the public expenditures to the amount of millions beyond the amount appropriated by law, and then come here and demand that these debts, contracted without authority of law, shall be sanctioned by Congress, and appropriations made to pay them? If such a principle be sanctioned, the Executive, and not the legislative authority, may hereafter determine the amount of the annual appropriations for the public service; and the army, navy, and civil list will ere long be able to decide what the amount of their own compensation shall be. If this abuse be sanctioned, you make thereby a precedent of the most pernicious tendency. How can you limit the public expenditures, if the laws making appropriations be disregarded by the public agents? Will you permit your public agents to substitute their discretion for the laws passed by Congress? Will you make an appropriation of money for a particular branch of the public service, and permit the President to decide, in effect, that you did not do your duty, that the amount is insufficient for his wants, and then send in an estimate here of a large amount which he has expended without authority of law, and demand that an appropriation be made to pay the debts he has incurred? Do you admit the rebuke thus administered? Where is the limit to abuses of this kind if this be sanctioned? If you would retain the confidence of the country, and make your legislative authority what it was intended to be, you must keep the Executive authority in its proper place, under the proper responsibility, and confine it to the sphere of its legitimate duties. I recollect, sir, that at a period of our history not very remote, a message came from the President to this House, in which he manifested a very high appreciation of the responsibility which rested upon him in reference to the faithful execution of the law in regard to the boundaries of Texas. If he had been equally observant of his duty in holding his subordinates to a proper responsibility in the disbursement of the public money, a large amount of the appropriations demanded by this bill would have been saved to the country. You pass a law appropriating a certain amount of money for the support of the army. The President permits this fund to be wastefully expended; and when it is thus wrongfully exhausted, the same prodigal expenditures are permitted to go on, until heavy debts are incurred, and demands are then made for appropriations to meet this extravagant waste. What is this but a substitution of the discretion of the Executive for the legislation of Congress? It was the plain duty of the President, as the commander-in-chief of the army, to execute, with a proper regard to economy, the law passed by Congress; and if the fund appropriated was exhausted, to put the soldiers in the barracks and cantonments provided for their accommodation, and report the true condition of things to the legislative branch of the Government. I will vote no appropriation that finds its way here in this questionable shape; and I am ready to bear my share of the responsibility of defeating this bill, so far as my vote may have power to produce such a result.

Mr. VENABLE. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] has read me a lecture, along with my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY], about some unnecessary expenditures of patriotic feelings on this occasion. He says that the question here was not as to whether the soldier was to be fed and clothed, but whether the appropriation now asked for supplying the deficiency in this part of the same should be granted, that it should be wasted in extravagant expenditures at the quartermaster's department. If General Jesup is to be believed, and the report which I hold in my hand is to be taken as true, much of the money has already been spent for transportation, for clothing, and for bread for those soldiers. He says that the appropriations for this branch of the service are exhausted.

This communication, made by General Jesup, bears date the 3d of December, 1851, and this is the 23d of March, 1852. The soldiers have eaten the bread, have worn the clothing, and the expenses of transportation has been to some extent incurred. Your army has consumed it, and we are asked to repudiate the claim. We have no guide but the estimates of the department and the reports of the committee. The estimates are furnished by the departments, and the administration are responsible for their correctness.

If the statement of General Jesup is to be relied upon, such are the facts. It is for expenditure, to some extent, always incurred, and for sustaining your troops, placed in position by your laws and by your authorities. None are to blame but ourselves that this delay has taken place in the investigation of this subject. Three months have nearly passed since the 31st of December, and the bill has been a long time on the table without action, and now we are told that this item for transportation is needless, or at least unreasonably extravagant. Sir, the army stores will avail the troops but little without the necessary appliances in wagons and teams to transport them for their use. I ask, what relief will it afford the famishing soldier upon the frontier to learn that there is bread enough and to spare in Philadelphia or New York? The patriarch heard that there was bread in Egypt, and, like a prudent, sensible man, sent his sons to buy and bring the corn, regardless of trouble and expense, and saved his family from perishing. It will not be to any useful purpose to assure the soldier, pressed with hunger, that there is bread enough in Philadelphia or New York, but that you will not spend a dollar to provide the means of carrying it to him. This is, indeed, to "keep the word of promise to the ear, but break it to the hope." It is to say to the gallant soldiers, we will require you to march to the remote frontiers, and encounter all the hazards and hardships consequent upon the duties of the service; we require you to give protection from the savages, and fulfill the treaty stipulations of the country; we will buy bread and clothing, and all the provisions what by law you have a right to demand at the most convenient season. But when the department asks for mules and wagons to transport it to them, we reply that there is a cheat in the quartermaster's department, and we will withhold supplies until the fraud is detected and exposed. This, sir, is an experiment which I cannot consent to make at the soldiers expense. He can derive but little comfort from the empty views of comforts at a distance, whilst surrounded by all the inconveniences of insufficient provision for his wants which the law has provided shall be met and satisfied. He renders real service, and should receive substantial supplies. There is no power to release him from his obligation to obedience; there should be no hesitation in providing for his necessities.

Mr. GORMAN moved, pro forma, to amend by reducing the appropriation to $50. My opposition to this deficiency bill is founded upon what I think to be right. I am going to contest every inch of it. The gentleman who last addressed this committee has run off again into the commissary's department—the feeding department. What has that to do with the question of the quartermaster's department?

Mr. GENTRY. The quartermaster is to transport food to the army.

Mr. GORMAN. They have got now horses, harness, wagons, teamsters, and all of the men necessary. They have got them in the field, and there is money enough to pay them. I will show you in a moment that there is. There was appropriated by this House at the last Congress, for clothing and other equipage on the estimate of General Jesup, $240,000, of which, General Jesup says, "I have only drawn $161,000." Now, he comes here and asks for a deficiency of $75,000. Why? He says: "on inquiry at the Treasury Department I learn the balance of $81,000 has been applied to the settlement of paymasters' and other officers' accounts." The Treasury Department has withdrawn the money appropriated to the quartermaster's department at the last session, and given it over to pay the officers' bills, when we made an appropriation in the army appropriation bill to pay the officers of the army proper. Here, under a certain law which exists, they have diverted the funds we appropriated to the quartermaster's department to clothe the soldier; they have taken $81,000 of this money, and have appropriated it to pay the officers, notwithstanding that we, in the appropriation bill proper for the army, always provided the means for the pay of the officers and soldiers. They have authority to direct the funds under the law. This is the way they do it: If they find it convenient to pay at one point, they divert the funds from this department to another. Here, then, they come in for a deficiency of $75,000, and ask us to make that up, when the Treasury Department has taken it out of the hands of General Jesup, and appropriated it to other uses, which Congress said should not be done, and for which Congress had made an appropriation. I insist gentlemen shall debate the question in point, as to whether it is the quartermaster's department that needs additional funds. The expenditures of that department were reduced $800,000 last year, when we gave the hint. It can do so now. I want the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means—I want every gentleman, Whig or Democrat—I do not oppose this upon party grounds—to tell me if that department has not got upon the frontier, wagons, harness, and horses, and all in the employ of the Government; and whether at this hour they have not got plenty of money to pay regularly. What is the addition of $75,000 in the single item of clothing for? Because there is a deficiency? Where is the deficiency—where is the report that states the soldier needs additional clothing? The quartermaster general has suffered this $81,000 to be drawn from his fund and appropriated to another. Now, he comes in and asks us to make it up. It may be all right and necessary that it should be appropriated; but I insist that if the last Congress could reduce $800,000, the expenditures of that one department, it would be a very good thing if we would suggest to some of the other departments to make a corresponding decrease.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GENTRY. This, Mr. Chairman, is a remarkable debate in many particulars. I hope my friends from all sides will pardon me from saying that I do not think we are discussing this question as statesmen. We are not trying to do it. We have party contests for the President, and that is a fact which very much influences the character of our debates here. I want the world to know that fact, and to bear it constantly in mind, lest those who live at a great distance will not comprehend what is said upon this floor. [Laughter.] Now, our friends—my friends—upon the other side of the House—an adverse party—have the power here and in the Senate; and if the Executive branch of the Government is abusing its powers so much as they assume that it is, defeat this bill; but you have the power, and I have no objection at all to its exercise, except upon public considerations. I dare you to do it. Take the responsibility and do it. You dare not. You dare not. This does not relate to the army exclusively. Where rests the criminality, and where rests the responsibility for all of the other deficiencies covering the country, extending almost through every branch of the public service. My friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] usually a conservative and liberal man, says he will vote for this bill if the President will dismiss the Secretary of War and General Jesup, and all who have been connected with the expenditures, or who are responsible for them in any way. Well, now, if that rule is to obtain, in all respects, what is to become of us? I see here in the bill, sir, "for the contingent expenses of the House of Representatives, $75,000." [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There you have them! [Laughter.]

Mr. GENTRY. What is to become of the admirable and most excellent Clerk, and what is to become of us? [Renewed laughter.] Must we all be turned out?

Here again: "For surveying eight hundred and seventy-five miles of meridian, base, and standard lines, meandering and survey of irregular or river lots, &c., in California, at a rate not exceeding $15 per mile, $13,125."

Is General Jesup, is the Secretary of War, responsible for that, or is Congress responsible, for not having anticipated and appropriated all sums needful to carry on the Government, and to enable it to discharge its duties everywhere. Why, sir, we have made a great many mistakes. This matter of deficiency in the army appropriation is but one item of the abundance of those in this bill. Who is responsible? Why the Congress of the United States is responsible. My friend from North Carolina [Mr. VENABLE] insists that this House ought to vindicate its rights and power—that the President of the United States had no right to expend money that was not appropriated. Agreed: He cannot get a dollar out of the Treasury until this Congress appropriates it; but, I say that he has no authority to disband the army—he has no right to issue orders in New Mexico until there shall be some formal instruction to that effect—until the legislative branch of the Government shall give him authority to disband the army.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Are the items generally in this bill under discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. They are not.

Mr. SWEETSER moved, pro forma, to reduce the appropriation of fifteen dollars.

I do not intend to blink the question, inasmuch as the gauntlet has been thrown down by the honorable gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY.] I desire to say to him, and to this House, that I am among those men—and I think that they are numerous here—that intend to record their votes upon the yeas and nays against this bill, whatever may be the consequences involved. I desire it to be understood by the gentleman and this House, that there are men here who are determined to vindicate their independence as representatives of the people, by a record that will clearly show that they have not sullied themselves and surrendered to Executive delinquency, the trust reposed in them as representatives of the people. They are not to be driven from a position they have deliberately taken. All this caviling in relation to whom the responsibility rests, in my judgment, does not relieve this Administration from that just responsibility resting upon its Executive head. For what purpose does the present Executive hold that office? It is for the purpose of seeing that the laws passed by Congress are faithfully executed. The Executive branch being controlled by the President, armed with the power of appointing his Cabinet and removing them at pleasure, is responsible to the country for their acts; and it being the duty of the head of the War Department to enforce an honest and faithful discharge of duty by the heads of bureaus and officers in command of the army, there ought not to be any caviling about the responsibility. Make the President directly responsible to this House and the country, by withholding supplies, and the delinquents will be ferreted out, and the proper remedy applied. We certainly have the right to do so. Let us show we have, and disappoint the honorable gentleman from Tennessee. Has it come to this, that a friend of the Administration dares Congress to withhold the supplies provided for in this deficiency bill? If so, let us vindicate ourselves by recording our votes against this bill, and take the responsibility.

Mr. GENTRY. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him a moment. Do I understand the gentleman to make an imputation against the President because he has not spent all of the money that has been given to him? [Laughter.] He has executed the law, and now asks for more money, that he may continue to do so. Here is a conflict of laws—not a conflict of laws, indeed—but there is a conflict between the existing laws, and that leap in the dark, that reform, retrenchment made at the last session of Congress. He has not disbanded your army, nor has he violated the treaty, but he has spent the money that you have given him, and applied it to the purpose contemplated; and now asks for that needful to enable him to execute the law, to execute the treaty.

Mr. SWEETSER. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman's speech will not be taken out of my time. [Laughter.] I will not be diverted from the point I made. It was not my intention, in answering, to point the item of misapplication. I could not do so in a five minute speech. The executive branch of the Government has not been required to do any acts or perform any service that has not been fully provided for by Congress. The charge is, money has been diverted from its legitimate object of appropriation; has been squandered, and the public service disgraced. And now Congress is asked to sanction the act by providing the means to defray expenses incurred, and contracts made, without authority of law, overriding the solemn rebuke given by the action of the last Congress; and we are told that we dare not record our names against such a bill, and thereby fix the responsibility where it properly belongs. There is no way of avoiding it. And hence it is, that all of the special pleading in relation to whether this responsibility should be fixed upon this or upon that department, shows the impossibility of fixing it anywhere, unless you hold the Executive of the country responsible for the mal-administration of law. I agree with my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] that there is the point to place it. It is for him to trace out abuses, and if he has not the power to remedy the evils that exist he should call upon Congress for the passage of such laws as will enable him to put an end to them. When the gentleman makes the point that this is the first case in the history of the Government, when a deficiency bill has been defeated, I say that I am not willing that it shall be the last case. Let the Representatives of the people determine, when they have solemnly adjudicated the matter, that no executive in this country shall override their solemn decision—that he shall not enter into contracts for the purpose of afterwards asking in a deficiency bill what had before been refused. That is the point I make.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I have abstained from taking part in the debate this morning, because it has been generally irrelevant; and furthermore, because it was my desire to get action upon the bill at as early a time as possible. That is yet my desire. I do not intend to mingle in this debate, unless I think something I may say will have the tendency to give an explanation of the item that may be assailed. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] commented, with a good deal of rigidity, upon the item asked for California; and he goes on, and charges that $81,000 have been taken from that appropriation against law, which we are now called upon to come forward and sanction. He wishes to know why it is done. If the gentleman from Indiana had paid the least attention to the documents furnished; if he had attempted to inform himself upon the subject, he certainly would not have committed the blunder he has, which in my opinion is an egregious one—as to the amount of the item in controversy. Every one knows, and no one knows better than my friend, that the soldiers when they are discharged, who have not consumed their allowance in clothing, have a right to commute it and receive money in lieu of it. Until within some two years past, an estimate has regularly been made to every session of Congress, for a sum to meet the commutation for the clothing of the soldiers. For the last two years, that appropriation was omitted, and then the $81,000 was taken, but not against law. The paymaster paid the commutation—and when they came to settle their accounts, this amount was charged, as it should be, to the clothing account to meet that payment. That is the reason why the $81,000 is gone, because it was an allowance for clothing, and a commutation having been paid by the paymaster's department; and that, according to the regulations of the department in the settlement of accounts, was chargeable to the appropriation for clothing.

The gentleman from Indiana says we have plenty of wagons, teams, and mules, and why can we not furnish transports? If the gentleman had looked at these estimates, he would have found that the largest estimate now asked for, for the quartermaster's service, is forage for these very mules and animals furnishing transports. How can your animals make your transports, unless you give them something to keep them up? Here is an item of $800,000 or $900,000 for the forage of that very transport; and that is not all; for under the head of transportation, upon the first of January, there was only about $10,000 in the Treasury to meet outstanding liabilities. Why, but the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] says it was the duty of the President to put the troops in barracks. I will ask the gentleman, if you put the troops in barracks, does that save them from eating? And do they not eat in the house as well as upon a march? Do you not have to transport their provisions to them? If you will stop their mouths, you may save supplies; and you will in the same way save the transports. Gentlemen contend that they are willing to pay the army, and they say that the soldiers get their pay under another appropriation. But they get their clothing, or the clothing is intended to be appropriated for in this very bill. You refuse the money to give them clothes, and you all say there is plenty to eat. We have the mules and wagons to carry our transports, but then we have nothing to feed the mules. All these things are to be left out, merely because there has been a waste, in the estimation of gentlemen.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HALL moved a pro forma amendment to reduce the appropriation ten dollars.

He said: The gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] have endeavored to impress upon the minds of this committee, that the refusal to pass this bill would deprive the army in New Mexico, and Texas, and California, of the horses and mules used in that army. I feel it my duty to say a word in answer to that assertion. We all know that during the war troops were stationed in New Mexico and California, and that the quartermaster's troops, employed for the purpose of transporting ammunition and baggage, never received a dollar's worth of forage during the whole period of the war. We had, in New Mexico, during the war, some three or four thousand troops, and several hundred in California. Troops were scattered all over this country where they are now placed; and although those troops entered into the service under a contract that they should be foraged, yet they were never furnished with one dollar of forage during the whole progress of that war. Colonel Doniphan and his men marched some two or three thousand miles through the heart of Mexico, performing some of the most brilliant exploits performed in any part of the army, yet not one of these men received a dollar's worth of forage for his animal. You are told now that your regular army, that your soldiers, stationed there in garrison, are in peace establishment, and that they cannot support their horses for two months, unless you appropriate $850,000 to furnish them with corn. What is the business of these troops? It is to protect the people in New Mexico and Texas from the Indians. And how are the Indian horses supported? They do not know what corn is, and they live upon grass; but these troops of ours, who are sent to protect the people from the Indians, forsooth, cannot feed their horses without $850,000 to pay for corn. The great trouble in this whole matter is, that the troops did not try to do their duty; and the quartermaster, instead of buying horses that were appropriate for that sort of service, bought horses sixteen or seventeen hands high, that were about as unfit for crossing the plains as a monkey for a drawing room; and then they asked for corn to keep them alive. Such horses would wear down in one hundred or two hundred miles travel. If you had furnished them with the horses such as the Indians themselves use, they could have been sustained all the time for one third of the price needed for the large horses upon the prairie grass, of that country, which is the finest in the world.

It is all a mistake about there being no grass, and nothing fit for horses to live upon in New Mexico. The grass there is the best in the world, and we can support our horses there if we get the proper sort of animals. I am willing to take the responsibility of defeating this bill, if my vote will do it, because I do not believe it will injure the army, but I believe it will render it more efficient. In order to live, the soldiers will be placed in the Indian country, where they ought to be, and these horses will be taken away and Indian horses placed where there is grass, wood, and fuel, and where their services will be more efficient and useful. Stationed where these troops now are, they will be utterly worthless, worse than useless. As my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] says, in order to protect Texas against four thousand Indians, men, women, and children, we keep two thousand troops in that country, and yet we give the people no protection whatever. Let these troops perform the duty of volunteers, instead of lying around the barracks. Let the soldiers be put into active service, and instead of keeping their horses upon corn to get them in a fine, promising condition, let them be placed where the Indians are and feed their horses as they do, and then they will get rid of this enormous expense of forage, fuel, and all this sort of thing, and at the same time they will be giving protection to the people, whom they are sent there to protect.

Mr. POLK. I anticipated the scene several days ago, to which we have arrived, when the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means pressed this bill with such hot haste upon the consideration of the House. I will not, however, within five minutes give any sort of construction to that hot haste. I will say, however, that two appeals have been made to this side of the House. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VENABLE] calls upon us to vote for this bill on account of the women and children. I will shed a tear with him there. I will mingle my tears with his. [Laughter.] I will send up as generous an emotion to the throne of our common God for the scalped infants, as he will. Another gentleman calls upon us to sustain the bill on account of the army. I permit no one to admire the army more than I do; but I have a duty to perform, and neither tears or admiration will deter me from acting in a manner that would be in contradiction to a distinct sense of duty upon this subject. Then, after they have appealed to our patriotism, my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY] gets up and defies us upon this bill. I admire his spirit. It is not the first time that we have been defied upon this bill. The last session of Congress cut down the estimates for the quartermaster's department. Did they obey the action of Congress? No! Did they defy it? Yes! The Administration defied Congress, and went beyond the limits of appropriation, in defiance of its distinct action. Finding that defiance will not answer, my colleague comes up, and defies the House. I will meet the defiance, and for one, will vote against this bill. I don't object to all of it, but there are portions of it to which I do object. I desire light upon this matter. What are you to do if you do not vote the appropriation? Is the army to be called in? No! Let Congress assert its right. Let it assert its proper power. Let it tell this Administration that we demand of you to show some evidence that you will correct those frauds upon the Government, if they are frauds as charged. We will withhold these appropriations. We will ask of you first to administer correctives, and when you shall show a disposition to do it, I will go heart and hand to save the honor of the Republic, and give them this aid: but I will require some sort of security of that kind for the future. I will require security for the future that the next Congress shall not be asked to pass another deficiency bill.

Mr. MASON moved a pro forma amendment to increase the appropriation twelve dollars. He said: I have read the bill, and I have listened to the debate upon it during the last two or three days, and I have not discovered any new light, since the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means made his speech, to change my opinion on any item in it.

Now, sir, I am as much in favor of economy and of reducing the expenses of the Government as any member on this floor. My votes show it. But, sir, I do not consider this a place to show your devotion to economy. Let these same gentlemen, who are upon the various committees of the House, bring in measures to be voted upon, and acted upon, practically to reduce the expenditures of the Government. Let the Military Committee bring in a bill to reduce the army, if it is proper to do so. Let the Committee on Naval Affairs bring in a bill to reduce the expenses of the Naval Department, and so with all the other committees of the House who have charge of the various subjects. But when they fail to do this, and leave in force laws which compel the Government to expend money, are we to stop the appropriations here and let the Government drafts be protested?

Now sir, I have not satisfied myself from any observations I have yet been able to make, that this is an economical House—Whigs or Democrats, pro-slavery men or anti-slavery men. I have yet to see the first bill come up here, proposing to take money out of the Treasury, and not passed. I have seen hundreds of thousands of dollars voted away here in a bill to make bounty land warrants assignable. You may bring up any proposition here for increasing the expenditures of the Government, or the contingent fund of this House, and it will go through, it does not matter whether by Whig or Democratic votes. Can you refuse to pass the appropriation in this bill of $75,000 for the contingent fund of this House? You have increased the number of your officers; you buy books, you order the Clerk to buy stationery; and can you withhold from him the means to pay for things that your own orders have compelled him to purchase? Is it not so with every other item in the bill? The contingent fund of this House in Mr. Van Buren's time was $100,000; you appropriated $209,000 last year, and here was an additional appropriation of $100,000 asked for deficiencies. The committee have made it $75,000; but they might just as well have made it $100,000, unless the House intends to put a stop to these extravagant estimates of appropriation. After the estimates were made last year, a simple resolution was passed to pay the employees of the House $250 apiece extra; that took $25,000. Another resolution was passed to bind the Congressional Globes, which took about $4,000 more. Then there was a large sum paid for Gales & Seaton's Reports, which are laid away for the worms to eat, for nobody has ever opened them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FAULKNER. A view of this question has been taken by several gentlemen in this debate which, if well founded, should have a decisive influence upon the result in this House, and certainly would materially influence my vote. It has been said, that this bill involves a vital and fundamental question of power between the Executive and the Legislative departments of the Government. That Congress, at its last session, in reducing the army appropriations fifty per cent. below the estimates, thereby indicated its fixed determination to limit the expenditures of the army within these appropriations, and that all expenditures beyond that amount, or in that proportion, for the present fiscal year, so far as it has elapsed, was in palpable violation of the will of Congress, clearly and distinctly expressed. This was the view of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WALLACE] a few moments since, and it was the view of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] announced on yesterday; the latter gentleman, indeed, was so emphatic in his opinion as to declare that he would rather vote to disband the army, and leave the frontiers to their own defense, than to vote one dollar of the present deficiency.

Now, sir, if I viewed this question in the light taken of it by these gentlemen, I might reach the same conclusions to which they have arrived. If Congress shall indicate its clear purpose to limit expenditure within certain bounds, and a department of the Government should disregard that purpose of Congress, I would, with them, assume the responsibility of refusing to vote further supplies. But I draw no such conclusions from the proceedings of the last Congress. That body, in reducing the appropriations, did not curtail a single object of expenditure. For the last four or five years, the annual expenditures of the quartermaster's department have exceeded $4,000,000. And, as a wise and intelligent body, we cannot presume that they meant to force the War Department to achieve an impossibility, by supporting our army as at present established, upon a distant frontier, at one half of what the experience of the last four or five years have shown that it would cost. The utmost that can be predicated of the action of the last Congress, is, that it believed there was waste and extravagance in that branch of the Government; that it meant to give to the Government a stern rebuke; but it is equally certain that it never designed to interfere with the existing military establishment, or to assume the responsibility of recalling the army from the frontier, or authorizes any important modification in that arm of the public service. It is an admitted fact, that after the appropriations were reduced, an amendment was offered to the bill by Mr. Schenck, then a Representative from Ohio, to authorize the President, by the discharge of officers, and by other means, in his discretion, to bring the necessary expenditures within the limits of the appropriations. This proposition was rejected by a decisive vote. Is it fair, then, to infer that it was the intention of Congress to confine the expenditures within certain limits, that should not be transcended? Would it have been a wise or manly policy upon their part to continue in full vigor our existing military establishment, charged with the weighty duties of international obligation and of protecting our extended and almost limitless frontier, and to declare that it should be done for so much, and no more, and especially when the sum granted was only one half of the amount which experience had demonstrated was essential to the service? Is it not more reasonable to suppose that they meant only to inculcate watchfulness and economy, knowing that the want of an appropriation could thereafter be supplied by a deficiency bill; a mode of relief, which it is well known, was anticipated at the last session by those who favored, and by those who opposed a reduction of the appropriations. Now, sir—

[Here the hammer fell.]

On motion by Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, the committee then rose.

And the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. STUART) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 207, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

On motion by Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, The House then adjourned.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. THOMAS M. HOWE: The petition of William B. McCorogue and others, praying for a more direct steam communication between the United States and Ireland.

Also, the petition of Maurice Brennan and others, for the same.

By Mr. DUNCAN: The petition of Nathaniel Perry and 511 other citizens of the United States, for alterations of the present tariff and for other purposes.

By Mr. MURRAY: The petition of James F. Taylor and other citizens of Orange county, New York, for an act to prohibit the transportation and delivery of the mails on the Lord's day.

By Mr. ROBE: The remonstrance of A. M. Adsit and 125 others, citizens of St. Lawrence county, New York, remonstrating against the extension of the Woodworth patent.

Also, the petition of Robert McMundy and 30 other citizens of Steuben county, New York, asking that a law be passed giving further remedies to patentees.

By Mr. SCUDDER: The petition of J. B. Wood and 50 others, citizens of New Bedford, Massachusetts, asking aid for the Collins line of steam-ships.

Also, the petition of Edward L. Barney and 48 others, citizens of New Bedford, Massachusetts, asking for an extension of Woodworth's patent.

By Mr. CONGER: The petition of Daniel E. Groux, asking Congress to purchase of said petitioner a certain collection of 6,537 coins and medals for the Library of Congress.

By Mr. FICKLIN: The petition of a number of citizens of the District of Columbia, asking the amendment of the city charter so as to secure the rights of suffrage to all free white male citizens over twenty-one years of age who have resided twelve months within the District of Columbia, and to authorize the voters of the District to elect justices of the peace, constables, and other officers.

Also, the memorial of the Corporation of Washington in relation to supplying that city with water, and for other purposes.

By Mr. CURTIS: The petition of the citizens of Warren county, praying for an appropriation of the public domain to actual settlers in limited quantities.

By Mr. DOTY: The petition of William M. Colby, O. H. Lamore, and 300 other citizens of Marquette and Adams counties in favor of extending the credit to preceptors to three years, and making lands held by preceptors subject to taxation.

Also, the petition of A. Wissmann, Bernard Roemer, Charles Esslinger, and 40 other citizens of Manitowoc county, in favor of granting the right of way and land to aid the Manitowoc and Mississippi Land Company to construct a railroad.

By Mr. MINER: The petition of Jacob Esby and 230 others, against the further extension of Woodworth's patent.

By Mr. HAMMOND: The petition of Josiah Pearce and others, asking the establishment of a post road in Baltimore county, Maryland.

Also, the petition of Mrs. Rachel Weems, widow of John Weems, deceased, praying additional compensation for services rendered by her husband in raising cannon, &c., from Barney's flotilla.

By Mr. CABLE, of Ohio: A memorial from Charles Mather and 80 other citizens of Smithfield, Ohio, in favor of Congress sustaining the Wheeling Bridge by enactment.

By Mr. FLORENCE: Memorials of Adam Uery, sen., and 34 others; of Lemuel S. Peters and 38 others; of Alexander Busch and 30 others, citizens of the city of Philadelphia, praying the extension of the "Woodworth patent, for playing boards," &c.

Also, the memorial of Casper H. Horn, Chalkley Baker, John C. Selfridge, and others, citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia, praying that the soldiers of the war of 1812 may be granted one hundred and sixty acres of land.

Also, resolutions of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania.

nia, "in reference to the establishment of a navy-yard, depot, and dry-dock on the lake frontier."

Also, the memorial of George Getz, James Landy, R. J. Fougerey, and others, commissioners of the incorporated district of the Northern Liberties, in the county of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the extension of the "Woodworth patent" for planing boards, &c.

Also, the memorial of George C. Richards, Chas. Hartz, Charles C. Wilson, and others, commissioners of the district of Southwark, in the county of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the extension of the "Woodworth patent" for planing boards, &c.

Also, resolutions of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania "relative to Smith O'Brien and his associates in exile."

By Mr. SWEETSER: The petition of Samuel Galloway and 195 others, citizens of Columbus, Ohio, asking Congress to make an appropriation to defray the expenses of locating a road from the Missouri river, to the Pacific ocean.

Also, for an appropriation of public land along the route of said road, to form settlements.

Also, the petition of Peter Haydon and 85 others, on the same subject.

Also, the petition of John Cradlebaugh and 89 others, (principally members of the Ohio Legislature,) on the same subject.

Also, the petition of James Banbury and 66 others, citizens of Franklin county, Ohio, on the same subject.

Also, the petition of William H. Ramy and 55 others, citizens of Grove Post, Franklin county, Ohio, on the same subject; with the memorial of said William H. Ramy and 9 others, who desire to undertake the execution of said work.

By Mr. MILLSON: The petition of Edward H. Herbert, asking payment of a balance claimed for timber delivered to the United States.

By Mr. CHURCHWELL: The petition of Thomas McConnell and many others, of Roane county, Tennessee, asking compensation for services rendered by said McConnell to volunteers in the service of the United States.

Also, the petition of William H. Grant, Robert H. Pharis, and 150 others, citizens of Bradley and Polk counties, Tennessee, asking for the establishment of a mail route from Cleveland, Tennessee, to Ellettsville, Georgia.

Also, the petition of W. A. Rogers, postmaster, asking for the establishment of a mail route from Woodbourne, Knox county, Tennessee, via Acadenia, to Strawberry Plains, Jefferson county, Tennessee.

By Mr. SCUDDER: The petition of Joseph L. McDonald, of Truro, Massachusetts, for allowance of fishing bounty to owners and crew of schooner Bloomfield, lost at sea.

By Mr. KUHN: The petition of Abraham Morrison and many other citizens of Pennsylvania, praying Congress to authorize by law the construction of a railroad from Council Bluffs, on the Missouri river, to California and Oregon.

Also, the petition of Thomas Keirs and many other citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for an increase of duty upon salt, for the protection of the manufacturers of that article in the United States.

By Mr. GORMAN: The joint resolution of the Legislature of Indiana, on the subject of the slave trade and colonization.

By Mr. McNAIR: The petition of William S. Young and 291 others, citizens of Montgomery, Berke, and Lehigh counties, Pennsylvania, asking for a new post route from Allentown to Pottstown, in said State.

By Mr. HENDRICKS: A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Indiana, on the subject of the slave-trade and colonization.

By Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee: The memorial of the Legislature of Tennessee, asking for a change in mail service.

By Mr. LETCHER: The petition of the executors of General Robert Porterfield, deceased, praying bounty land, commutation pay, and the reimbursement of advances made for the public service.

By Mr. SCHOONMAKER: The petition of Frederick Bange and Albert Southmayd, of New York, for a review and remitting of their Mexican claim.

By Mr. FICKLIN: The memorial of John A. Linton and others, members of the Washington bar, asking a reorganization of the courts of the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HARPER: The memorial of E. W. Tupper, S. H. Guthrie, and 44 others, citizens of Muskingum county, Ohio, praying that the bridge of the Wheeling and Belmont Company may be established as post roads, and permitted to remain at their present height.

By Mr. BURROWS: The petition of William Emerson and 170 others, citizens of Orleans county, New York, praying for further remedies to patents.

Also, The petition of Lemuel C. Paine and 60 others, citizens of Orleans county, New York, on the same subject.

By Mr. ROBBINS: The petition of Samuel Battin and 33 others, citizens of the county of Philadelphia, in favor of the Woodworth patent.

Also, on the same subject, the petition of Andrew Wright and 35 others, citizens of Philadelphia county.

Also, on the same subject the petition of Charles Smith and 37 other citizens of Philadelphia county.

By Mr. IVES: Remonstrance against the renewal of the Woodworth patent, by 166 citizens of Jefferson county, New York.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 24, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. President, I present the petition of George W. Greene, of Rhode Island, praying the subscription by Congress to the memoir and papers of Major General Nathanael Greene.

The memorialist is the grandson of Major General Nathanael Greene, and has in his possession all the papers and letters of his illustrious ancestor. He does not propose to Congress to purchase these valuable papers, and bury them in the archives of any department, but that a liberal subscription should be made to their publication, to be accompanied by an authentic memoir of the eminent individual, whose rich treasures have fallen into his hands. The memorialist is a gentleman of high literary character, an accomplished scholar, and, with the materials in his possession, will make a work valuable to the history and character of our country.

Mr. President, the men of the Revolution have passed away. Their example is before us, and now it is only the evidences of their thoughts and the motives of action which can lead us further to appreciate their patriotic sacrifice, and teach us the wisdom which guided them in their illustrious course. The principles for which they contended will derive a new illustration from the confidential expression of every opinion, freely communicated from patriot to patriot, and will become more sacred in our keeping, when we see and know from them what struggles they had, and what hardships they endured in their defense. We are the beneficiaries, and to them is our gratitude due.

Major General Nathanael Greene was a native of the patriotic State of Rhode Island. His family was of the most respectable character, but humble in their circumstances, and he was brought up to a laborious mechanical occupation. In April, 1775, his native State, anticipating a contest with the mother country, raised a force of sixteen hundred men, and wisely selected Greene to command and discipline them. Early in June, he was found with this force engaged in the league of Boston; and when Washington took the command in July, the historian says "the troops of Greene were pronounced the best disciplined and appointed in the whole army."

Washington properly appreciated the high character of Greene not only as a soldier, but as a man of enlarged, liberal, and patriotic views. Their friendship was early formed, and continued with mutual confidence throughout the war. In the splendid picture, now in the rotunda, you see him with his Chief crossing the Delaware. He led the advance at Trenton, and was distinguished at Princeton, at Brandywine, at Germantown, and at Monmouth. After the treason of Arnold, he was selected to the command of West Point.

Subsequently he proceeded to the South and joined the army in North Carolina. He continued at the head of the Southern army, displaying great ability, and crowned with brilliant success until the evacuation of Charleston by the enemy, in 1782, and his triumphal entry into that city.

He was a favorite soldier of the South, and his eminent services and high character, were appreciated throughout the whole country. So highly did Washington esteem his calm judgment and military skill, that it is said, the Commander-in-Chief desired, in case of his death, the command of the army should be given to General Greene. All the rich materials which such a life, in such an age, could originate and produce, are now offered to the country; and Congress is now asked to subscribe for so many copies as may save the talented and patriotic descendant from pecuniary loss.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of Boston, Massachusetts, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. BRADBURY presented a petition of merchants, and other citizens of Portland, Maine, praying further aid to Collins's line of mail steamships; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SMITH presented a petition of citizens of Bridgeport, Connecticut, praying an extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. SEWARD presented resolutions of the New York State Agricultural Society, in favor of the establishment of an Agricultural Bureau; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. FELCH presented the petition of Amaziah

Goodwin, praying an increase and arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WELLER presented a petition of citizens of Washington, District of Columbia, praying an amendment of the charter of that city; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. GWIN presented the memorial of William Money, praying indemnity for horses seized by order of Brigadier General Kearny, during the war with Mexico, and for losses incurred in consequence thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ATCHISON presented the petition of Rossanna Sowards, praying a pension on account of her son, who died of wounds received in the late war with Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SOULE presented a petition of merchants, and other citizens of New Orleans, praying that further aid may be extended to the Collins line of steamers; which was ordered to be laid on the table, a bill having been reported by the committee on that subject.

Mr. MALLORY presented the memorial of Hartwell Carver and his associates, praying a charter for the construction of a railroad to the Pacific ocean; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented a memorial of the Mayor and Common Council of Racine, Wisconsin, praying a further appropriation for a harbor at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of restricting the jurisdiction of the United States district court for that district, in certain cases; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GEYER presented the petition of the St. Genevieve Iron Mountain and Pilot Knob Plank Road Company, praying the right of way; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAVIS presented the memorial of J. Ballestier, praying to be allowed certain items rejected on the settlement of his accounts at the Department of State, for services and expenses as special agent to Cochin China, and other portions of Southeastern Asia; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That the petition of Nathan Weston, jr., be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That the petition of George Dennett, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion by Mr. BROOKE, it was Ordered, That the documents on the files of the Senate, relating to the claim of the heirs of Joseph McAffee, be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion by Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the original letters patent filed with the petition of Obed Hussey.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of William Smith, and three petitions of residents of Wisconsin, praying the donation of certain military reserves, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill to grant to the State of Wisconsin the military reservation at Fort Winnebago, in that State, to aid in improving the navigation of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill to enable Jacob Banta to locate two revolutionary bounty land certificates, reported the same without amendment.

He also submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, reported a bill to authorize the sale of the military reserves at Forts Winabago and Howard, in Wisconsin; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. ATCHISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the documents relating to the claim of Henry C. Miller, Philip W. Thompson, and Jesse B. Turley, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to which was referred the petition of Isaac Adams, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill to amend "an act to promote the progress of the useful arts;" which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the resolution instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of establishing a port of entry at Tusculum, Alabama, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of citizens of Davidson county, Tennessee, praying that the bridges of the Belmont and Wheeling Bridge Company may be established as mail routes, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a motion to print two thousand additional copies of the reports of the Committee on Military Affairs, accompanying a bill and joint resolution concerning the national defenses, reported in favor of printing the same; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the motion to print the petition of James Riley, reported adversely thereto. The report of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. BRADBURY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the memorial of assistant marshals in Pennsylvania, presented the 22d instant, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the petition of the West Feliciana Railroad Company, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. SEBASTIAN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of James Jones, a citizen of Arkansas.

NEW MAIL ROUTE.

Mr. SEBASTIAN submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the establishment of a mail route and the transportation of the mail from Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, to Donna Anna, in the Territory of New Mexico, on the Rio Grande, in connection with the line of military posts being established between those places.

GUTHRIE'S SAFETY VALVE.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. DAVIS, on the 22d instant, in relation to Guthrie's improvements in the steam engine; and it was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, an estimate of the cost of constructing a basin at the terminus of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, at Rock creek; which was read, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a supplemental report of the battle of Cerro Gordo, made by General Pillow to General Scott; which was read, and ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

SALARIES OF TERRITORIAL OFFICERS.

The following engrossed bill was read a third time, and, its title being amended to read as follows, it was passed: An act relating to the salaries of officers of the Territories of the United States, and to repeal the proviso in the act entitled "an act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1852, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1851.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. HAYES, its Chief Clerk, announcing that it had passed the bill amendatory of the act entitled "an act to provide for holding the courts of the United States, in case of the sickness or other disability of the judges of the district courts," approved July 29, 1850, with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. BORLAND. I submit the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate:

Any plan which may have been adopted for the extension of the Capitol.

A statement of the manner in which the money already appropriated for this object has been expended, and the amount paid to each individual, and for what object or purpose, and the amount, if there be any, of the appropriation unexpended.

Copies of all written contracts, and verbal agreements, if any, entered into, from the beginning of the work to the present time, for materials or workmanship, which have heretofore been, or are hereafter to be, furnished or done, for the extension of the Capitol.

A statement of the materials proposed to be used in the construction of the interior and exterior walls, and porches of the Capitol.

A statement of the materials proposed to be used in the construction of the frame work and covering of the roofs.

A statement of what, if any, plan has been adopted to insure the proper lighting, warming, and ventilating the several apartments of the proposed extension; and what, if any, plan of construction has been adopted, with reference to the principles of acoustics, in order to facilitate hearing in each of the two halls of legislation, and in the Supreme Court room.

As it is a resolution of inquiry, and has some connection with a subject now under the consideration of a committee of this body, I ask unanimous consent to have the resolution considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. BORLAND. Before the vote is taken on the resolution, I beg leave to say a few words, to explain the purpose with which I offer it. It will be recollected that when the joint resolution making an appropriation for the continuation of the work on the extension of the Capitol was before the Senate the other day, I opposed its adoption. It was subsequently, on my motion, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings, with a view to a thorough examination into the character of the work. In consequence of my remarks on that occasion, I have been made the subject of attack.

My course here, in regard to the matter, has been attacked, not only in other quarters, but particularly in the Administration organ, published in this city. My position, and my reasons for it, have been grossly misrepresented. I have been presented before the country as making factious opposition here to a measure of public interest and utility, and upon grounds wholly untenable. I have been put before the public as throwing myself before the mouths of starving men, who were dependant on their labor for support, and had a just claim on this Government for appropriations of the public money. All this has been evidently done with the view of making a false issue before the country, and putting me in a false position. But one reason can be assigned for it, in my opinion; and that is, a desire to evade and avoid a just responsibility on the part of this Administration for its public acts. My object, therefore, in moving the reference of my resolution of instructions, offered some time since, to the Committee on Public Buildings, was to ascertain whether the charges which had been made against persons engaged in the construction of the foundation walls of the Capitol were true or not; and now, in carrying out that object still further, in order to get all the facts bearing on the subject, I have moved this resolution of inquiry of the President, so as to ascertain what has been done in the way of a plan, and the mode in which the money has been expended.

Another consideration which I think makes the resolution peculiarly proper is this: I learn, from what I consider good authority, that contracts to the amount of about a million and a half of dollars have already been made by the Executive, with a view of carrying on this work, based on a single appropriation of $100,000 made last year! I desire to know if that be so. If it be so, Congress should take some step—for it surely would be proper—to arrest such a course of proceeding, and to require the Executive Department of this Government, in making contracts for the expenditure of money, to hold itself restricted by the action of Congress, which alone can make appropriations, and judge of their propriety. This is all I have to say.

Mr. BADGER. I want to say one word before the question is taken on this resolution of my friend from Arkansas. He says that he understands contracts have been made with reference to this work for a large amount beyond the $100,000 appropriated by Congress, and that in case that information should turn out to be true, some steps should be taken by Congress for the purpose of preventing such things in times to come. Why, I believe it never was supposed that when Congress directs a work to be undertaken and executed, and directs an officer to undertake it, the appropriation made for expenditures on that work for the current year is to furnish the limit by which he is to make engagements and contracts for carrying on the work. Congress directs a work to be executed—the enlargement of the Capitol, for instance—but when Congress appropriated $100,000 towards that purpose, it never entered into the imagination of any human being that that was the whole amount of money which was to be expended in execution of the work, but merely that it was supposed to be all that it would be necessary to expend until the reassembling of Congress, when a further appropriation would become necessary. My impression is, that such is, and always has been, the practice of the Government.

Mr. BORLAND. With all deference to the opinion of the honorable Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER.] I must say that I differ from him essentially. My opinion will, of course, pass with others for what it may be intrinsically worth; it certainly is authority for myself. I admit that the appropriation of $100,000 does not limit the President, or the officer charged with the execution of a work, as to the plan of that work—as to the arrangements to be made in view of its continuation and completion. But I have never before heard the position taken, and I am amazed at it now, that the amount of the appropriation did not limit the executive officer as to the amount he should expend. If, upon an appropriation of $100,000 he can make contracts to the amount of a million and a half of dollars, he may with equal propriety make contracts to the amount of every dollar in the Treasury. The principle is the same, the authority of law the same, in both instances. His own discretion is the only limit. But, sir, how can he know, how shall he decide, that Congress will go on with the work, if it is likely to involve an extraordinary amount of expenditure more than was contemplated at the time the appropriation was made? If that position be admitted, there is no check at all on the Executive. If we pass a resolution or a bill to have a certain work executed, and appropriate a certain amount of money to be expended in its execution, and the President to disregard the limit thus fixed, there is no other limit, no other rule, (according to this position,) by which he can be restrained. Sir, if the position of the Senator from North Carolina be correct, the whole Treasury is in the hands of the President, without restraint from us; and he may go on and make contracts to the amount of five or ten or fifty millions of dollars, and we shall be bound to ratify his acts, and foot the bills. Nor, upon this position, would there be any obligation on our part to see that those contracts were fairly made, or kept within proper bounds.

Mr. President, to insist that the expenditures shall be limited to the amount of the appropriations, is the only way in which we can control the use of the public money. We cannot, properly, as a general rule, in the public service, prescribe the plans, and arrange the methods, of executing the several works. That, to some extent, must be left to Executive discretion. But the purpose and intention of appropriations—in specific sums, and for specific objects—is to furnish this very check and control for which I contend. It is the only one we can have. We cannot safely give it up.

As well might we give the President a general power to take out of the Treasury any indefinite amount of money for any indefinite period, at his pleasure; for it comes to that. But, who would sanction a proposition here, to authorize the President, in the execution of this work, to draw from the Treasury any amount of money he might think proper? The Senator from North Carolina himself would not vote for such a proposition as that. Yet that is not different in principle, nor would it differ much in its practical operation from what the President is alleged to have assumed authority to do, and what the Senator's position would seem to warrant.

The President is alleged to have made contracts to the amount of a million and a half of dollars for the execution of a work, for which Congress had appropriated but one hundred thousand! If he could do that lawfully—if he could exceed the amount we placed at his disposal fifteen times, how far might he not have gone? As lawfully and as rightfully might he have gone to the amount of every dollar in the Treasury. To sanction his doing the one, and to authorize him to do the other, at his discretion, is substantially the same proposition. To my mind there is no difference between them.

Mr. BADGER. It is the easiest thing in the world for a gentleman to make out a case, by just appending two or three words that nobody has used or thought of. I said nothing about the President having a right to make contracts for any sum he pleased, and that we were bound by them. Nobody imagines such a thing. But when my friend, in anticipation of any such report on this subject, is so eager to cast reflection upon the President of the United States—after offering a resolution, asking for information upon the subject, which is considered by the unanimous consent of the Senate—that he will not even permit the resolution to be adopted, without suspecting beforehand, that something has been wrong and injurious, it seems to me very singular, indeed, that he should amend the statement which I have made—if it can be called amending—by putting in words which I neither used nor thought of. I say this, that when Congress direct a work to be executed, it is the custom to make appropriations from time to time, as the work advances, and that it is also the custom with those charged with the supervision of the work, whether the President of the United States, or anybody else, to make the preliminary contracts and engagements for the supplies which it is supposed will be necessary in the further prosecution of the work.

But all those contracts and engagements are made conditionally on the appropriation being made by Congress for the continuance of the work. There is no intention in the world to control Congress; there is no obligation upon Congress—none upon earth. If we choose to stop the work where it is; if we change our minds, and think it will cost more than it is worth, we will stop just where we are; and the contracts for supplies will be discontinued, and the Government not be charged with the payment of them. Every man must see that in such a work as this, if the person charged with its execution made no contracts, no arrangements, no stipulations with parties to furnish the materials for its further prosecution, then, at the end of every session of Congress, the work would come to a dead stand; and that when another appropriation should be made, a new set of contracts would have to be entered into for the ensuing year; a new set of materials would have to be selected, and new parties charged with the furnishing of them. The necessary consequence of that system would be most expensive and injurious to the Government.

Certainly the Executive Government has no right to expend a dollar more than Congress appropriates. Certainly, when a work of this kind is directed to be constructed, if the Executive Government think it to be advantageous, in anticipation of the future action of Congress—supposing that Congress is in earnest, and means to build two additional wings to the Capitol—to make agreements for persons to supply materials and other things necessary to carry on the work, there is no impropriety in it; because, as I say, every such contract is conditional on Congress prosecuting the work. If the Executive Government do that, then, when an appropriation is made at the next succeeding session of Congress, and the work is to go on, they are in a condition to prosecute it immediately. The effect of the system which, as I understand, is usually pursued, is this: that though the whole subject remains under the control of Congress; although Congress appropriates, from time to time, sufficient money to carry on the work; yet the work goes on steadily without any interruption, unless Congress thinks proper to discontinue it.

But if the system which the honorable Senator from Arkansas seems to think is the proper one, were pursued, the work would come to an end each year, and you would have to start with a new set of arrangements and contracts, involving, not the prosecution, continuously, of one original design, but the reengagement and renewal of successive operations through new contractors and new agents, involving as much delay and additional expense as if there were successive new works. That is my idea; but I have no notion in the world that the Treasury of the United States should be placed at the control of the Executive one penny further than Congress places it at his control. In the fair execution of a duty charged upon him, I believe it has been the general course to make contracts for such work in anticipation, but they are all conditional; they bind nobody. Congress may discontinue the work at any point it pleases; and, if it does so, the parties who have made contracts to supply materials are discharged from their obligations, and the Government is under no necessity of taking the materials.

Mr. BORLAND. I am very sorry to trouble the Senate again; but I must say that I do not think the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina do me justice. He represents me as eager to cast censure upon the President of the United States.

Mr. BADGER. I really thought so. If I am not correct, I beg pardon.

Mr. BORLAND. I think what I have said on introducing this resolution, indicates no such feeling or purpose. I stated that my object was to ascertain the truth of statements which had been made to me on such authority as at least to commend them to my respect. Now, if the friends of the Administration are not willing that I should ascertain—that the Senate should know—whether those statements be true or not, I am sorry for it; and it does indicate, if it indicates anything in respect to censure, not eagerness on my part to cast censure upon the President, for I have none, and zeal in casting censure, but it seems to me to indicate an unwillingness on the part of the friends of the President, and those who take the opposite ground, that these facts should come out, lest, when ascertained, they may not reflect very creditably upon his Administration. That seems to me to be the indication, if any there be.

Mr. BADGER. Who has manifested any such opposition to the facts coming out?

Mr. BORLAND. I have only asked for a statement of facts—for information which it is necessary for us to have before we can properly proceed to expend the public money. If all this has been done properly, and in accordance with law, there will be no fault to be found with the Administration. It is the information which we want, and which has not been furnished to us, and which no friend of the Administration here is prepared to give. No Senator here can say whether any, or, if any, what plan has been adopted for the prosecution of this work. We well know the course Congress took when it was first proposed to extend the Capitol. A committee of the two Houses was charged with the duty of calling architects before them, getting their views, and adopting and reporting a plan for the execution of this work. So important was it considered that a plan should be adopted before any propositions were made, or any steps taken in the execution of the work, that the committee was engaged for months upon the investigation. It was authorized to offer premiums to architects for plans, so that they might be sure to get the best. The committee was divided as to the plan. That of each House adopted a plan of its own. And these two plans, as I have understood, were laid before the President, that one or the other might be selected. Instead of taking either of these plans for the construction of a building for the uses and accommodation of the two Houses of Congress, and which should have had some adaptation to what they conceived to be their own wants, and comfort, and convenience, the President threw aside both of these, and adopted—what? Nobody knows what. I have been utterly unable to discover that there is now any regular or determinate plan. I, myself, before I vote an appropriation of money to continue this, or any other work, I must know within certain bounds, at least, what the work is to be. I want to know what is proposed to be done, and for Congress to pass upon the plan of the work, and say whether it is such as we are willing to have—such as is adapted to the purpose for which we ordered the extension of the Capitol—such as may suit our views of commodiousness and convenience in the discharge of our public duties, conserve our health, and promote our comfort, and present a structure to the public view in accordance with true architectural principles and taste.

I repeat, I have learned that very heavy contracts have been made for this work, which are to extend, in their expenditure, to the full limit, and even beyond the limit of time within which this Administration will be in power. Steps have been taken, as I learn,—and that is what I want to ascertain,—to make contracts beyond the time within which the Administration must retire from office, which may in effect, and may be intended, to hamper and cripple and render abortive the operations of a succeeding Administration, if that Administration should have views more fitted and better adapted to promote and protect the public interests.

I have introduced this resolution in order to put the Senate in possession of information which will enable them to decide on all these points, and not for the purpose of reflecting upon the President. These were my motives. An additional motive I had for some of the remarks which have accompanied its introduction, and that was to notice what I consider an unjustifiable attack on my motives for what I said on a former occasion—not because that attack was in a newspaper, but because that newspaper is the accredited organ of the Administration here at the seat of government.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator from Arkansas has said that there seems to be some disposition manifested by the friends of the Administration to prevent the obtaining of the information which he has called for.

Mr. BORLAND. I did not say so. In response to what was attributed to me, I did not charge that there was any such unwillingness; but I said, that if there was any indication manifested, it was an indication of unwillingness to supply this information.

Mr. BADGER. Well, take it in that way, and I want to know where there is a scintilla of evidence to support the intimation of the honorable Senator. I am a friend to the Administration. My single objection would have prevented the consideration of this resolution to-day. Nobody objected to its being considered. After it was considered by unanimous consent, was there a voice raised against it? Not one. But for the honorable Senator's speech, the resolution would have been adopted in three seconds. How, then, have we manifested a disposition, or given ground to imagine, that, in any event, we are opposed to obtaining this information? In no manner whatever.

The Senator proceeded to make some remarks in vindication of himself, from what he says was a charge made against him in a newspaper. To that I have no objection, though it is a kind of vindication which I am not in the habit of making on this floor. The Senator went further than that, and, in advance of the information which he called for, proceeded to throw out remarks casting an imputation on the President.

Mr. BORLAND. I made no imputation against him at all.

Mr. BADGER. I so understood the Senator. The Senator now says that the President of the United States instead of deciding, as he should have done, between the disagreeing committees of the two Houses, has undertaken, without authority, to adopt a plan of his own. Why, surely the Senator from Arkansas has not read the act of Congress which authorizes the commencement of this building. The two committees, if they had been unanimous, had no power over the subject—none in the world. The act of Congress submitted the plan upon which the building was to be erected entirely to the President. In his decision and judgment under that act he had no assessors at all. The two committees had been employed to collect and prepare plans, and they had been authorized to offer a reward in order to procure the best plan. They sent those plans to the President of the United States to aid him in coming to his conclusions; and, if I am not mistaken—and if I am, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] can correct me—the two committees, so far from supposing they had any authority over the subject, took care beforehand to ascertain whether the President would be glad to have those plans, with their views upon the subject, submitted to him. Now, he has done what the act of Congress directed him to do. He may have done it well or ill. About that I say nothing; but certainly he has done nothing unlawfully. He has not put his foot on the plans submitted by the two committees in derogation of their rights, or from a want of respect to Congress. If it was not intended that the President of the United States should decide on the plan upon which these wings were to be erected, why did the act of Congress submit it to him? It was not done by a Congress composed of his political friends, but by one with decided majorities politically opposed to him in both branches. Why was it done? I happened to be a member of the committee of conference by which the final terms of that part of the bill were settled. It was done by us because, as we understood, it had been the uniform custom to place the selection of plans for such buildings under the direction of the President of the United States. That, I believe, was the reason, and the sole reason. Whether he has done it right or wrong, I am not prepared to say. Whether he has adopted a good or a bad plan, I am not prepared to say. All that I say is, that the act of Congress gave him the sole authority of selecting the plan.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection to any call for information which the Senator from Arkansas may think necessary. I am willing that he shall have all the light which he desires on this subject. But perhaps it is just to the President, especially after what has fallen from the Senator from North Carolina, for me to say that the law as passed did give him the power of selecting a plan, and did not confine him to the plans of the committees of the two Houses. Those committees disagreed, and that was one reason why it was left to the President to select a plan. He did ask for the drawings which had been laid before the committees; he did invite both committees to meet him for the purpose of obtaining their views. I was present as a member of one of the committees, and I believe that all the members of both committees were present, and that he took their views in relation to the matter.

So far as the plan which has been adopted is concerned, I believe (and I should be sorry to believe otherwise) that all which concerns the interior of the building is still open to amendment if Congress should desire it. I believe that that will be examined by the committees hereafter, and that they will consult with the President in regard to it.

As to the information for which the Senator from Arkansas calls, I see no objection to it, and I am perfectly willing that he shall have it, but I am unwilling to believe that we shall be bound, in relation to the interior of the building, by any plan which may be adopted by the President, or any one else. I do not understand that he has decided on more than the exterior, and I think he will so report. I say this because the Committee on Public Buildings design to take up the subject, and to have something to say in regard to the interior of the building.

Mr. BORLAND. I did not desire to constitute myself the expounder of the views or the defender of the action of the Committee on Public Buildings, as I knew they were ready and competent to present them fairly before the Senate. But although the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] and the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] have said the law, as we passed it, did leave the subject to the discretion of the President, yet I did consider, and do now consider, that the clear meaning and the intention of the law was that the President should avail himself of the labors of the two committees, and of the means put in their possession, to get the best plans. My impression was, that it was intended that he should select from the plans presented by the committees. I may have been mistaken in that, but such was, I think, the intention of the law. I so understood it; I so understand it now.

The very remark which has been made by the Senator from Virginia, with regard to the plan of the work, is, it seems to me, a sufficient ground of itself for the resolution. Here we have a large work for the public interest and convenience, on which we are to expend a large amount of money. We have shown, as I before remarked, the great importance which we attached to a proper plan. Well, in disregard of the plans laid before the two committees, the work was begun, all the money which we appropriated has been expended; and, as I said, I learn on authority which I believe, and shall continue to credit, until its statements are disproved, that contracts to the amount of a million and a half of dollars have already been made; and yet it is stated, by those who profess to know, that there is no regular or determinate plan for the work—no system for the expenditure of these vast sums of the public money; except such as may, from time to time, at his discretion or caprice, spring from the mind of the President's architect, and upon his simple order. The very statement made by the Senator from Virginia, shows the necessity of the passage of this resolution.

Mr. BADGER. We are all in favor of it.

The resolution was then adopted.

THE STEAMER EDITH.

On the motion of Mr. SEWARD, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the following resolution, which was submitted by him on the 24th January:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to furnish the Senate, as early as practicable, with a copy of the proceedings of the Naval Court of Inquiry in relation to the loss of the United States steamer Edith, in 1849, together with copies of the correspondence which formed the ground of the order given to constitute said court, and of all the papers referred to in the record of proceedings; also, copies of all reports or charges made to the Department against any member composing said court in reference to conduct while attached to the Pacific squadron; copies of all correspondence between the Department and Commodore Thomas Ap Catesby Jones, relating to the said steamer Edith; copies of the correspondence with Richard W. Meade, late a lieutenant in the United States Navy during the year 1851; copy of the charges and specifications preferred by Lieutenant Thomas T. Craven against Commodore Jones in 1849 and 1850, with the reasons of the Department for not acting thereon; and copies of the correspondence between the Department and the commanders of the Pacific squadron, and all other officers of the Navy, in relation to the erection of a steam circular saw-mill in California, and the expenditures thereon.

Mr. SEWARD offered the following as an amendment, to come in at the end of the resolution:

Also, Commodore Jones's response to Lieutenant Craven's charges in reply to a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, dated September 7, 1850; also, copies of two letters from Commodore Jones, to the Secretary of the Navy, dated respectively December 7, 1850, and January 31, 1851, together with the charges and specifications against Lieutenant Thomas T. Craven, and the documents which accompanied said letters to the Secretary of the Navy for the trial of which a court-martial was demanded by Commodore Jones, and refused by the Secretary of the Navy.

Also, any correspondence between the Secretary of the Navy, the Commandant of the Boston navy-yard, the Commander of the sloop-of-war Falmouth, and Lieutenant R. W. Meade, between the 5th day of March and the 1st day of July, 1849, in relation to the appointment and transportation of said R. W. Meade, and other officers and engineers, from Boston to the Pacific, for the United States propeller Edith.

Mr. HUNTER. I am not disposed to vote for resolutions calling for proceedings which have been the subject of courts-martial. I do not see any use for this information. I do not see any practical good which is to arise from making such a call; and it may lead to dissensions in the Navy itself. I believe the discipline of the Navy has already suffered, from the fact that these calls are too frequently made, and we are exposing things which perhaps had better lie in the archives of the Department. These matters have been made the subject of investigation, as I understand it. Some of them at least have been the subject of a court-martial. Why open them again?

Mr. BADGER. I think there can be no objection to the adoption of the resolution. It is precisely such a resolution as was adopted at the close of the last session, in the case of the court-martial of Commodore Jones. There is no intention of subjecting the decision of the court-martial to a rehearing before the Senate; but the particular information called for is important to the gentleman interested in it. He wants the benefit of it.

Mr. SEWARD. The resolution was originally offered because complaint had been made by a late officer of the navy that injustice had been done him by a superior officer. For the purpose of obtaining all the facts of the case which were necessary to an understanding of the complaint, the resolution was offered. Commodore Jones, who was to be affected by the obtaining of the information, called upon me, and at his instance the matter was delayed until certain amendments, approved, as I understand, by him, were prepared. These have been suggested at his instance and that of his friends. These facts are stated for the purpose of showing that there is no design to obtain partial information. As I understand it, the resolution, with the amendment, meets with the consent and favor of all the parties interested in the information which is proposed to be brought forward for publication. At least I have offered it in no spirit of hostility, unkindness, or partiality towards either of the parties concerned.

Mr. HUNTER. I will ask if this resolution does not propose to call out papers and letters of complaint against Commodore Jones, upon which the Secretary of the Navy refused to institute charges at the time Commodore Jones was tried by a court-martial? and what is to be the effect of that but obvious injustice? It would have been better that he should have instituted the charge, if this is to be done, so that Commodore Jones might have met it upon that court-martial. To what are such calls likely to lead, but a renewal of dissensions and differences which exist to too great an extent already in the Navy? I know we have a right to call for this information and publish it to the world; but we have also a right, if we believe such things have been pushed too far to the injury of the discipline of the Navy, to refuse to make the call, unless some obvious necessity exists for it? I do not know that any necessity exists for this. I oppose it, not for the purpose of shielding Commodore Jones. I do not know that he has any objection to the resolution as it has been amended; but I oppose it because I believe such things are mischievous to the discipline of the Navy. I think we have already carried these calls too far. But I will not detain the Senate longer.

Mr. GWIN. At the last session of Congress, the colleague of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MASON,] at the instance of Commodore Jones, made a call for certain papers, which were furnished to the Senate, and ordered to be printed. In one of those papers there was a statement made by Commodore Jones, which has been printed, and is on our records, calling Lieutenant Meade, of the Navy, "a worthless officer." This publication was the first information that Lieutenant Meade had that such a term of reproach attached to him. Before he saw it, he had resigned his commission in the Navy, and he had no opportunity of calling for an inquiry. It was a dishonorable and ignominious term, to be applied to one officer of the Navy by another. There was, in his opinion, no remedy left but to call for certain papers which were filed in the Navy Department, and upon which he thought he had cause to complain; the Secretary of the Navy had refused to institute an inquiry.

Now, sir, I think that many papers have been published which should not have been called for, as the Senator from Virginia has stated; but here is a gentleman who was, but is now no longer, connected with the Navy, charged by a Commodore in the Navy, with being a "worthless officer." He wishes to have that charge investigated, and it is for that purpose that he comes before the Senate and asks that papers, which he thinks will relieve him from it, should be called for and published. I do not intend to cast the slightest censure upon Commodore Jones. I think he has been harshly treated. That is my opinion in regard to his case. But I think it is due to the gentleman who desires the information now asked for, and who was a gallant officer in the Navy, that the papers should at least be called for, and the Senate can publish them or not, as they please. I do not now say that they ought to be published; but they ought to be called for, and also those named in the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD,] which it is suggested are necessary to give a fair history of the transaction proposed to be investigated.

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator from California, who has examined this matter, perhaps, more than I have, says that this information is necessary to vindicate Lieutenant Meade's character against any aspersions, that would alter the case.

Mr. GWIN. That is the fact.

Mr. HUNTER. But I ask if the resolution does not call for information which in nowise concerns Lieutenant Meade—information not in relation to matters in which Commodore Jones was connected with him, but in relation to matters in which Lieutenant Meade had no concern? If such is the case, ought the Senate to make itself a party to any such quarrel? Upon the merits of it, as to whether Commodore Jones or Lieutenant Meade is right, I do not intend to decide, but I say that in such a matter as that we ought not to interfere.

Mr. MALLORY. We have clearly a right to call for the information asked for by the Senator from New York, but the only objection is as to the expediency of making the call. One objection, upon the ground of expediency, is, that it may possibly involve charges against Commodore Jones which have been presented to the Secretary of the Navy, and upon which he has refused to act. Another objection is, that it may affect the discipline of the Navy. Now, from the little information which I possess upon that subject, I am free to say that the discipline of the Navy cannot be further injured. It is beyond all injury. I doubt if such a term can possibly be applied to the Navy. But Commodore Jones, whom I have not the pleasure of knowing, is a public officer. I know nothing of any charges which are brought against him; but if there does exist, in the mind of the Senator, any reason why this information should be brought forth, I should be glad to see it. The reputation of an officer of the Navy should not only bear the trial of an investigation, but it should be above reproach; and if it cannot bear the investigation of papers which may be brought in in this way, the Senate ought to know it.

Mr. HALE. I confess that upon all these calls for the opinion and proceedings of courts-martial in relation to the relative rights of officers, I feel the most profound indifference, and for this reason: The honorable Senator from Florida says that the discipline of the Navy is beyond being injured; by which I understand him to mean that it is so bad already, that it cannot be made worse. But I call upon you, Mr. President, and the Senate to notice this fact, that whenever a complaint is made that the rights of the private are trampled upon, the Senate are dumb, and there is no call for information and papers. It is not more than ten years since a subordinate officer in the American Navy said that if he brought home some men there was no punishment, for the worst crimes, for those who had money and friends; and to prevent their falling into the hands of the administration of justice in a country where money and friends could protect them from punishment for the worst crimes, he hung them up to the yard-arm of the vessel, without the form of a trial. We have never been able to get the proceedings in that case before the Senate. They have been repeatedly asked for, but they have never been, and I suppose never will be ordered. I suppose it was in allusion to the fact that citizens were thus hung up to the yard-arm without the form of law, that the honorable Senator from Florida based his assertion that the discipline of the Navy is so bad that it cannot be made worse, which I understand him to say.

Now, sir, until we begin to look at some of these gross outrages upon, and violations of, the rights of private individuals, I am willing to let officers fight their own battles. I will not interpose with any call of the Senate until we begin at the beginning. You know that, at the last session of Congress, there was a very respectable memorial brought here, signed by great numbers of the citizens of the neighborhood where the occurrence took place, representing that a cruel and unusual punishment had been inflicted upon a private soldier in the Army of the United States. We could not get those proceedings printed. Oh, no! nothing of that sort could be done. Nobody but the private soldiers were concerned. But when you come to the officers there is great danger of the discipline of the Army being outraged, and the Senate is to be appealed to. I do not know of any application that has ever been made for publishing the proceedings of a court-martial, either in the Army or Navy, in which an officer was concerned, that has not been granted. We publish just what is wanted in such a case as that; but when the rights of the sailor or soldier are trampled upon, there is no remedy—no body cares about it, no body wants information; even if a sailor is hung, let him go, he is but a sailor—you can hire them for ten or twelve dollars a month. If the Senate will begin at the beginning, and vindicate the rights of private individuals, I will then look out for the officers; but until then it is a matter of the most perfect indifference to me.

Mr. SEWARD. I have only one word to say on this subject. During what little experience I have had in legislation here and elsewhere, I have never voted against any call for information in regard to the conduct of public officers, whether political or personal friends of mine, or otherwise. When we shall once have established the precedent that any officer is beyond the reach of investigation into his conduct, upon a fair claim made by any person, I think there will be some danger to be apprehended that greater evils will occur in administrations than have ever yet occurred.

Mr. SHIELDS. I agree with the honorable Senator from New York, but I cannot perceive the object of this call. If the object is one of investigation, very well. If it is to be sent to a committee for some action, it is very well. If we can take any action upon it when it comes to us, except barely to publish it, I am willing to vote for it. But I think it is going very far, when we call upon the Department to send us letters, documents, charges, specifications, &c., merely for the purpose of publication. If we continue that, and follow it up, we will occupy the time of the Senate more in matters of that kind than we will in legitimate business. I hold that, when the object is to refer the subject-matter of a court-martial to a committee, in order to reexamine the matter, and provide for the redress of some person who is supposed to be injured, it is legitimate business for the Senate; but when it is a quarrel between two officers, and one wants to expose the other, and wants to make the Senate an instrument for the purpose of that exposition, I object. I think it would be unjust to the service, unjust to the officers, and unjust to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. COOPER. I rise to express my concurrence in the views of the Senator from Illinois. I do not know precisely the object of the amendment to the resolution, and I am afraid that it is to afford to one officer some advantage in a personal controversy over another. I know that there has been a quarrel in progress between the two officers named in the resolution, and I apprehend that the Senate is to be made the medium through which one of them will be the better able to assail the character of the other. Believing that, I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania, that if he is going to vote for the resolution, the amendment is necessary, in order to do justice to Commodore Jones.

Mr. COOPER. I shall vote against the whole.

Mr. PRATT. I do not, perhaps, properly understand this question; but it seems to me that it is one of power on the part of the Senate of the United States. Have we any power over the subject to which this resolution relates? What can we do? The gentleman who asks for the papers is no longer in the Navy. It is not proposed that he shall be reinstated in the Navy. What, then, are we to do by obtaining this information? Here is a gentleman who was once in the Navy. Prior to his resignation a charge was made against him. He had resigned, it is said, without knowing anything of that charge; and now he asks that these papers shall be brought to the Senate of the United States, for no other purpose—because there can be no other legitimate purpose—than to have them published to the world. We have no power over the subject. It is not asked that we shall interest ourselves to have this officer reinstated in the Navy. What power have we over a charge made by an officer of the Navy against a citizen of the United States? If he has been injured, he has his remedy, as you or I have, if any charge is made detrimental to our character. He, not being an officer in the Navy, has only the same powers that we have, as individuals. I do not see that the Senate can properly use the information asked for by the resolution, and therefore I am opposed to both the resolution and the amendment.

Mr. RUSK. As I understand this matter, it proceeds upon another ground than our power to take any legislative action upon the information. If I have understood it correctly, Commodore Jones was tried by a court-martial. At his instance, the Senate then called for certain papers which he imagined were necessary to vindicate his character against the charges made by the court-martial. In answer to that call there comes a letter making a serious charge against a gentleman who was a lieutenant in the Navy, but who has since resigned; and it is published to the world over the signature of Commodore Jones.

Mr. BADGER. We published it.

Mr. RUSK. This gentleman desires that all the facts shall come out, as to the charge of his being a worthless officer; which charge was published by the action of the Senate. As he says—so I am told—that he cannot procure these letters from the Secretary of the Navy, I think, without knowing anything about the merits of the controversy, it is nothing but just to him, when we have called for information against him, that we should procure the information in his favor.

Mr. CASS. I suppose no member of the Senate claims the right of overruling the constitutional power of the President, as Commander-in-Chief. I do not suppose we mean to review the proceedings of the court-martial with the view of overturning them. But I take it for granted that, in our legislative capacity, we have a general right and duty to overlook all the concerns of the Government. We have a right to call for the proceedings of a military or naval court-martial, with a view to ascertain what abuses are committed, and what legislation is required to correct them and prevent them thereafter. That, I think, is within the scope of our legislative duty. But I agree with my friend from Illinois, that I would not suffer the records of this Senate to be the vehicle of criminations and recriminations between gentlemen in the Army and Navy. I believe it would be almost impossible to hold a court-martial in which different sides would not be taken, and passions excited. There will be, and there have been, ever since the first court-martial was held, and there will be to the latest, criminations and recriminations. Are we to suffer our records to be the vehicles for those charges? If any practical result is to follow the adoption of this resolution—if it is claimed that legislation may be required upon it—I am prepared to vote for it; but I will never vote for a resolution that looks merely to the publication of the criminations and recriminations of different officers.

Mr. SHIELDS. If the circumstances be as represented by the honorable Senator from Texas, it will alter my course in this particular case, because, according to my rule in these cases, we ought either not to begin a thing of this kind, or we should go on to the end. But I think that this may have a salutary effect in guarding us against hasty action hereafter. If we have commenced this thing and called for a part of the proceedings, and if the part which has been placed before the country does injustice to one of the parties, and he calls for the residue in justice to himself, that state of things alters the case altogether.

But I come back to the original principle, and I am happy to find my friend from Michigan, who has had experience in these matters, take the same ground that I take. I have myself witnessed the fact that we are calling day after day and week after week for matters that have no legitimate concern with the ordinary business of legislation, merely for the purpose of publishing them to the world. I hope that this debate and the action upon this case may check us hereafter. I would ask the Senator who offered this resolution, whether a part of the proceedings has already been published, and whether this is a call for the residue?

Mr. SEWARD. That is the fact.

Mr. SHIELDS. If that be the case, it will alter my course on this occasion.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the Senator say that any of the proceedings in relation to Lieutenant Meade have been published? In the proceedings of the court-martial in relation to Commodore Jones, which were published, there appeared a letter from Commodore Jones to the Secretary of the Navy, in which he referred to Lieutenant Meade, and said, I believe, that he was a worthless officer. Lieutenant Meade now comes here for the purpose of discrediting Commodore Jones, and calls for information which does not at all relate to himself, or to his own case, but which

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS, $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, MARCH 26, 1852.

NEW SERIES. No. 54.

relates to certain charges which were preferred against Commodore Jones by one of his junior officers. If we had that information, where would we end? Lieutenant Meade comes and asks the Senate to call for information which may criminate Commodore Jones. In reply, Commodore Jones will come and say, I must be allowed to ask for information to show that Lieutenant Meade was a worthless officer. Thus, we shall have the Senate trying an issue which does not concern our legislative duties. I admit that we have a right to call for the information; but I object to it, on the ground of expediency. If we do it, we shall find the Senate trying a mere issue of personal character, and not at all relating to our legislative duties. I ask, if it is not more prudent that we should abstain from it? I imagine that it was not necessary for the Secretary of the Navy to have sent to us that letter of Commodore Jones; but I suspect, that if we looked into the matter, we should find that it originated in no malice towards Lieutenant Meade. But it having appeared under the resolution calling for information in regard to the court-martial on Commodore Jones, shall we proceed further in trying this issue of personal character?

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the Senator permit me to ask, if the papers originally published were in a different case?

Mr. HUNTER. Certainly they were; or, rather, they were no part of this case of Lieutenant Meade. The papers originally published had no connection with Lieutenant Meade, except this: When the papers in relation to the court-martial held upon Commodore Jones were called for, the Secretary of the Navy reported a letter from Commodore Jones, when he was commander of the Pacific Squadron, in which he said that Lieutenant Meade was a worthless officer.

Mr. GWIN. I can, perhaps, give the exact information in regard to it. The Secretary of the Navy addressed a communication to Commodore Jones, containing the charges which were brought against him, and called for an explanation. Commodore Jones addressed a confidential letter to the Secretary of the Navy, giving an explanation of those charges, in which letter he calls Lieutenant Meade a "worthless officer." Subsequently, when a court-martial was called, that confidential letter was laid before it. Through a friend of Commodore Jones, the papers in his case were called for, and his confidential letter came with them and was published. In explanation of this, I will say, that Lieutenant Meade charged that Commodore Jones had failed in his duty in placing him in the post of commander of the Edith, at San Francisco, and also that there was a discrepancy between the letters of the Commodore to him (Lieutenant Meade) and the orders of the Navy Department. It was a charge of falsehood against Commodore Jones; and he, in the confidential letter to which I have alluded, refers to Lieutenant Meade as a "worthless officer." Lieutenant Meade complains of that term of reproach, and says he knew nothing of the charge until he had left the Navy, or he could have demanded a Court of Inquiry, to decide whether he was a "worthless officer." He was ignorant of the charge until he had left the Navy; he asks that all the papers having a bearing on the case may be called for; but I will not sanction any call that will do injustice to Commodore Jones, or give an ex parte statement of his acts.

I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate in talking further upon the subject.

Mr. BADGER. I have been very much struck with, and concur in, the observations of the Senators from Illinois [Mr. SHIELDS] and Michigan [Mr. Cass.] I have been in the habit, ever since I have been a member of the Senate, of constantly, without question, uniting in the call for the proceedings of courts-martial when they were asked for by a Senator. I am persuaded, from what has taken place now, that the Senate ought not to indulge in this course, and that we ought to retrace our steps, and not engage in making such calls without clear and strong reasons. But, as my friend from Illinois said the other day, we ought either to stop before we begin, or not stop until we end. If the Senate will attend for one moment to the resolution that was adopted at the last session, in relation to the proceedings of the court-martial of Commodore Jones, they will see that this call has arisen from that resolution calling, not merely for the proceedings of the court-martial, but for other matters. It reads as follows:—

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of the record and proceedings of the Naval Court Martial recently held at Washington, for the trial of Thos. Ap Catesby Jones, a Post Captain in the Navy."

I imagine, if the resolution had stopped there, this difficulty would not have arisen. But it goes on:

"Together with any correspondence that may have passed between the Secretary of the Navy and Commodore Jones, relating to his arrest and trial, between the 7th of September, 1850, and the 18th of January, 1851, inclusive."

We bring out this correspondence between the Secretary of the Navy and Commodore Jones. In one of his letters, Commodore Jones makes the imputation upon the character of Lieutenant Meade; and, in consequence of our proceeding, of our not merely calling for the record of the court, but for the said correspondence, and then having it published to the world, he asks that the full correspondence may be published, in order that it may appear what the facts really are, he having resigned without a knowledge of the charge, of which he never knew anything until we published it. The question is, whether the Senate will now stop, having begun; or whether they will complete and correct, as far as they can, the mistake which they have made, and then take care how they interfere hereafter.

Mr. COOPER. I desire to say that the explanation which has been given by the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk,] and the resolution which has been read by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] satisfy me that we ought to go on now, and have the information which is called for. I was under the apprehension, in the first place, that it was for the purpose of adding new censure to an old injury, which I conceive to have been done to Lieutenant Meade, who is as gallant a man as there is in the Navy of the United States. I am, therefore, in favor of the resolution.

Mr. HALE. I also wish to say, that the remarks of the Senator from Texas have satisfied me of the propriety of obtaining this information and publishing it; because this case comes very nearly within the category which I have suggested. My complaint was, that the proceedings in vindication of private citizens were never listened to. It seems that Lieutenant Meade has resigned his place in the navy, and is now a private citizen. This, therefore, will be one precedent, which I wish to see established, of the Senate interfering to protect the reputation of a private individual. Therefore, I am in favor of getting this information.

The amendment was agreed to, and the resolution, as amended, was adopted; there being, on a division, ayes 23, noes not counted.

UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. HUNTER. I move that the Senate take up the act amendatory to the act providing for the holding of the courts of the United States in case of sickness, for the purpose of acting on the amendment which has been returned from the House.

Mr. BRADBURY. I hope it will not be taken up for this reason: It is suggested to me that it becomes very desirable that the act should be made applicable to the District of Columbia, and it may be desired to engraft an amendment upon it to that effect.

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator, who is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, asks that the bill should lie over for the present, I withdraw my proposition.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BADGER. Before the special order is announced, I wish to suggest that I think it will be rather better for us, upon the whole, not to proceed to its consideration now; but let us have an understanding that we shall take it up to-morrow, promptly, at the hour of one o'clock, and dispose of it. I think that we can much better employ ourselves to-day in disposing of some matters of importance and interest in Executive session, which ought to have been disposed of long ago. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. BRADBURY. It will be recollected that it was the general understanding that the French spoliation bill was to be called up to-day; but it is now too late. I wish simply to notify the Senate that I shall insist upon taking it up as soon as the bill which was under consideration yesterday shall have been disposed of.

Mr. HALE. I wish further to add, that I think we have been rather slighting a gentleman who formerly had the honor of occupying a seat on this floor, and I shall therefore move, at some future day, that the Senate proceed to consider the resolution concerning the finality of the compromise. [Laughter.] I think that it ought to be attended to.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business. After some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 24, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock; Mr. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. HOUSTON moved that the rules be suspended; and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

ARMY EXPENSES.

Mr. HALL asked the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform this House of the amount expended by the United States, for forage, quarters, fuel, and transportation, for the use of the army, per man, in New Mexico, during the war with the Republic of Mexico; and also the amount expended on the same account, since the termination of said war; and also the amount expended during said war for said objects for the use of the army, per man, stationed on the route from Missouri to Oregon, during said war, and the amount expended, as last aforesaid, since the termination of the war.

Mr. BROOKS. I have no objection to the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri, if he will extend it so as to embrace the expenses, and the details of the quartermaster's department; if he will add on a like demand for the details of quartermasters' expenditures throughout the Mexican war, and the Indian Florida war—an Indian war resembling in some respect the numerous Indian wars now going on, except that they are going on immense distances off—we can then make comparisons, and have fair statements.

Mr. HALL. My object is to get some information that will enable us to act upon the subject now before the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BROOKS. I object, then, to the resolution, unless it goes further back.

SIGNAL LIGHTS.

Mr. FLORENCE, by unanimous consent of the House, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of prescribing by law or regulation, the number, character, and position of signal lights, to be borne by steamers, and sailing vessels, between sunset and sunrise, on the waters of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me that this subject would more appropriately go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOUSTON. I must insist on my motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The resolution having been received by unanimous consent, it is too late now to object to its consideration.

Mr. WALSH. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words, "the Committee on Naval Affairs," and inserting "the Committee on Commerce." Kindred inquiries are now in progress before that Committee.

Mr. FLORENCE. I apprehend that the subject belongs legitimately to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The law or regulation would have to be adopted in vessels of the United States, and that would establish the law so far as the commercial marine of the country is concerned. I have no objection, however, to its going to the Committee on Commerce, and will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was then taken on the resolution as modified, and it was agreed to.

CLAIM OF GEORGE METCALFE.

Mr. HARPER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims inquire into the expediency of paying to George Metcalfe, of Ohio, the sum of $140, being the amount of his claim for damages arising from the building of the bridge over Will's creek, on the Cumberland road; said amount having been allowed to him by the Secretary of War, on the 28th day of September, 1829.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. FOWLER. I would ask the gentleman from Alabama to waive his motion for a moment, for the purpose of allowing me to ask the House to permit the morning hour to be taken up in presenting reports from committees. There are probably more than a hundred such reports in our drawers, and several of us have had them for weeks, but have had no opportunity of presenting them. Now, if the gentleman from Alabama will withdraw his motion, and allow the morning hour to be thus occupied, with the understanding that no debate shall take place, we can present those reports and bills.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees for reports will be in order if the House refuses to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the Committee on Public Lands being the first to be called.

Mr. FOWLER. Will it not be in order to call the committees for reports, with a general understanding that the bills shall be referred without debate?

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, that is my sole object.

Mr. APPLETON, of Maine. There are bills, also, upon the Speaker's table which had better be disposed of.

Mr. FOWLER. I am willing to dispose of those also.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. FLOYD asked leave to withdraw from the files of the House, the papers in the case of Jeptha A. Wilkinson, for the purpose of returning them to the memorialist.

Mr. ORR. Is it not unusual to withdraw the papers and return them to the memorialists?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman copies the papers, there will be no objection.

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I insist on my motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then taken on Mr. Houston's motion, and it was agreed to—ayes 80, noes not counted.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SREANT in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The business before the committee is House bill No. 207, to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1852; the following clause of the bill being under consideration.

"For constructing, repairing, and enlarging barracks, quarters, hospitals, store-houses, stables, wharves, and ways, at the several posts and army depots, for temporary cantonments, and the authorized furniture for barracks, rooms of non-commissioned officers and soldiers, gun-houses for the protection of cannon, including the necessary tools and materials for the objects enumerated, and for rent of quarters, and offices for officers, and barracks and hospitals for troops, where there are no public buildings for their accommodation, for store-houses for the safe-keeping of military stores, and of grounds for summer cantonments and encampments, $219,000."

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] had proposed to amend the above by striking out "$219,000," and inserting "$100,000." To which amendment, his colleague [Mr. MASON] had proposed an amendment to increase the amount $12.

The question was taken upon the two several amendments, and they were rejected.

The next paragraph of the bill was then reported by the Clerk, as follows:

"For clothing, camp, and garrison equipage; and horse equipments, for engineers, troops, ordnance department, dragoons, riflemen, light-artillery, artillery and infantry, $75,000."

Mr. GORMAN. I move to reduce the appropriation $5,000.

Mr. Chairman, upon this item the honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. HOUSTON] yesterday remarked, that if I had examined it, I should not have fallen into this blunder. I said then, to the House, that there had been appropriated $242,538 65, for the clothing and other equipage of the army, in the regular army bill. I said then that some $80,000 had been diverted from the purpose for which Congress had appropriated it, and that it had been paid to the officers of the Army. I said that there was a law authorizing the transfer of sums of money from one point to another to meet the necessary expenses of the Government; but that can only take place when there was a surplus. That is the law; and if the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means had been as well posted upon it as he might have been, he would not have fallen into the blunder which he did upon this point. Now, the quartermaster general says he inquired at the Treasury, and found that the balance, $80,538 65, had been applied to the settlement of paymasters and other officers' accounts; some of them originating in the war with Mexico.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a point of order. We have not yet settled what is to be the action of the committee upon this bill. If we go on with this general debate, we shall never dispose of the bill. I am perfectly willing that it should go on if the committee wish it. I feel bound again this morning, at the beginning of the debate, to make the point of order which I made yesterday. I understand the motion of the gentleman to be to reduce this appropriation $5,000; and in support of his amendment he is reviewing my argument made yesterday, and going into a general debate upon the propriety or impropriety of transferring the public money from one head of appropriation to another. I understand the rule to be that he must confine himself to the discussion of this one item.

Mr. GORMAN. I am upon that identical item in the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. You are upon the item, but not the argument—

Mr. GORMAN. I am upon the precise argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman must confine himself strictly to giving reasons why this appropriation should be reduced to $5,000. The Chair cannot see the relevancy of the course of argument the gentleman was pursuing when he was called to order by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON.]

Mr. GORMAN. If the Chair cannot see the relevancy of my remarks I will try to enlighten him upon the subject.

I said I wanted to reduce the appropriation $5,000; and that was my motion. I said that the quartermaster general estimated the last year, for this item, $242,000, and that he did not use all the money appropriated, but that $80,000 had been diverted to another purpose, and expended for another object. Now, I say this appropriation of $75,000 is not necessary. And why? Because we have already appropriated the amount, and more than the amount, asked for—more than $75,000—which has been diverted to another purpose, without authority of law. What authority had they to divert it from the particular object for which it was appropriated? They could not do it unless there was a surplus for the object for which it was originally designed; but it seems that, instead of there being a surplus, there was a deficiency. The quartermaster general says it has been appropriated to paymasters—to settle the paymaster's accounts, some of them originating in the war with Mexico. I do not care where they originated. I have not time to go into these specific items in a five minutes' speech; but if I had, I could detail some of these items coming under this head, by which gentlemen would then see how much necessity there was for this appropriation of $75,000. Why, there has been sold, I apprehend, $150,000 worth of clothing, which has been on hand perhaps twelve months in the quartermaster's department. I learn that this is a fact, though I have not been officially informed of it. And why were they sold? Because they had been on hand a little longer than those connected with that department thought they ought to have been. Now, if this item, which was taken from them and appropriated for the use of the army, had been applied as it was intended it should be, there would have been no necessity for this $75,000.

It is impossible for gentlemen upon this floor to recite the items connected with this appropriation in five minutes, and I cannot do it now; but I can say to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that I have taken pains—a good deal of pains—to examine every item and specific object connected with it; and if he will call at my desk, I can show him those items. Here are some of them: There are troops stationed in New Mexico, California, and Texas, amounting to 2,712; now there are 1,000 employees in the quartermaster's department—1,000 men employed to haul provisions for and feed 2,712 soldiers!

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. EVANS. I did not hear the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] very distinctly; but I understood him to say that there was no law authorizing a transfer of an appropriation from one branch of a department to another.

Mr. GORMAN. I said there was no such authority, unless there was a surplus.

Mr. EVANS. Well, sir, I beg to refer the gentleman to the act of the 26th of August, 1842. It may be found in the fifth volume of the Statutes at Large. If the gentleman will look at that he will find that he is entirely mistaken. That act especially provides for such a transfer of appropriations. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the gentleman's remarks upon his proposition to reduce the amount of appropriation in this section, I could show, if time allowed, that his argument is not well founded.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish the gentleman would allow me to read these estimates. I am sure the gentleman does me injustice.

Mr. EVANS. I have not time to hear them read now; and I certainly intend to do no injustice to the gentleman.

Mr. GORMAN. These estimates of the quartermaster general explain all.

Mr. EVANS. I cannot have my time taken up. I will take back all I said in relation to them.

Mr. GENTRY. No, do not take it back.

Mr. EVANS. I tell the gentleman from Tennessee I want to save my time, and therefore I will take it back, in a Pickwickian sense. I want to make a proposition to the other side of the House. I appeal to my friends there, that they should not insist upon cutting down these appropriations while they continue to maintain the Army and Navy, and the civil and diplomatic corps in their full force. I venture to say that no one upon this side of the House will interpose any objection to their introducing a bill or bills, to-morrow, making provision for cutting down the army, and for cutting off the forage from the troops in New Mexico, if it is not, as gentlemen say, necessary to provide them with forage.

Mr. HALL. I have no doubt the gentleman would be perfectly satisfied to have Congress make the appropriation and take the responsibility, while the Whig Administration in power draws the pay.

Mr. EVANS. I hope the gentleman will not take up my time.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am compelled to arise to a question of order.

Mr. EVANS. I hope the Chairman will allow me my full time, for gentlemen, by their interruptions, have somewhat disarranged my ideas.

Gentlemen have said that forage was not necessary for horses in New Mexico, because the Government did not pay for forage to Doniphan's troops. If no money for forage was received by those troops, it was because they quartered themselves upon the enemy; but what enemy can our troops be now quartered upon? Must they plunder the people they are sent to protect? Doniphan's troops did not do without forage; but they got it without pay. Now, do gentlemen want to throw the army upon the same resources, in a friendly country which we are bound to defend and protect? If they really honestly wish to diminish expenses, let them bring in a bill to-morrow, and I will venture to say not one gentleman upon this side of the House will object to it. Bring in a bill cutting off this forage. Bring in another cutting off the supplies for the subsistence department. Bring in another cutting down your army. Cut down your navy. Reduce your civil corps. Make all these reforms, and we will not object to the introduction of your bills. Let gentlemen bring in their bills for true reform, if they wish to reduce the appropriations, and not attempt to reduce them while they continue the army and navy in their full force.

Mr. HOUSTON. I must rise to a question of order. I am sure gentlemen desire to get through with this bill.

Mr. EVANS. Why, we will get up quite a reform if you let me go on.

Mr. HOUSTON. I must object to this irrelevant debate. I desire to see the committee voting upon the bill; and I am sure the committee are anxious to dispose of it. I make this point of order, and I intend to insist upon it. The gentleman is not debating the amendment under consideration.

Mr. EVANS. My friend, knowing that I am a good-natured man, makes all his points of order upon me.

Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly not. I made a point upon the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DUNHAM,] the other day, but it was overruled by the Chair. I do hope this sort of debate will not be continued.

The CHAIR. The Chair is of the opinion that the remarks of the gentleman from Maryland are not in order.

Mr. EVANS. I thought the Chair decided the other day that a wide range of debate could be allowed upon a proposition to strike out an entire clause of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now before the committee is not to strike out an entire clause in the bill, but to strike out simply the word "seventy," reducing the amount of the appropriation from $75,000 to $5,000. The Chair thinks the gentleman was not confining his remarks to the articles specified in the clause under consideration; but was discussing those in the clause immediately preceding it, and he therefore rules that the gentleman's remarks were not in order.

Mr. EVANS. The Chair is clearly right in his decision.

Now, with what propriety can the gentleman undertake to reduce this appropriation to $5,000? Can he with any honesty—I do not mean personal, but political honesty—as a statesman, undertake to cut off this appropriation, when he insists upon the continuance of Government policy—policy which requires the money this section of the bill provides for? I tell the gentleman again, that if he wishes to bring this reduction about, he must go to work in a different manner. If forage, for instance, is not necessary, as has been asserted, let him bring in a bill cutting it off; let him move to put the bill on its passage; let him diminish the army, the navy—in a word, all branches of the Government generally. His party has a large majority in this and in the other branch of Congress, and they can pass their bills, and that will place them in a position consistent with themselves. Why, I tell gentlemen upon the other side of the House, that if their party should come into power—which, for the sake of the Republic, God forbid!—for the next four years, being then obliged to vote these large sums of money for the quartermaster's department which they now desire to refuse, they will then be taunted with their extravagance; and having, by their action now, foreclosed themselves from any answer; they will be placed in a position of such inconsistency that it will become a matter of greater embarrassment than they can imagine.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The next section, being "for pay of five companies of Texas mounted volunteers, $80,741," was then read.

Mr. BROOKS. I move to strike out that section. I do it for the purpose of hearing what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HOWARD] has to say upon the subject. I wish to say that this item, and the one before it for subsistence, are not deficiencies created by this Administration.

Mr. HOWARD. I have only to say, that these troops were called into the service of the United States by the order of the commanding general of that division, and that they served out their time, but the last Congress neglected to make an appropriation for their payment; in other words, because the department neglected to estimate the expenses which were to become due for these services in their estimate submitted to the last Congress, the appropriation was not made. It is, therefore, properly a deficiency; and now that I am up, I wish to notice one or two observations which fell from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] on yesterday. He says and urges that we shall cut down the supplies of the quartermaster's department; and his economy would result in this: He is opposed to cutting down appropriations for pay for subsistence, and for clothing for the army, but he wishes to reduce the quartermaster's department. Now, what would be the result of that? You would incur four fifths of the expense for the support of the army; but, by withholding supplies from the quartermaster's department, you would render it impossible for the general to make any movement of his troops in the field, or to make any disposition of them which will be an effectual protection of the frontier; because every man knows that the quartermaster's supplies are the life-blood of the movements of the army in the field; and that unless they have the supplies, you might as well disband the army. The gentleman's economy would be to keep up the expenses of the army, and yet put it in such a condition that it could not move or act in the field.

Well, sir, the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] was equally at fault in relation to this matter. He argues that the men should be mounted on Mustang ponies; that the troops should not be fed; and that this species of force should be put in pursuit of the Indians. Now, I would like to see the gentleman upon a bob-tail pony, fed upon grass, in pursuit of Indians well mounted, and who ride as expertly as any riders in the world.

There is another fact connected with this matter. When an Indian goes upon an expedition, he goes with four or six horses. And what chance would the gentleman have, with his single pony, of overtaking the Indian with his four or six well fed ponies?

Mr. ORR, (interrupting.) I would like to ask the gentleman what the Indians feed their horses upon? He says the Indians are well mounted, and the horses well fed.

Mr. HOWARD. They feed their horses upon grass; but there is a difference between one horse, and five or six horses to ride. The Indian rides one horse until he runs him down, or tires him out, and then he takes another. But your dragoon is to be mounted upon one grass-fed pony, and he is to ride that pony until he overtakes the Indians, and then is to make a charge upon them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BROOKS,] and it was disagreed to.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I rise to inquire whether it is in order to move to lay aside so much of this bill as relates to the quartermaster's supplies, to be reported by the committee to the House, with a recommendation that it be referred to a select committee, with instructions? I do not propose to strike it all out.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] that he can attain that object by moving to strike out all in this bill pertaining to the quartermaster's department. If the House will strike it out, it can then be referred to a select committee.

Mr. MARSHALL. If it is in order, then, with the view that when we get into the House we may have the yeas and nays upon this part of the deficiency bill, I move to strike it all out, from line thirty to line ninety, with the understanding that when we get into the House, if it is stricken out, I will then move that it be referred to a select committee, with instructions.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] that he misunderstood the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.] It is not in order now, in committee, to move to strike out the appropriations for the quartermaster's department, for the reason that they have been passed by the committee, and the committee have refused to strike them out. They are now, so far as this committee is concerned, adopted. It may be in order to move to strike out in the House, but it clearly is not in order to move that in the committee now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state his view of the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL.] The Chair thinks that if the motion had been made in time, before the committee had passed from the sections proposed to be stricken out to other sections, the motion would have been in order; but that it is now too late, the committee having passed by that portion of the bill, and also three or four other clauses subsequent to it.

Mr. ORR. The course indicated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] can be followed, provided that he will, when the bill gets into the House, yield the floor to allow the motion to be made to strike out, before he moves the previous question.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is not in order. I have no arrangement to make in regard to it.

Mr. EVANS. The rule which the Chair has laid down is undoubtedly correct as to every bill containing more than one section; but this is a bill of one section merely; and it seems to me—and I submit it to the Chair with all due respect—that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] had a right to go back at any time to any portion of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] that the language of the rule is not section, but clause, and prescribes that the bill shall be read through; and that that it shall be read and considered by its clauses, not sections.

Mr. MARSHALL. I withdraw my motion, under the decision of the Chair, with the understanding that, if I can, I will make the motion to the House.

Mr. BROOKS. I want to inquire if the committee have passed lines one hundred and seven and one hundred and eight—"for surveying private claims in California $7,500?"

The CHAIRMAN. They have been read.

Mr. BROOKS. I wanted to move to strike them out, together with the preceding clause, in regard to subdividing fifty townships in California, for the purpose of hearing the gentleman from California [Mr. McCORKLE] upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. It is still in order to move the amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. I then make the motion. I will here remark, in passing, that I see that the Governor of California, in his late message, says, that under the swamp land bill which the previous Congress passed, all the arable lands of California belong to her—amounting to some 10,000,000 of acres, I think. If that be the fact, it is hardly necessary to incur this additional expense, for the purpose of surveying them. Most of the lands of California are necessarily irrigated, and when irrigated, become swamp lands; and it is wiser, therefore, for us, if the Governor of California is correct, to strike out these two items, and make no more appropriations. But my object in making the motion, is to hear the gentleman from California defend the two items; and if they are correct, I am willing to vote for them.

Mr. McCORKLE. I would inquire of the gentleman from New York, if the first item to which he refers is contained in the hundred and seventh and hundred and eighth lines?

Mr. BROOKS. The items to which I refer, are from line one hundred and four to line one hundred and eight, inclusive.

Mr. McCORKLE. I will state, for the information of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] and others, that so far as the message of the Governor is concerned, his estimates, in regard to the public lands in California, are founded upon his own individual opinion. The arable lands of California have not yet been surveyed. We claim, of course, under the law granting, originally, to Arkansas and to other States, all the swamp lands of California. We claim that they are the property of the State, for a specific purpose; under the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, that all lands subject to periodical overflow, are to be included under the head of swamp lands. Under that decision, a large portion of the public lands in California will fall to that State. There is no question about that. But I differ in opinion with the Governor of that State, in regard to the number of acres which cannot be included under the head of swamp lands. This item, if divided among fifty townships of California for surveying them, is a proper item; for the reason that I believe there are more than three times that number of townships of land in that State, which will belong to the United States, after we have set aside those lands subject to periodical overflow.

Mr. POLK, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman from California allow me to ask him a question? Has the money been expended which was appropriated before towards this object?

Mr. McCORKLE. I will state in reply to the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, that as yet the office of surveyor general in California cannot be said to be created at all.

Mr. POLK. Then will the gentleman allow me to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means? It is this: How comes it that an original appropriation finds its way into this deficiency bill?

Mr. McCORKLE. I will answer that question. Twenty-five thousand dollars were appropriated at the last session of Congress for the purpose of surveying the public lands in California. That amount of money, I presume, has been expended; but, under the peculiar climate of California, the year is divided into two seasons—the wet and the dry. During the wet season, it is impossible to carry on these surveys. If this appropriation, then, is not made in this bill, and which is intended to continue these surveys during the present season, but is left back to go into the general appropriation bill, the whole year will elapse without a single line being run, or a single survey made. For that purpose the department has wisely and properly—looking to the interests of California—inserted these appropriations here, in order that these surveys may go on during the present dry season. If these appropriations are left to go into the general appropriation bill, it will go over until the next year, and we will be thrown back one year, to all intents and purposes, so far as any interest to be derived from the public lands in California is concerned. There is no deficiency; but these appropriations are intended to carry on the surveys during the present season.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHELPS. I move, sir, to reduce the sum to $14 per mile, instead of $15.

Mr. HOUSTON. What item is that?

Mr. PHELPS. In line one hundred and five. He remarked the surveys of the public lands in that State had just commenced, and were made at great expense. The surveyor general of that State, in submitting his annual estimates for surveys, had recommended that one fourth of that amount should be appropriated for the service of the fiscal year. The department and the committee had concurred in that recommendation. The surveys in that State can only be made in certain seasons of the year, as has been remarked by the gentleman from California, [Mr. McCORKLE.] As to the remark of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] that the Governor of that State, in his message, had claimed the greater part of the lands in that State by virtue of the act granting swamp lands, &c., to the States in which they are situated, he would say the Governor's claim can neither enlarge nor diminish the rights of that State under the law. If the remark of the Governor is true, the necessity of making the surveys is the same. The swamp lands are to be selected according to the legal subdivisions, and the residue will be subject to sale by the Government, and cannot be sold until surveyed. He did not wish his amendment to prevail, and with the consent of the committee would withdraw it.

Mr. SACKETT. I move to strike out lines one hundred and seven and one hundred and eight, for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. I desire to ask the gentleman, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, a question as to that appropriation. The one hundred and seventh and one hundred and eighth lines, provide $7,500 for surveying private land claims in California. What is the effect intended to be given by the committee to these surveys? Are they to be surveys establishing the line by the operation of the survey between the public and private lands of California? Is the title the claimants make to these lands to be affected by this survey, before the commission established on that subject act? Is that to be the effect of a single survey?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. SACKETT. Then I object to the appropriation. If that is to be done without examination, as to which is private, and which is not private property, I think the appropriation is a very improper one.

Mr. HOUSTON. There are a great many private claimants to a portion of the land in California, and it becomes not only important, but absolutely necessary, not only that individuals should know which are their lands, and which are not, but it becomes absolutely essential that the Government should know what is private and what is public property. The gentleman must see that until these surveys are made, and the various grants established, there can be no legality. We must have boundaries; we must have lines and indications, so that the Government should know which its land is.

Mr. SACKETT. My objection is this: that a corps of surveyors are not the proper functionaries to determine what is, and what is not private lands.

Mr. HOUSTON. That will be settled afterwards. That is to be determined by the Commissioners who are now discharging that very duty.

Mr. SACKETT. What effect can the survey have, then?

Mr. HOUSTON. To give effect to the decision of the Commissioners.

Mr. PHELPS. I am opposed to the amendment. The gentleman from New York has misunderstood me. We now provide for surveying the lands in the State of California. Those surveys will go on and be made in the manner prescribed by law—being divided into townships, and subdivided into sections; and upon this very land divided into townships and sections, there are persons who say they have valid claims to that land by virtue of the grants made to them by the Spanish and Mexican Governments. How will the Government of the United States sell those lands? as it is expected there will be a sale after the surveys are made and approved. The land of individuals may be sold; but afterwards, when their claims are brought before the Commissioner, and it is decided these claims are valid, then these claimants will demand an indemnity of you. The survey of these private claims does not affect either the title of the Government, or of individuals, but enables us to reserve from sale until they are adjudicated upon these private claims. It is the same practice we pursued in the States of Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, and Florida. The survey enables us to reserve all the land from sale until the rights of the claimants are decided by the Board of Commissioners now in session in California. The ordinary surveys of land will be made in the same manner as if there were no private claims; and if the decision of the Commissioners shall be adverse to the claimants, the land will be ready to be brought into market. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] need have no fear that these surveys recognize titles in individuals.

The question was taken upon the amendment, and it was rejected.

The clause appropriating for the annual repairs of the President's House $600, was read.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I have upon my table several amendments, which I have been instructed to offer to this bill by the Committee on Public Buildings. This appears to be the proper place, and I submit to the clause under consideration the following proviso:

Provided, That so much of the appropriation made during the present session of Congress for the temporary repair of the Congressional Library Room, as may remain unexpended at the passage of this act, shall be applied to the completion of the cistern upon the roof of the south wing of the Capitol, and for the casual repairs of said building.

Mr. STANTON. I desire to say, in reference to that and other amendments which—

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order, if submitted to the clause now under consideration.

Mr. STANTON. I will then submit it at another place.

The next clause was read, viz:

"For filling up, grading, &c., Franklin square, $406 99."

Mr. HENN. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means what " &c." had to do with this clause?

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the most difficult question you can ask me. I did not know it was contained in the bill. The amount asked for here is the balance of a debt due for work which is now substantially completed—which is now in the very act of completion under general authority supposed to be given by a law passed at the last Congress. The amount asked for—$406 99—is intended to pay the debt due for the completion of this work. As to the et cetera, I did not know it was there.

The clause was passed upon.

Mr. STANTON. I now submit, as a separate clause, the amendment which was ruled out of order by the Chair:

That so much of the appropriation made during the present Congress for the temporary repair of the Congressional Library room as may remain unexpended at the passage of this act shall be applied to the completion of the cistern upon the roof of the south wing of the Capitol, and for the casual repairs of said building.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a question of order, as to whether that amendment is germane to this bill? It strikes me that it relates to a matter irrelevant to, and consequently cannot come in, this bill.

Mr. STANTON. If the Chair, and gentlemen of the House will allow me, I will show the relevancy of the amendment. At an early period of this session the estimates for the necessary appropriations for public buildings and public grounds in the city of Washington were submitted to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and among those there were certain estimates for deficiencies in the appropriation which had been made heretofore. The Committee of Ways and Means refused to incorporate but some two or three of these estimates into any of the bills which they have presented to the House. The law of 1840 made it the duty of the Commissioner of Public Buildings to submit his estimates to the Committee on Public Buildings, and forbid their being presented to the House without having had first the approval of that committee. There was an estimate for $1,500 deficiency of appropriation for the casual repairs of the Capitol. We understand, upon investigation, that of the amount which we appropriated some time ago for the temporary repair of the Library, which was burned by the recent fire, that there will be an unexpended balance in the hands of the Commissioner of about $1,500, just enough to supply the deficiency which exists in the appropriation for the casual repair of the Capitol. Instead of asking for an appropriation to supply that deficiency, we simply ask to be transferred from that fund for the repair of the Library the unexpended balance of $1,500, to the casual repair of the Capitol. I will say to the committee, in this connection, that it is important the work now commenced upon the top of the house should be immediately completed; for those who have examined the subject know that the cistern—

Mr. DUNHAM. I would like to ask the gentleman a single question. By what authority has the work been commenced?

Mr. STANTON. The work has been commenced under an appropriation made by the last Congress of so much for the casual repairs of the Capitol. There is upon the top of this House—upon this wing of the building, and also upon the other wing—a large cistern, intended to hold water to be used in the event of fire. By means of the cistern upon the northern wing of the Capitol, the whole roof of this building was saved at the late fire. Had not that water been there, no one can calculate the extent of the injury which would have resulted to the building. By means of the water held in that cistern, the roof was saved; because the whole covering of the Capitol is constructed of wood, and the fire would have spread rapidly. This cistern has been constructed under the authority of an old appropriation, and it will require this sum to complete it and to make other necessary repairs.

Mr. DUNHAM. I have yet to learn by what authority this new cistern was commenced. I know of no law by which it was authorized to be commenced. It is true that there has been heretofore an appropriation for the casual repair of the Capitol; but, if I understand the meaning of the English language, it was simply for the purpose of keeping the building in repair—where breaches are made to repair them. Instead of doing that, I understand they have commenced to make an addition to the Capitol. Now, if an appropriation to make casual repairs is an authority to start out new work in connection with the public buildings, I confess that it is a novel thing to me. But be that as it may, I ask how it can be germane to this bill. It cannot be germane to this bill to introduce here a section which is to provide, not for a contingency, but simply to authorize a transfer of a fund which is not appropriated in this bill for the purpose of carrying on this work, which I say has been commenced without any authority.

Mr. STANTON. If the gentleman will allow me one moment to explain, I will remove the difficulties under which he labors. The cisterns upon the roof of the building are a necessary part of the structure, and to repair them is to repair the building. They are necessary to keep the building in repair and protect it from destruction. The appropriation is not to build a new cistern, but to repair, or rebuild, if you please, an old one, which has so decayed from use and exposure as to be of no service. It is, therefore, most certainly embraced in the authority to make casual repairs.

Mr. DUNHAM. This system is one that is very common here; and it is one, I think, this House ought to set its face against. Persons having charge of public work, desiring to have something done according to their fancy, will, if by any possibility they can interpret, by straining, or otherwise, authority to commence the work, begin it without first having submitted the subject to the House. They will afterwards come here and ask us to appropriate money to carry the work on, because it has been commenced. They will tell us that it will all go to waste, if we do not carry it on. This is a very common thing, and is a practice that has been growing up for several years. I insist that this amendment is out of order. It is not to change, or to add to, anything which is in the bill; but it is entirely distinct from it—it is to transfer a sum of money, not appropriated in the bill, but appropriated heretofore, which is in no way provided for in this bill. I think it ought to be left out, and I therefore insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands this amendment, it is to provide for the transfer of certain public moneys to other uses than those originally intended. Such a proposition as that, the Chair is inclined to think, is not in order to this bill.

Mr. STANTON. I will appeal from the decision of the Chair, as I think it certainly is in order. I do this with the utmost respect to the Chair.

Mr. HIBBARD. It is for a purpose not mentioned in the bill.

The question was put, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to strike out from the bill, from the one hundred and twenty-eighth to the one hundred and thirty-first line, inclusive, the words:

"To complete the improvements on the square south of the President's House, $12,000: Provided, that the grounds can be filled up and the surface completed for the sum herein appropriated."

Mr. J. I wish merely to state a few facts to the committee, with regard to this item. Most of the members of this committee are acquainted with the grounds here referred to, which lie between the canal and the wall surrounding the President's House. An unexpended appropriation of $6,000 for public grounds about the city has been applied to the filling up and leveling of this lot. In the deficiency bill of the last Congress, of May, 1850, there was appropriated $10,000 for the improvement of that piece of land. In the regular appropriation bill of the first session of the last Congress—the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill—there was appropriated $15,000 for the same object. In the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill of the last session of Congress, there was $10,000 more appropriated to effect the same purpose. They had $6,000 at the commencement of the first session of the last Congress—$35,000 were appropriated by the three appropriation bills above named, passed during the last Congress, thus making $41,000 in all that have been appropriated for the filling up, leveling, and otherwise improving those grounds. We are now asked to appropriate $12,000 more, for the purpose of continuing that work, without being possessed of any information as to when it will be completed; or, to effect its completion, what amount of money will be required. I believe that it is contemplated making a fish pond just at the angle of the Potomac with the canal, where there is too much water already. [Laughter.]

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I do not know whether the gentleman from Tennessee is correctly informed as to the amount of money already expended upon this improvement or not; but I shall not enter into a dispute with him upon that subject, although I am inclined to believe he has confounded two or three other appropriations for other purposes with those intended for the grounds south of the President's House. He may have supposed that the appropriations made at the last and previous sessions of Congress, for the improvement of the Smithsonian grounds, the mall generally, and for other grounds, belonging to the Government, have been swallowed up in the sink-hole in front of the executive mansion. But there is an imperative necessity for this appropriation, and it must be made. It is needed, because the grounds proposed to be improved are so low and marshy as most seriously to affect the health of the neighborhood. The sooner we can have them filled up, graded, and planted with trees, the better it will be for the safety of the President and family. It is true that the work has cost already a considerable sum, and will require all that this bill appropriates; but it is a work of great magnitude. A large, low, flat piece of ground, embracing many acres, has to be filled up with earth, brought from a great distance and necessarily at great expense. The earth in the neighborhood, which could be used for the purpose, has been exhausted in the work already done; and what is necessary to complete it will have to be brought from the streets now being excavated and graded in other parts of the city. There is abundant safety to the Government against future appropriations for this purpose in the proviso attached to this section. That proviso limits the expenditure to $12,000; and if the work cannot be completed for this amount, the Secretary of the Interior, or the Commissioner of Public Buildings, who will have the disbursement of the money, will not be authorized to commence the improvement. I hope the motion of the honorable gentleman from Tennessee will not prevail.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] whether any investigation has been made to authorize the belief that this work will not be finished for the sum proposed to be appropriated?

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. It is a matter not referred to our committee. The Committee of Ways and Means had the matter under consideration and reported the amendment. We took no note of it.

Mr. HOUSTON. As far as the action of the Committee of Ways and Means was concerned, there was no direct inquiry out of the committee that induced them to insert that proviso. Those who were friendly to the appropriation, with a view, I presume—that is my recollection—of enabling it to meet the sanction of the majority, put in that proviso, which, in the view of the committee, would prevent an expenditure going beyond that. The intention of that proviso was to put it out of the power of gentlemen who may control that appropriation, to make that contract unless it was for the completion of the work within the sum of money appropriated.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I wish to say, in connection with the remarks which have fallen from the chairman of the committee, that if this is the object, the language of the bill should be varied, for the purpose of meeting that object. I do not think that the proviso, as it stands, would have the effect to restrict the expenditure to the appropriation at all; and that after this money should have been appropriated and expended, we will be called upon to appropriate as much more for the purpose of completing this work, upon which it seems to me there has been a great extravagance of expenditure.

Mr. HALL. If the Department should make a contract for $20,000, could they not come in and ask us for an appropriation by a deficiency bill?

Mr. SEYMOUR. I suppose they might, as the language of the bill now stands. But if it is expressed in the language of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, no part of this should be drawn from the Treasury unless the contract is made in its terms to insure the completion of the work. Then I think we should be guarded upon this point.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to say a word barely in reply to a question of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] and to the opinion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SEYMOUR.] I have no such opinion as that a contract for $20,000 could be made under that proviso. None at all. The proviso was not drawn by me. I am aware of its object; and, although it might have been more specific, and it would be desirable to make it so, yet I think it certainly precludes the idea that any more money than the $12,000 shall be expended upon the work.

Mr. FICKLIN. I would ask my friend from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] this question: If $15,000 is to be expended between this and the next session of Congress, might not $20,000 be expended?

Mr. HOUSTON. Congress might appropriate what it pleases, despite of the contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that this discussion is not in order. It is competent for any gentleman to move an amendment, before the question is taken upon striking out. The question pending before the committee is upon striking out.

Mr. DUNHAM. I will move to amend the amendment by striking out $12,000, and inserting $7,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I hope that will not be done, and that the whole provision will be stricken out. Upon examination, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] will find that my statement, as to the expenditure upon this particular piece of ground south of the President's, is correct. It was $41,000. I will refer to the last appropriation made for this piece of ground, viz:

"For continuing the improvements, grading, and planting of trees on the grounds south of the President's House $10,000: Provided, further, That all the unexpended balances of money heretofore appropriated by Government for the improvement of the public grounds, in the city of Washington, shall be expended under the direction of the President of the United States in execution of such plans as he may adopt."

Under this proviso, the President of the United States has since its passage appointed a rural architect—Mr. Downing, of the State of New York—at a salary of $2,500 per annum, who is to lay out and determine the plans upon which these improvements shall be made. I know but little of this gentleman. He is well qualified, I doubt not, for the duties assigned him. I have not been able to ascertain the exact amount of time he spends here. I directed a letter to the Secretary of the Interior, and he says that, under this provision, the President appointed Mr. Downing as rural architect, with a salary of $2,500, and that his whole time is not required here. It is said, however, that he spends about three days in the month here, and receives for it this $2,500 per annum. He edits a horticultural periodical in New York, comes here once a month, stays one, two, or three days, and gives the men employed under him direction as to the work. Sometimes there are forty of them, the Secretary of the Interior says; and, perhaps, sometimes as many as seventy; and for these three days of service in a month, or whatever length of time it may be, he is to receive under the determination of the President $2,500 per annum.

A MEMBER. How many clerks has he?

Mr. JONES. I do not know.

Mr. SMART. Is he one of the Major Downing family? [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES. I do not know that he is. There are a great many things connected with this matter which are but rumors, and which I will not state here, without knowing them to be true. But these are abuses under that very proviso, I doubt not.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROOKS. I wish to make some remarks upon this amendment. Am I in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the direction which this debate has taken, it is in order to reply to this amendment.

Mr. DUNHAM. I would like to know how. I understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr.

JONES] was opposed to it. I moved the amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. This item in the appropriation bill was well considered in the Committee of Ways and Means, and this proviso was—

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BROOKS. To avoid any objection, I will move to increase the appropriation to $15,000.

Mr. DUNHAM. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BROOKS. At the last session of Congress, for the first time in appropriations for this city by the Committee of Ways and Means, provisos were inserted for the completion of the works that were undertaken, because it had been found to be the habit in this city of beginning works upon small appropriations, which ultimately led to large ones, and the extent of which the House nor Congress could never know, when they were making the appropriation. To nearly all the appropriations of last year, for the District of Columbia, were appended provisos to this effect, the object being to limit the expenditure in all cases; which had the effect, except in one case, and that arising from extraordinary circumstances. These provisos were successful, and of the greatest possible service in regard to appropriations to this city. If this is not rigid enough to meet the views of my colleague from New York, [Mr. SEYMOUR,] I have no objection to his preparing it as he pleases. I agree with him in the desire to limit the appropriations, when we make them, in the particular case specified. If, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] says, there have been so many thousand dollars expended upon those public grounds, south of the President's house, here is a proviso now which limits the further expenditure to $12,000; and before the work can be carried any further, the $12,000 must be made under contract to do it, or else the contract cannot be made at all. Now, is this work necessary to be done? Let any gentleman look at the grounds south of the President's house, and say that they are willing to leave them in their present condition. If they are, let them do so. If gentlemen upon the other side are willing to trust the President, such as they expect and confidently declare they will elect, to the malaria which must arise from the waters there in the condition—

Mr. HALL. Did not our Democratic Presidents live there?

Mr. BROOKS. The gentleman speaks of it as a fish-pond. That pond was made for the purposes of economy. It was found more economical to reserve a place there for a pond of water, to flow in and out from the Potomac river, than to cart dirt to fill it in. This is of no more interest to me than to any other gentleman. It is necessary to finish the grounds; and if you do not finish them under this proviso, you will go on, in subsequent Congresses, or by the action of the Senate, and appropriate $10,000, $20,000, $30,000, $40,000, or $50,000, as you have done heretofore; whereas, now, if you appropriate but $12,000, you may, in the most economical manner, finish the work under contract, or it cannot be undertaken at all. The estimates show that it can be done for that. If you do not do it for that, the Senate, or some committee of this body, will go on with the old system, and spend thousands and thousands of dollars, as heretofore. This proviso is here, and if followed out, will finish and complete all the public grounds in this District, upon every item of appropriation.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman to explain if it is not, in his recollection, that a proviso was incorporated in the bill at the last session, applicable to some seven items of appropriation in this city, for works which were to be completed for the amount appropriated, and if there were not estimates submitted for their completion?

Mr. BROOKS. Every one of them, I say, except one, was completed; and that was not, solely for the reason that the corporation of Washington altered the grade of the street, after the appropriation was made.

Mr. JONES. I ask the gentleman, if filling up, grading, and otherwise improving Franklin Square by an appropriation of $5,000, is not one of the last seven items to which the proviso, alluded to by him, applies, and whether, notwithstanding which, there has not been an estimate submitted this year for continuing it?

Mr. BROOKS. There is an item, I will reply, for $406, the particulars of which I cannot enter into. We had the facts before the Committee of Ways and Means, and we were satisfied that it was a right and just appropriation, notwithstanding the proviso, or else it would not have been reported by the Committee of Ways and Means to the House. The details can be had by looking at the report.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to state, although I have not the facts before me, but my recollection is, that there was an estimate sent in to continue the improvement on Franklin Square; but the appropriation embraced in this bill is not to continue the work, but actually to pay the debts which they have contracted over and above the sums appropriated heretofore.

Mr. BROOKS. I stand upon my previous declaration. Every item was carried out under the proviso, except the one altering the grade from Pennsylvania Avenue up to the railroad depot, and this was because the corporation of Washington was not able to complete the work.

Mr. DUNHAM. If the gentleman had listened to what I said a moment ago, he would have known the reason. It was because the money had actually been expended, and because it was to cover outstanding debts.

Mr. BROOKS. If that be so, then it ought not to be appropriated. But the Committee of Ways and Means, of which the gentleman is a member, have put it in the bill; and that is prima facie proof that what the gentleman says is not correct, and that what I say is correct.

Mr. DUNHAM. The Committee of Ways and Means put it in on the urgent representations of certain gentlemen that these debts had been contracted to poor laboring men, and the Ways and Means thought it better to appropriate this money to pay the debt, than that those poor men should go unpaid.

Mr. BROOKS. The gentleman is mistaken. The Committee of Ways and Means would not, for the purpose of paying laboring men, violate contracts, and go beyond those contracts.

Mr. DUNHAM. They do not violate contracts; but the Commissioner of Public Buildings went beyond the original proviso in contracting the debts.

Mr. BROOKS. Then the appropriation ought not to be made for Franklin Square. But what the gentleman says is not correct. He is mistaken in his facts. I have not time, however, to go into the facts.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then, certainly, the gentleman ought not to have voted to put it in the bill.

Mr. BROOKS. Well, it is not worth while to quarrel about a few dollars.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, moved to amend the amendment, by striking out "twelve" and inserting "thirteen."

Mr. S. said: The honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] in the course of his remarks a few minutes ago, undertook to show that $41,000 had been already expended upon this improvement south of the President's House. I thought he labored under a mistake, and I am now satisfied of it. I have no idea that any such sum has been expended, but even it had been, that would be no reason why this should not be done.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would ask the gentleman upon what he bases his assertion?

Mr. STANTON. I will show you in a moment, if you will only have patience. He says that certain balances of appropriations made for previous years, have been turned into this improvement. I will show what he says is the authority of law for this. The law does not show that the balances referred to are to be applied to this improvement alone—very far from it:

"For the improvement, grading, and planting with trees the grounds south of the President's House, $10,000: Provided, That all the unexpended balances of money heretofore appropriated by the Government for the improvement of the public grounds in the city of Washington, shall be expended under the direction of the President of the United States, in the execution of such plan as he may adopt."

Not such plan as the President may adopt in reference to this particular piece of ground, but in reference to the whole of the public grounds taken together. The plan adopted by the President is a complete and perfect system, and applies to the whole of the public grounds lying between this Capitol and the Potomac river. These balances of appropriations were not sent into that "hole," but were applied to the improvements about the Smithsonian Institution and the Mall, where improvements have been made by this "rural architect," who has been spoken of in such a disparaging manner by the gentleman from Tennessee. A large portion of the sum which makes up his aggregate of $41,000, which he charges as having been already expended on this improvement, was appropriated for and applied to other purposes. The clauses containing the appropriations in the several bills referred to, appropriate certain sums for building culverts from the public buildings to these low grounds, and filling up the grounds. Now, sir, these culverts are intended to drain the grounds about the public buildings into the river; and will be found to have absorbed the greater part of the appropriations. They are not rightfully to be considered as any part of the grading and filling up the grounds, but are distinct and separate, as well as expensive improvements.

The remarks which the gentleman from Tennessee has indulged in reference to the accomplished gentleman employed by the President to superintend the improvement of the public grounds, are illiberal and unjust to that person. They are as far from being correct as the remarks of the gentleman in regard to the application of the appropriations I have referred to. It is astonishing to my mind—and I have no doubt to the minds of others—with what facility otherwise intelligent and respectable gentlemen on this floor can deal out wholesale denunciations of men about whom they know nothing, and will not inform themselves; and how much the legislation of the country is controlled by prejudices thus invoked and clamor thus raised.

Congress, in a bill recently passed, authorized the President of the United States to adopt a general plan for the improvement of the public grounds. In the exercise of the power thus conferred upon him, he did adopt an admirable plan, which, if it is permitted to survive the attacks of the cautious and parsimonious, and is carried out as designed, will be a credit to the city and the nation. Every man, possessing the least practical intelligence, must be aware that it is more economical to improve these grounds according to a regular, fixed system, than to follow the old plan of doing it by piecemeal. In the end thousands of dollars will be saved annually, for the constant change of grade, interruptions of the work, and other inevitable difficulties which follow the unwise course of patch-work hitherto pursued, have been, and ever will be, the fruitful source of waste. Under the power referred to, the President was authorized to appoint some competent person to superintend the carrying out of the plan adopted. He appointed Mr. Downing. And who is he? One of the most accomplished gentlemen in his profession in the Union—a man known to the world as possessing rare skill as a "rural architect" and landscape gardener, as well as a man of great scientific intelligence. He is not only distinguished for his accomplishments in his peculiar profession, but, in his private life, is a gentleman of amiable character and high standing. How much better, sir, that a work of so much importance should be intrusted to a man of these qualities, than to the ignorant and inexperienced hands into which it would have fallen, but for the law referred to. I deny that he has neglected his duties as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] has charged. Instead of being here only three days in the month, he has been here vigilantly discharging his duties at all times when those duties required him to be here. He has superintended, directed, and carried out the plan adopted, as fully as the funds appropriated have enabled him to do. If all the officers of this Government had been as conscientious and scrupulous in the discharge of their duties as he has been since his appointment, there would be no grounds for reproaches against those who have control of the Government.

I repeat again that it is important this appropriation should be made. We have spent much money on the improvement, it is true, but the evil is not yet removed which was intended to be remedied by the filling up of the grounds. The great object to be accomplished was to render the neighborhood of the Executive Mansion healthy enough to enable the President and his family to reside there without endangering their lives. If it costs the Government $500,000 more, instead of a few thousands, it should be done, if we intend the President shall continue to live there. It is a well-known fact, that the house has been more than once vacated on account of its unhealthy condition. The people of this nation will not require their President to reside in a swamp or morass, as he has been doing ever since the Executive Mansion has been at its present location.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman from Kentucky certainly misunderstood what I said upon this subject—both in regard to the unexpended balances of appropriations and what I said about Mr. Downing. He speaks about "wholesale denunciations." Sir, I denounced him not. I said I knew nothing about him, but supposed that he was qualified to discharge the duties imposed upon him by the appointment of the President. The gentleman says that I am mistaken about the balances of appropriations being carried to this particular improvement. Why, I did not refer to the balances of appropriations specified in that proviso. I said that there was an unexpended balance of $6,000 at the commencement of the last Congress, which they have appropriated to the improvement of this square down to the canal south of the President's house; that in the deficiency bill of the first session of the last Congress there were $10,000 appropriated for that piece of ground; that there was in the civil and diplomatic bill of the first session of the last Congress $15,000 appropriated to it; and that at the last session, the appropriation upon which this proviso was hung was $10,000 for this same object, with the sewer that was to go from the Navy Department, I believe, down to the canal, connected with this improvement, making the entire appropriation expended upon it since the commencement of the last Congress $41,000.

Now, sir, that appropriation to which the proviso was attached, does not apply to all the public grounds, but it is a specific appropriation for this particular piece of ground, specified in the clause itself. And I say that the proviso which is now attached to the bill under consideration, that this $12,000 shall complete this work, is no safeguard that it will be done. I would say to the gentleman from New York, that the $460 99 in this bill is not going to complete the improvement of Franklin square, in the northern part of the city. They will come and ask for more appropriations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the amendment to strike out "twelve" and insert "seven" was put, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I have no hostility to this provision of the bill. Even if a larger sum was proposed to be appropriated to this work, I would be willing to vote for it, for I hold that the object is a good one, and that we should not be here considering whether it will cost one or two thousand dollars more or less to make these grounds healthy and beautiful, too.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New York that there is no question pending before the committee.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I offer, then, the amendment which I send to the Clerk, for the purpose of limiting the appropriation for the completion of this work to the amount specified in the bill.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Insert at the end, and after "appropriation," the following: And a contract for the completion of the work, with good security, be tendered and accepted at that sum.

Mr. SEYMOUR. My object, as will be seen from the amendment, is merely to insure the completion of the work at whatever sum it may be the pleasure of this House to insert. If the friends of this item, who have had their attention particularly called to it in framing the bill, think that the sum of $12,000 is not enough, I am willing to vote for a larger sum. But I desire, above all things, to have the matter defined, so that we may not be called upon, year after year, to vote additional appropriations for doing a specific job of work. Nothing tends more to extravagance than such a policy. I have offered the amendment for the purpose of limiting the cost to whatever sum the House may be pleased to insert, and I ask for tellers upon it.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. CHANDLER and MOLONY appointed.

And the question being put, it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 86, noes 44.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the motion of Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, to strike out the clause.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded tellers; but they were not ordered.

The question was then put upon the motion to strike out, and disagreed to.

Mr. MEADE. I move the following amendment, to come in at the end of that clause just under consideration:

For warming the President's House with furnaces and flues, $2,000.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order. I understand this is an amendment to appropriate a certain sum for warming the President's House. I ask the gentleman from Virginia if I am correct?

Mr. MEADE. That is right.

Mr. PHELPS. I think it is not relevant to the clause before the committee to complete the grounds south of the President's House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not in order as an amendment to the clause now under consideration. There is a preceding clause for repairs of the President's House, to which the amendment might have been in order; but it is not in order as an amendment to the clause now under consideration.

Mr. MEADE. Mr. Chairman, I must appeal from that decision, and I beg to say a word or two upon the appeal.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The appeal is not debatable.

[A message was here received from the Senate announcing the passage of sundry bills by that body.]

Mr. MEADE. Does the Chair decide that debate is not in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. MEADE. I do appeal, and I desire to know whether I can debate it?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not debatable.

The question, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" was put, and decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I offer the following amendment, to come in as a separate clause of the bill after the one hundred and thirty-first line:

To supply the deficiency in the appropriation for the casual repairs of the Capitol, $1,500.

The same object is intended to be accomplished by this amendment which I proposed to accomplish by one which I offered sometime ago under the instructions of the Committee on Public Buildings, and which was decided to be out of order. There is a deficiency of $1,500 in the appropriations for the repairs of the Capitol, which I explained a few minutes ago. It relates to the reconstruction of a cistern upon the top of this building, which is necessary to protect the House from fires.

Mr. HIBBARD. I must rise to a question of order upon this amendment. This amendment is not in order to the clause under consideration, being for a new and independent object.

Mr. GENTRY. I think there is a sufficient analogy to the other objects appropriated for in the bill. This is a clause for repairs of the President's House. It is certainly equally in order to provide for the repair of the Legislative Houses.

Mr. HIBBARD. The section to which this is offered as an additional clause, provides for the repairs of the President's House and grounds. Now, if the gentleman's amendment contemplates the repair of the Capitol, I make the point that the amendment is not in order, on the ground of irrelevancy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] to constitute an independent clause. It was offered as such by him, and not as an amendment to the clause referred to by the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. HIBBARD], and in the language in which it is couched, the Chair is inclined to think it is in order. The language is this: "To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the casual repairs of the Capitol, $1,500." This is offered as an independent proposition, and the Chair decides that it is in order.

Mr. HIBBARD. I do not insist upon a capacious objection, but it strikes me that the explanation with which the gentleman accompanied his amendment makes it plain that it cannot be in order. He says that it is an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman take an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. HIBBARD. I do not appeal; but I wish to make a statement. The gentleman says this is to erect a cistern upon the top of this building. Now, according to the gentleman's statement, that is not a deficiency, but it is an appropriation for a new work.

Mr. STANTON. The gentleman will permit me to explain. I stated to the committee some minutes ago, when the same objection was raised to the same amendment, which I then offered in another form, that it was not to begin a new work, but that it was to repair an old one—that it was to repair a cistern upon the top of this Capitol. I stated that it was necessary that it should be rebuilt. On account of its exposure to the weather, it has decayed and fallen down. It is not fit for service, and must be rebuilt, and it is necessary to keep the building in repair. It is necessary to protect it from fires, and it is a part of the regular repairs of the Capitol, and is known as such. The Commissioner of Public Buildings has asked for the appropriation, and the Committee on Public Buildings have instructed me to report it, though in a different form. They asked me to transfer one appropriation designed for another purpose and apply it to this.

Mr. GENTRY. It seems to me it would be a very unfortunate construction of our powers to decide, that while we are making executive repairs, we cannot also make legislative repairs. It seems to me, that the only difference between the clause to which this is to be added and the amendment itself is, that one provides for the repairs of an executive building, and the other for the repairs of a legislative. They are certainly sufficiently analogous to make the amendment in order.

The question was then put; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 65, noes 25; no quorum voting.

Mr. STANTON. Does this amendment come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. CHANDLER demanded tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. GENTRY and STANTON, of Kentucky, were appointed.

The question was again put, and the tellers reported—ayes 74; noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, offered the following amendment:

For supplying a deficiency of the 8th of March, 1849, for completing the room under the Post Office of the Senate, $451 31.

He said: This amendment is reported by the instructions of the Committee on Public Buildings, authorized to investigate this matter. They find that a sum of $451 31, is due to the mechanics who fitted up that room under the appropriation passed on the 8th of March, 1849. I will explain this matter to the House, for I went to the room myself, and examined it. It consists of two or three of the lower rooms in the under part of the north wing of this building, which have been fitted up for a folding room for the Senate. They have torn up the arches there in order to make more room, and have made a large semicircular arch, covering both rooms, and fitted up an establishment for the use of the folders of the Senate. Now, sir, this $451 and some odd cents is the amount of the balance due to the mechanics who did the work, under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, as submitted in the statement before the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. The amendments that are being offered by the gentleman from Kentucky seem to me to come before this committee in a very questionable shape. Now, sir, it cannot have escaped the memory of members of this House, that at the beginning of this session all the estimates for public buildings and grounds were referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and that committee were, in the discharge of the duty they were called upon to bear, when, upon the motion of the honorable gentleman from Kentucky, the House changed its order, and referred all these matters to the Committee on Public Buildings, upon a statement of the chairman that they would report a separate and distinct bill for the appropriations which they might conceive necessary for public buildings and grounds.

Now these estimates have either been examined by the Committee of Ways and Means, and rejected, or they have been taken from them under the orders of the House, and transferred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and in either event, that gentleman obtained possession, for his committee, of those estimates, upon his own motion, by a reference of the House. I say, sir, it comes in a questionable shape now, for him to propose to fasten them to a bill reported by the very committee from which he took these estimates. Why did he not allow the estimates to remain with the committee who is responsible to the House, and give the committee an opportunity of investigating these claims? Most of them were investigated, and this very appropriation now offered by the gentleman was investigated by two members of the Ways and Means Committee, and, according to my recollection, upon the recommendations of these two gentlemen after such investigation, were rejected.

Sir, I want to make another suggestion to members of this committee, and especially to those who desire the passage of this bill. It cannot be true that members of this committee are ignorant of the fact that there exists a very high prejudice upon the part of many members against these city appropriations; but, I think, if the friends of this deficiency bill desire to defeat it, the most effectual way will be to load it down with these amendments, which may just as well come in another bill. The gentleman may just as well report his own bill for that appropriation, and then keep this bill free from the prejudice which exists in the minds of a great many of the members of this House against this class of appropriations. I therefore, sir, appeal to the friends of this bill to keep it free from these amendments. Let us keep it clean. I do hope that these comments are not objectionable to many members of the House, for it seems to me if we do load our bill with these unimportant amendments, the presumption is, that we may either defeat it or endanger its passage.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, proposed to amend his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman that he can modify his amendment, if he chooses; but the Chair thinks he cannot modify his amendment, and make a speech upon that modification. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move an amendment to strike out the fifty-one cents, and I have a word or two to say in reference to that amendment, and in reply especially to the remarks made by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON.] I do not know anything of the differences between the Committee of Ways and Means, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but I dissent in toto from the position assumed by that gentleman. Now, sir, the Committee on Public Buildings have stated to the House that this work has been done upon the Capitol, already during the present fiscal year, and that it is a deficiency. I do not understand the gentleman from Alabama to dispute that fact—I do not understand anybody to dispute it. The work has been done, and, according to law, the money is due. It is a deficiency, and upon every principle of justice, therefore, it ought to be incorporated in this bill, whether it comes from the Committee of Ways and Means, or whether it comes, as it properly ought to come, from the Committee on Public Buildings, as an amendment to this bill. But the gentleman says there are prejudices against this bill, and he appeals to the House, not to load it down with amendments. It was, sir, with the utmost surprise, when the Committee on Public Buildings came before this House, and told us how one of the cisterns was rotting, and that they were called upon for an appropriation to repair it, in order to protect the building against fire,—I say I was surprised, sir, that many gentlemen upon this floor should have voted against that, which no man can say is not absolutely and indispensably necessary.

Now, I say, sir, that as to this appropriation, if I have not misunderstood the facts in regard to this bill, there is no prejudice which ought to exclude it, if the facts be correct. The work has been done, and the debt is due legally from the United States; and it is a deficiency which ought to be provided for, as much as any other deficiency provided for in this bill.

Mr. HIBBARD. I hope that the amendment will not be adopted, nor the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON.] It is true, as stated by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] that this item, and some others, were referred to two members of the Committee of Ways and Means as a sub-committee. They examined it, in connection with others, and came to the conclusion that it did not belong to this bill; and they recommended its rejection. Their recommendation was unanimously adopted by the committee. I believe it was right. In the first place the piece of work, for the payment of which this sum is asked, was something which belonged, in fact, to the contingent expenses of the Senate; and it ought to have been provided for in that way. It may be true that there was a statute making an appropriation to commence the repairs, of which the gentleman says this is a part. However that may be, it does not belong here, because it is not a matter of such necessity as to be put into the deficiency bill. This bill is meant to provide for deficiencies of which the Government is in actual want, and for which there is urgent necessity. There is none such here. It is a matter which pertains to the Senate, and to them alone. It is one of their expenditures—liberal enough, in all conscience, as we all know. Now, if this sum is to be appropriated at all, let the Senate attend to it when the bill comes up before them. If it is an item which ought to go in, the Senate will not leave it out. Nobody need fear that. God knows there is no danger but they will put in enough.

But, Mr. Chairman, I will close by reiterating the request of the chairman of Ways and Means, that the committee will not begin to load down this bill with superfluous, or at the best, questionable items.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, (interrupting.) With the permission of the gentleman I will simply say that Congress, two years ago, adjudicated and settled this matter, as to what funds these repairs are to be made with, because it passed an appropriation of $4,000, and placed it in the hands of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, to make these alterations in the rooms of the Capitol, and did not charge the repairs to the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HIBBARD. Will the gentleman allow me, as he is speaking out of my time. It was done so, and the Commissioner was to finish it with the sum appropriated. He had no right to go beyond that sum. He went beyond the limit of his authority, and now comes for a justification. If such works cannot be done with the money appropriated, let them stop till more is given.

Mr. STANTON. The sum would not complete the work. It required $451 more. The work, however, was done, and the money is now due to the mechanics. Here is what the Commissioner of Public Buildings says:

"These expenditures were made long before I came into office, but I find evidence that these sums are due to mechanics and others, who complain in strong terms of the injury they have sustained by the long delay of payment; and say that they have a right to expect interest upon their respective claims."

This is the report of the Commissioner to our committee. But the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] complains that I have not reported a deficiency bill from the Committee on Public Buildings. In the name of all that is sensible in the eyes of a sensible man, when can I report such a bill? We have been trying for the last two months to get in the regular appropriation bill, and you (pointing to Mr. HOUSTON) and others have obstructed the business of the House, so that reports from that committee and others have not been called for for two months.

Mr. HOUSTON, (interrupting.) How have I obstructed the business of the House?

Mr. STANTON. By clogging up the way with other matters, and permitting others to do the same.

There are only four or five items to pay honest debts which have been created by the officers of Government, without the fault of the needy mechanics who did the work, which I propose to add to this bill. It would be the merest folly to report a deficiency bill containing some three or four items, when we can add them to this bill without inconvenience to the House, and when the gentleman knows it would be utterly impossible under the present system of doing business in this body ever to reach it.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I withdraw my amendment, if there is no objection to my doing so.

No objection being made, the amendment was withdrawn.

The question was then taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, and it was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 42; noes not counted.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. In pursuance of the instructions of the Committee on Public Buildings, I offer another amendment to the bill, as follows:

"For supplying a deficiency in the appropriation of the 15th of May, 1850, for the removal of the public greenhouse, $2,766 41."

I will explain the amendment to the House. At the last session there was an appropriation of $5,000, for the removal of the plants brought in by the Exploring Expedition. That money was expended under the direction of the Library Committee of the House. It cost more than the appropriation to do it. The money was expended. The surplus of expenditure, over the appropriation, is due to the mechanics who did the work, and they ask for it. If the persons having this work in charge, exceeded their authority, those who were employed to do it were innocent of any violation of law, and ought not to be kept out of their honestly-earned money for the fault of others.

Mr. DUNHAM. I trust that the amendment will not be adopted. It will be recollected that at the last session of Congress, an appropriation of $5,000 was asked for, and voted by this House, and by Congress, to remove the plants brought home by the Exploring Expedition.

Mr. MEADE. I rise to a question of order. The amendment which I offered just now, was ruled out of order by the Chair. It seems to me that it was as pertinent as the one just offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON.] There is no provision in this bill in relation to green-houses, any more than there is a provision in relation to fires in the President's House. I therefore make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MEADE,] that his proposition was an amendment, in the shape of an appropriation, not stating it to be a deficiency. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] and now under consideration, states that it is to supply a deficiency, whereas the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEADE] was one for a new substantive appropriation. The Chair thought that to be out of order, and he thinks this to be in order.

Mr. DUNHAM. It was just stated that this appropriation was for a mere temporary purpose—to enable an arrangement of the plants to be made, and a list of them taken. We have only to look to the building erected here under our eye, to see whether this proposition has been carried out in good faith. We all know, looking at this building, that the intention is not that it shall be temporary, and until a description of the plants shall be taken. If we want any further evidence, I will state that estimates have been sent in to this House, during this Congress, to appropriate between $30,000 and $40,000 to enlarge and make that establishment a permanent part of this Government—a permanent establishment under the Government.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. These estimates have been committed to, and examined by, both the Committee of Ways and Means and the Committee on Public Buildings, and repudiated by both of them. The improvements, if made, would conflict with the general plan adopted by the President for the improvement of the public grounds, and for this reason our committee concurred with the Committee of Ways and Means in rejecting them.

Mr. DUNHAM. It shows that the object for which that $5,000 was appropriated has not been carried out, and it remains for this House to decide whether, when you appropriate a certain sum of money to accomplish a particular purpose, that money shall be diverted to another purpose, entirely different, and then allow the parties expending this money, to come in and ask us to supply the deficiency, or to pay the debts which have been contracted without any authority whatever. Now, everybody knows that $5,000 is sufficient to erect a building of a temporary character, such as was contemplated by the language of the act by which that $5,000 was appropriated. It should have accomplished the purpose; but, instead of erecting such a building, they have gone on and erected one of a different kind, with the view of laying a foundation for a permanent establishment in the Government. They have gone on, and without authority of law—I care not whether it has been done by the Library Committee of this House, or by whom it has been done—and contracted these debts. I say it comes home to this House with more force than anything which has been discussed here for the last two days, upon this deficiency bill, whether you intend to control the purse of the nation, or not. You appropriate a sum of money for a particular object, and, instead of confining the expenditures to that appropriation, the parties go on and run the nation in debt, and come here and say you are bound to pay it, because you owe the money. It is a very different thing from the deficiencies which we have been paying heretofore, because they are not to pay debts, but to enable us to go on with the services of the country. If the gentleman's statement is correct, your officers have gone on and contracted debts, without authority of law, for which they are probably personally liable, and they come in and ask you to supply the deficiency that has accrued in the violation of an act, which was passed to make a temporary arrangement for the purposes specified in the bill. They have gone on in violation of that act, to lay the nest-egg of a permanent establishment under the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HIBBARD. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] by striking out $500. I well remember the appropriation made last year of $5,000 for this purpose, as stated by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON.] That sum was asked for and appropriated, but not till after opposition and debate. I well remember that the Committee of Ways and Means, and I think the House, were assured that if that sum should be appropriated, it would end the business—that it should pay and end this work. But, sir, we see in this case, as it often happens, that, notwithstanding that assurance, the sum is used up without finishing the work, and they are here now asking this addition of thousands. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will not grant it; I hope they will vote down the amendment, for this reason, and for others. This whole system, under which it is proposed to place the green-house in keeping, is defective. It is wrong, and it will make the "green-house" a pest, a parasite, and a leech upon the Government. It will grow up into a new bureau, by-and-by, Mr. Chairman, if not a new Department of the Interior. We ought not to be subjected to these continual calls for such purposes. I am informed by persons who ought to know, that the keeping of this "green-house," instead of being a yearly bill of expense of thousands, may be made to pay its own way, and perhaps more, if rightly managed. But this is no place for the item at all. It can as well be put anywhere else as here. It as much belongs to the civil and diplomatic bill as to this. We are now acting for the urgent wants of the Government. We have been called upon by gentlemen upon the other side of the House to take up this bill, and act upon it, because the public interests are suffering for the want of its passage. Let them, then, vote down all superfluous propositions. I trust that we shall not go any further in the work of loading down the bill with these trifling and unnecessary amendments. It has enough in it which ought not to be there as it is. If gentlemen really want it to pass, let them not aid in making it still more objectionable. Something may be needed to be done with regard to this matter of the green-house. When it is done, let it be taken up and acted upon considerately and understandingly, so that we may prevent the impositions which may otherwise be practiced upon the Government.

Mr. AVERETT. I am opposed to this amendment. It will be recollected by those who were here in the last Congress, that when the appropriation of $5,000 was asked for this green-house establishment, its friends utterly repudiated the idea of making it permanent. They stated that the rare plants and shrubs which had been brought here by the Exploring Expedition must be removed to give way for the extension of the Patent Office; that they ought to be preserved until a descriptive catalogue could be made of them, and until they could be presented to some botanical establishment. I repeat, that the idea of the Government engaging permanently in the green-house business was utterly repudiated.

Now, sir, neither your constituents nor mine care a fig for these shrubs and weeds. Some may consider this appropriation a mere picaresque affair, as not worth even a five minutes' speech; but in voting for it we would sanction a principle, which would lead, yea, is leading, to the lawless expenditure of millions. We appropriate $5,000 for a specific and temporary purpose. Those having charge of the money, without any lawful authority, run beyond the amount which we appropriate, and then demand that we shall "foot the bill." We see in this small affair that we ought to be cautious in putting even a new cog in a wheel of this Government. We put in the cog, and are taxed for a whole wheel. Sanction that, and we must pay for as many wheels as those whom we confide in to execute our laws choose to add to the machinery of this Government. I hope the committee will vote down this amendment, and that this Congress will put an end to the now fashionable system of spending money, or contracting debts, without authority of law. Sir, I would give these plants and shrubs to the corporation of Washington, to the Smithsonian Institution, to any body who has a taste for botany, yea, I would let them go to ruin, rather than sanction this amendment. I am against this green-house concern.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I offer the following amendment:

For supplying deficiency in the appropriation for the repairs of the Potomac bridge, $10,000.

Mr. S. The Commissioner of Public Buildings has examined the structure over the Potomac river, (and I have testimony from other sources which goes to prove the same fact,) and states that the bridge is in a condition of dilapidation and decay, which makes it dangerous for persons to pass over it. The sum of $10,000 is asked for the purpose of putting it in a condition of repair to render it fit for travelers. The appropriation of last year was $4,500; but that was not alone to make repairs, but to pay the keepers. The Commissioner informs the committee that the repairs cannot be made for less than $20,000; $10,000 will be necessary to be expended immediately, and the committee instruct me to ask for the passage of this item.

Mr. FICKLIN. I will reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New Hampshire. This is the Long Bridge which has been a very long offender. How much it has cost up to the present time, and how much it will cost in the future it is very difficult for any member of this House, or this Government, to accurately compute. We should not commence now by making $10,000 appropriations for it in a bill which should be, if we are correctly informed by members who have it in charge, speedily passed to meet the exigencies and wants of the Government. I do not know by what means my friend from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] gets the jurisdiction of this bridge. I did not know that it fell within the limits of the public grounds.

Mr. STANTON. With the permission of the gentleman, the public grounds, buildings, and bridges, are all under the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings. He is required by law to submit the estimates to the Committee on Public Buildings, to receive their approval before being laid before the House. That is the way in which we get jurisdiction.

Mr. FICKLIN. It may be legitimately before that committee, though it struck me, at first, it was not. I certainly think, if we undertake to patch up this long bridge, we should submit the whole subject to the consideration of the Committee on Public Buildings. It belongs to them, and let them bring in a bill. Let them digest this matter, report a bill, and not make an appropriation here.

The question was put, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk then read the following item:

"For payment to the American party of St. Regis Indians, (less the sum of one thousand dollars, appropriated by the act of twenty-seventh of June, eighteen hundred and forty-six, in pursuance of the stipulation contained in the supplemental article,) as a remuneration for moneys laid out by said tribe, and for services rendered by their chiefs and agents, in securing the title to the Green Bay lands, and in removal to the same, agreeably to the provisions of the ninth article of the treaty with the Six Nations of New York, of fifteenth of January, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, four thousand dollars."

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to submit the following amendment:

For payment to the Seneca Indians, of New York, for moneys wrongfully withheld from them by an agent appointed by the Government for the management of their affairs, as per report of Thomas B. Stoddard, commissioner, selected by the Secretary of War, to make the requisite investigation, pursuant to the direction contained in the fourth section of the act of 27th June, 1846, making appropriations for the Indian department, ($25,505 50,) twenty-five thousand five hundred and five dollars and fifty cents.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. Before the gentleman proceeds, I desire to say that this is not a deficiency bill, that there is not in it five items of deficiency in regard to Indian Affairs. I want to denounce the point of order before it is raised. I anticipated that it would be made, and if I am decided to be out of order, I shall take an appeal.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order, and it is this: The money expected to be appropriated under the amendment submitted by the gentleman, is not authorized by any existing law, nor is it in pursuance of any existing treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is in pursuance of an existing law. Now, I call the gentleman's attention, if he knows anything about the case, to the fact that the Committee on Indian Affairs has examined this subject, that their report is made in obedience to facts which, had I the time, I could state; that it is made in obedience to the act of June 27th, 1846, and that it cannot be said to be inconsistent with that law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes the gentleman from Arkansas will not discuss this question out of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not discussing it, but only answering an assertion that this appropriation was not made in obedience to law.

The CHAIRMAN. Offered as an amendment to the clause just read by the Clerk, the Chair is clearly of opinion that it is not in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is what I expected. Now, I want to make an inquiry of the Chair. Were I to object to certain items—not deficiencies—which have been introduced into this bill, as being inconsistent with this intention, what would be the decision of the Chair? Would he rule them out of order? I will demonstrate, if there is any truth in the record, that they are not deficiencies. I will take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and let the committee decide whether my amendment is or is not consistent with the bill. I trust I may be sustained by the committee. It is an estimate I offer, and nothing else.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will beg leave to state to the committee the facts upon which he has based his decision. In order that the committee may understand clearly, the Chair will read the clause under consideration.

[Here the Chair read from the clause under consideration, as inserted above.]

The gentleman from Arkansas proposes the amendment to this clause which has been read by the Clerk.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move it as a separate section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the question that is before the committee. The Chair has decided the amendment to be out of order upon the ground that it is not germane to the clause under consideration, which is to supply deficiencies, as read by the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thought that clause had been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not yet been passed.

That is the ground upon which the decision of the Chair was founded.

Mr. JOHNSON. Under the circumstances, I withdraw my appeal. I beg the Chair's pardon. As soon as the point of order is again raised, I shall take an appeal.

If there is no amendment to be proposed to that clause, I will move to intervene the amendment I sent to the Chair as an independent section between the clause which has been last read and the one following.

The Clerk again read the amendment, [the same as inserted above.]

Mr. PHELPS. I raise the same point of order which I before submitted. The act of the 27th of June, 1846—

Mr. JOHNSON. I call the gentleman to order, as the Chair has decided points of order are not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of order is not debatable.

Mr. PHELPS. I would like to state my point of order. The appropriation proposed in that amendment is not in pursuance of any existing law or treaty, nor is it a deficiency of any appropriation made at a previous time.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suppose I am privileged to make a statement also in regard to the point of order, as the gentleman has done so?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will say that the Committee of Ways and Means is not this House. It has dealt unjustly with these particular estimates for appropriations. If they are going to force the thing, I will try, so far as I am concerned, to meet them.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I will suggest to the Chair, if it is admissible to do so, that the gentleman be allowed to state the facts upon which this appropriation is asked, so that the committee may be enabled to decide upon this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The opinion of the Chair in regard to this amendment, in the language employed is, that it is in order as an amendment to this bill; and in order that the committee may understand the decision of the Chair, he would ask leave to state the amendment as it appears:

For payment to the Seneca Indians of New York for moneys wrongly withdrawn from them by an agent appointed by the Government for the management of their affairs, as per report of Thomas B. Stoddard, Commissioner selected by the Secretary of War to make the requisite investigation, pursuant to the direction contained in the 4th section of the act of June 27th, 1846, making appropriation for the Indian Department ($21,505 50) twenty-five thousand five hundred and five dollars and fifty cents.

The language is not very clear, but the construction which the Chair gives to it is, to make up to the Indians the amount of money hitherto appropriated to them, and improperly withheld by the agent.

Mr. PHELPS. I am under the necessity of appealing from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I am entitled to the floor, and I take the decision. I do not care what it is based upon, it is in my favor. [Laughter.]

Mr. PHELPS. I take the opportunity to show that this appropriation is not in pursuance of law.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does this come out of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. The honorable gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] is not in order.

Mr. PHELPS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that we may understand this matter. I wish to ask the gentleman if the Department did not estimate this as a deficiency, and can we go behind the estimates of the Department, as to what is deficiency, on questions of order?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is a point, and a correct one.

The question was then taken, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? and it was decided in the affirmative. So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. JOHNSON. I believe my time is only to commence now. I will speak of the position of the amendment here and upon this class of cases in general. I see, as war has been made upon this amendment, that it is to be made upon the rest of those which I shall offer. I would be glad to ask, in order that I may have a chance now to defend this same class of items throughout, and not be under the necessity of saying anything more about it, upon what ground numberless of these same articles have been put into the deficiency bill. They are not deficiencies. They have been put there because they have been estimated for by the Department as deficiencies; and, upon that basis, the Committee of Ways and Means—and they cannot deny it—have allowed numberless items to go into the deficiency bill which are not deficiencies at all.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. If I understand the gentleman, he asserts that there is nothing in the bill that is estimated here, as connected with Indian affairs, that properly constitutes deficiency.

Mr. JOHNSON. Not at all. He will understand me to say, that there are some things in the bill which are not deficiencies, no more than those which I shall offer. Now, that is the course which the committee take, and the ground upon which they make their deficiency is upon the estimates of the Departments. I shall offer nothing to the House outside of the limits of the estimates of the Department, and only so far within the estimates as they are necessary, according to the opinion of the committee of which I am a member, to the service of the country. With these few remarks, I will pass this matter. In regard to this particular item, I will say that the Senate passed a bill for the payment of this identical sum of money in 1846—$25,000, and upwards. The bill came to this House, and the House not being satisfied that a proper investigation had been made with regard to it, struck out the appropriation, and inserted a clause requiring the then Secretary of War to cause investigations to be made into the matter.

A commissioner was appointed by him—Thomas B. Stoddard—who investigated the facts, and reported them to the War Department. They have gone to the Indian bureau; and they, finding the estimate to be just and right, and finding the regularity of the application to be unmistakable, have made their estimates, and sent them to this House for the payment of these Indians. Some of the money which was held by the Government of the United States for these Indians, has never been paid over to them. That is the history of the case. In obedience to that investigation, the estimate is made by the Indian department, with an accompanying recommendation that the money be paid. Not one cent of interest is asked or estimated for by the department; but simply the original sum. In 1836, '37, '38, and '39 these defaults occurred; the last one was in 1839, and from that time to the present—twelve years—have these Indians been deprived of their just rights and the money which was due to them. Now, the Commissioner comes in, and estimates under the previous investigation, and furnishes it for the Committee of Ways and Means, for a deficiency bill. The question which comes before us, ought they to be paid or not? I understand the Commissioner to say they ought not to be. If they will look a little more into the law—though I do not profess to be much of a lawyer myself—they will find that where a party has acted as trustee, he will be held responsible for the faithful discharge of his trust; and where moneys are placed in his hands, he will be held responsible for them. It has been proved, after a full investigation, that the money in this case was placed in the hands of the Government agent. [I beg the Chairman not to handle that mallet so much; it makes me uneasy. (Laughter.) It hastens me rather too much.] This money was placed in the hands of the Government agent, and I read to the House, in my speech the other day, a full statement of the charge, under the hand and seal of the Secretary of War, requiring the United States agent to take charge of the moneys of these Indians; and I have another letter to the same effect. Under these circumstances, the Government agent was constituted their trustee—in other words, the United States became the trustee of their money. That money has never been paid over to them. They now ask it of you. In numberless cases have the Government responded to their obligations as trustees, and have paid them; but when it comes to a poor, helpless, and weak tribe of Indians, your arm is strong, but you have not the heart—the honesty—to pay them. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to speak against this amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the gentleman to allow this letter to be read, as the House may want the facts.

Mr. PHELPS. Not now.

Mr. JOHNSON. After the gentleman is done, I shall ask that it be read.

Mr. PHELPS. This claim has been regarded in the nature of a private claim. It was so considered, when a report was made in favor of it by the Senate—the report to which the gentleman has referred. It was then reported by the Senate, and was considered exclusively as a private bill, and submitted to the usual investigation of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has seen fit to embrace it in his estimates of deficiencies. I have remarked that it was no deficiency, and I say it is questionable whether the Indians are entitled to any consideration whatever upon the claim they have presented. The act of 1846 authorizes—and I have it here before me—the appointment of a commissioner to investigate and ascertain whether any moneys had been improperly withheld or retained by an Indian agent in the State of New York, which justly belonged to the Seneca Indians. They were entitled to annuities from the Government of the United States and from the State of New York. I believe most of the persons composing the tribe of the Senecas were as competent to manage the affairs of their nation and their own affairs, as most of the white men of the country; for many of them are of mixed blood, and are well educated. A gentleman by the name of Stryker held the office of Indian Agent during the years of 1836, '37, '38, and '39, when it is said this money was improperly taken from the Indians. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his instructions to Mr. Stoddard, who was appointed to investigate this matter, remarks as follows:

"The moneys said to have been retained by the sub-agent, and not paid over to the Indians, were received by him from the State of New York and the 'Ogden Company,' and did not pass through the hands of the Government; consequently, all the information which the Department is possessed of is derived from the Indians themselves, or individuals attending to their interests. The sub-agent always received the money upon orders directly emanating from the chiefs, or constituted authorities of the nation, to be by him paid over as he might be directed by the same authority; there was, therefore, no accountability on the part of the sub-agent to the Government."

There was no accountability, therefore, upon the part of the sub-agent to the Government. The sub-agent was required to give bond and security for the faithful discharge of his duties, and for all the moneys which passed from the hands of the Government; he and his securities were responsible for the faithful application and disbursement of these moneys and for the moneys which he received from those Indians, and by their authority and direction he was not responsible upon his official bond. The Indians were willing to consider him their agent and attorney in his private capacity.

I will remark, that in all the investigation, Stryker did not appear before that commissioner; but he says in the letters he addressed to that officer in regard to the charge, that he had disposed of moneys which fell into his hands—that he had expended a large amount of his own private funds, and that the Indians were indebted to him. He gave as an excuse that he was afflicted at that time with an inflammation of the eyes, so that he was prevented from even writing or reading, and was otherwise in ill health, and could, therefore, make no further explanation of the matter. The report made by this commissioner shows, that some of this money passed into the hands of a former sub-agent, and it is questionable whether a defalcation, if defalcation it may be called, did not occur under the former sub-agent. I say, in the first place, it is doubtful whether there is anything due to the Indians. Certain it is, that a former Commissioner of Indian Affairs declared these funds were deposited by the Indians with the agent upon his own individual responsibility, and not upon the responsibility of the Government, and that the Government could not be held responsible for any misapplication of these funds. These are the facts in relation to the case, and these are the reasons for considering it no deficiency, and for considering no appropriation necessary. Consider it merely as a matter which applies to common justice. We see no right or authority to make this appropriation in the deficiency bill. It is not to carry out any existing law, or any treaty stipulation. Tolerate this practice, and the claim of every private individual will come up in your appropriation bills as this claim does. Stryker was the agent of the Indians, and not the agent of the Government. It is their misfortune, and not ours. He had no authority or instructions from the Government to manage these funds, except by the consent of the Indians. He was made the agent of the Indians in this matter by themselves, and not by the Government. For any alleged faithlessness on the part of their agents or attorneys, let them look to the individuals, and not to the Government.

Mr. WOODWARD then offered the following amendment to the amendment, to come in at the end thereof:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby required, upon payment of the money herein specified, to take such further steps, if any may be necessary, as shall enable the United States to recover the amount due from said agent.

Mr. W. said: If the money in question was not wrongfully withheld from the Indians, the section proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] ought not to pass. If the money was wrongfully withheld, it ought not to pass without the proviso I offer.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. With the permission of my friend from South Carolina, I will state to the committee a fact in connection with this subject. This agent is now said to be a man of wealth, and I am assured by two members of this House, is in independent circumstances. I believe the proviso offered by the gentleman from South Carolina to be correct, and I think it ought to be adopted in connection with my amendment.

If I had time, I would reply to the—I will not say willful, but unquestionable, misstatements of my friend from Missouri, in regard to the manner in which this liability has been incurred.

Mr. PHELPS. I read the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. And I will read you the actual documents from the War Department.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him if the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri is correct?

Mr. JOHNSON. It is not.

Mr. PHELPS. I stated what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs said.

Mr. STANTON. Which Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. JOHNSON. It was Medill, who never did decide on a claim properly.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask the indulgence of the committee for one moment. The gentleman from Arkansas says that the statement I have made is incorrect—

Mr. JOHNSON. I would ask if the gentleman from Missouri is entitled to the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. He is not. The gentleman from Arkansas is entitled to the floor during the balance of the five minutes appropriated to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I ask for the reading of the letter which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF WAR, August 11, 1832.

SIR: Your letter of the 4th instant, with its inclosures, has been laid before me by Judge Herring. I have directed a general authority to be prepared, which I inclose in place of the papers you forwarded. Upon referring to the correspondence, at the date of the contract between the Senecas and Oliver Phelps and his associates, I do not find that the Superintendent was then authorized to act as their trustee in this matter. It seems proper, therefore, that their assent should be regularly obtained. The other regulations are the customary ones in similar cases.

You have been advised from the Indian bureau, that, to avoid the charge of postage to the Department, your dispatches should be directed on the envelop, for whomsoever intended, to the Secretary of War. The inconvenience resulting from a different course, obliges me to request your compliance with this regulation.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN ROBB, Acting Secretary War.

JAMES STRYKER, Esq.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well now, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri if the Oliver Phelps who was engaged in this transaction, is any relation of his?

Mr. PHELPS. He is not.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then the gentleman has no personal feeling in relation to the matter?

Mr. PHELPS. None at all, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, that letter shows the authority from the Government of the United States to that agent to act between the Indians and the parties with whom they had transactions, and to receive money for them; and we cannot now escape the responsibility. That letter, and another which I published in my speech the other day, make the Government the trustee—the decision of Mr. Medill to the contrary notwithstanding. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHELPS. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. WOODWARD.] In the first place, the sub-agent, Stryker, was not responsible to the Government of the United States for this alleged defalcation, but he was responsible to the Indians only, and a suit against him by the Government is therefore unavailing. There was no money placed in his hands by the authority of the Secretary of War or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

But the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] took occasion to declare that the statement which I made in regard to the liability of this individual, was incorrect. I had only the information contained in the public records of the country. Upon those I relied; and I say that my information is correct. I desire now to read another paragraph, in addition to what I read when I was last up:

"He acted as the agent or attorney for the Indians in his private capacity, although he was selected, as they state, in consequence of his connection with the Government, thereby, as they supposed, increasing the safety of the money coming into his hands; all, therefore, that the Government could do, was to admonish the agent to act justly towards the Indians; and this was repeatedly done, and as often explained, to the satisfaction of the Department, by him until his resignation, on the 20th October, 1840, when it became apparent that all was not right; but the sub-agent being out of office, the Department had no means of compelling the restitution of the moneys said to have been withheld."

As I learn, the accounts of this sub-agent are settled. He does not appear to be accountable to this Government for any portion of the money which was placed in his hands, having exhibited proper vouchers for every dollar he received from the Government. If, then, Stryker is now responsible, if he is solvent, the Indians have their redress and remedy against him, by a resort to the courts of law, and they ought not to come here and ask it from the Government. You might as well make the Government responsible for money left by individuals in the hands of the receivers and registers of the land office in their individual and private capacity, for the purpose of entering lands when they shall come into the market. Are you prepared to sanction such a doctrine as that, for the purpose of insuring the passage of an appropriation of money to go into the hands of claims-agents, and persons engaged in prosecuting claims? Are you prepared to appropriate money to individuals and not to carry on the ordinary expenses of the Government?

The very letter which was read there, at the desk, shows that the money was to be received by the sub-agent in his individual capacity, by the consent of the Indians. They saw fit to place the money in his hands, as they had a right to do.

I say, then, that it is improper that the Government of the United States should be held responsible for this amount of money. Let there be a fair investigation of this matter. The commissioner states that all the evidence which has been obtained on this subject has been from the Indians themselves, and those interested in the matter. It was an ex parte hearing or investigation. Stryker did not appear before the commissioner. I have in my hand the report that was made at that time. I find the Indians coming up and testifying somewhat indefinitely and vaguely in relation to this matter.

[Here the hammer fell.]

On motion by Mr. CLINGMAN, the committee then rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. STUART,) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 207, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a memorial for the purpose of having it referred. It is the memorial of a citizen of this District, preferring certain charges against an officer in the District.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Who is the memorialist, and who is the officer implicated?

Mr. CABLE. It is a memorial from Mr. Greenough, preferring charges against Mr. Ewbank, of the Patent Office. I ask that it may be received and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Several MEMBERS objected.

On motion by Mr. FLORENCE, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the memorial and papers of the widow of Nehemiah Shockley, asking for a pension, be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. WALSH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs are hereby instructed, to inquire into the expediency of the surrender by the United States, to the State of Maryland, of the jurisdiction of the United States over, and its title to, a parcel of land, situated on the Patuxent river, within the limits of the city of Baltimore, and known as the "Site of Fort Covington."

On motion by Mr. ORR, the House then adjourned.

NOTICE OF BILLS.

Mr. DUNCAN gave notice that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, he would ask leave to introduce "A bill to amend the tariff act of 1846, by reducing the duty on imported sheep's wool costing ten cents per pound or less at the place where imported; also, to reduce the duty on flax imported; also, to admit free of duty raw-silk, dye-woods, madder, indigo, certain articles used in dyeing and composing dyes, burr-stones, grind-stones, and various other articles."

Mr. FOWLER gave notice that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, he would ask leave to introduce "A bill to refund the balance due to Massachusetts for disbursements during the late war with Great Britain."

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. ORR: The petition of Edward Hise, J. B. Isby, S. Barksdale, and 433 other citizens of Lauren's District, South Carolina, against the extension of Woodworth's patent.

By Mr. APPLETON, of Maine: The petition of A. W. H. Clapp and others, citizens of Portland, Maine, in aid of the Collins line of steamers.

By Mr. THOMPSON, of Virginia: Various petitions of the citizens of different portions of Wetzel county, Virginia, praying the establishment of different mail routes.

Also, the petition of 155 citizens of Ohio county, in favor of the Wheeling bridge.

Also, the petition of a large number of the citizens of Donegal township, Washington county, Pennsylvania, in favor of the Wheeling bridge.

Also, the petition of 92 citizens of Virginia, in favor of the Wheeling bridge.

Also, the petition of 135 citizens of Ohio county, Virginia, in favor of the Wheeling bridge.

By Mr. BIBBIGHAUS: The petition of W. T. Sanders and others, assistant marshals of Dauphin county, Pennsylvania, asking additional compensation for taking the Seventh Census.

By Mr. SCHERMERHORN: The petition of Azel Fitch and others, of Livingston county, New York, against the further extension of Woodworth's patent.

By Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania: The petition of W. F. Filbert and 140 others, of Berks county, Pennsylvania, praying for an alteration in the bounty land law.

By Mr. McNAIR: The petition and documents of Jacob Drinkhouse, praying compensation for revolutionary services.

By Mr. ASHE: The memorial of the citizens of Wilmington, North Carolina, praying the improvement of the bars and river at that port.

By Mr. SWEETSER: The petition of George F. Stayman and 43 others, citizens of Delaware, Ohio, asking Congress to make an appropriation to defray the expenses of locating a road from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean; also, for an appropriation of lands along said road to form settlements.

Also, the petition of A. W. Paul and 53 others, citizens of Franklin county, Ohio, on the same subject.

Also, the petition of J. G. Gist and 62 others, citizens of Franklin county, Ohio, on the same subject.

Also, the petition of William M. Galbraith and 34 others, on the same subject.

Also, the petition of M. H. Grinnell, of the city of New York, praying Congress to establish a Mint in said city.

By Mr. EASTMAN: The memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, relative to the jurisdiction of the United States district court for the district of Wisconsin.

Also, the petition of citizens of Lima, Grant county, Wisconsin, asking a mail route.

Also, the petition of citizens of Crawford county, Wisconsin, asking a mail route from Prairie du Chien to Eagle Point, Boydtown, and Fennimore.

By Mr. DOTY: The petition of Arthur B. Blackburn, James D. Law, and other citizens of Berlin, Wisconsin, for the right of way for a plank road through the public lands, from Berlin to Plover.

Also, The memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, for a law to restrict the jurisdiction of the district court of said State.

By Mr. SCHOOLCRAFT: The petition of Andrew White and other citizens of Albany, New York, praying Congress to extend the Woodworth patent.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 25, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a communication from the Navy Department, inclosing a copy of a letter from Mr. John Roberts, agent of the United States Mail Steamship Company, as being a portion of the information possessed by this Department, called for by a resolution of the Senate of the 4th instant, and not received until after the report in relation to the United States mail steamers was transmitted; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a petition of citizens of the counties of Penobscot and Waldo, Maine, praying the establishment of a mail route from Bangor to Hampden, Lower Corner, and other towns, and the discontinuance of others; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, the petition of Allen Lewis, owner of the fishing schooner Forester; the petition of Ezekiel Holbrook and other owners of the fishing schooner Grampus; and the petition of John Cameron and others, owners of the fishing schooner Stephen C. Philips, which were lost at sea, praying to be allowed fishing bounties; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition signed by one hundred and twenty-nine citizens of Boston, and a petition signed by one hundred and twenty-six citizens of Worcester, Massachusetts, praying a reduction in the rates of ocean postage; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of citizens of Dorchester and Quincy, Massachusetts, praying the renewal of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. FISH. I present three several memorials of citizens of New York, praying Congress to adopt, in these times of foreign discord and domestic agitation, the principles of Washington, as embodied in his Farewell Address, and illustrated by his life, which was devoted to the service of his country.

The memorialists say that it is impossible for a free nation like ours, to be indifferent to the success and extension of the principles of national freedom throughout the world; and that they deem it inexpedient, even if it were practicable, to leave our own to stand on foreign ground. They present America as the beacon-light which points the way our fathers trod, as a guide for obtaining liberty and independence. To go further, they think a case of unjustifiable interference on our part, towards foreign Powers with whom the United States are at peace, would prove injurious to those people who seek relief, by relying more upon foreign aid than upon the justice of their cause, or their own ability to achieve independence.

The memorials are numerous and respectfully signed by gentlemen of all political parties. As the subject is before the Senate, I move that they lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FISH also presented a petition of citizens of Buffalo, New York, praying an extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying that the bounty land act of 1850 may be so modified as to give to each of the persons intended to be benefited by said act and to seamen and marines who served in the war of 1812, not less than one hundred and sixty acres of land; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the petition of George Dennett, praying compensation for services rendered as naval officer, at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill, for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOWNS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which were referred the letters of the Secretary of the Interior in relation to the accommodations of the United States courts, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to provide suitable accommodations for the courts of the United States; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GEYER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill in addition to "An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States;" which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill granting the right of way, and making a grant of land to the State of Michigan, in trust for the Zilwaukee, Grand Traverse, and Mackinaw Plank Road Company, in aid of the construction of a road from Zilwaukee, on the Saginaw river, to Grand Traverse Bay, thence to the Straits of Mackinaw, reported it back, with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of James Jones; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. BROOKE, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill, granting lands to the States of Louisiana and Mississippi, in aid of the construction of certain railroads therein; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the benefit of the town of Bellevue, in Iowa; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN OHIO.

The bill to divide the State of Ohio into two judicial districts, and to provide for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States therein, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill divides the State of Ohio into two judicial districts. The counties of Belmont, Guernsey, Muskingum, Licking, Franklin, Madison, Champaign, Shelby, and Mercer, together with that part of the State lying south of the above-mentioned counties, are to compose one district, to be called the southern district of Ohio, a court for which is to be held at the city of Cincinnati; and all the remaining part of the State is to compose another district to be called the northern district of Ohio, for which a court is to be held in the city of Cleveland.

MEXICAN BOUNDARY COMMISSIONER.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. WELLER, the 22d instant, in relation to charges against the commissioner appointed to run the boundary between the United States and Mexico; and it was agreed to.

POSTAL STATISTICS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, which was submitted by Mr. SUMNER on the 18th instant:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested to report to the Senate the whole number of letters which passed through the post offices of the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1851, distinguishing the paid from the unpaid, those paid by stamps from those paid by cash; also, the number of free letters.

Also, the aggregate number of drop letters during the same period.

Also, the amount of printed matter, number of newspapers and periodicals sent through the post offices during the same period, distinguishing the paid from the free; and if this be not practicable, then to furnish an estimate thereof.

Also, the number of dead letters returned to the General Post Office during the same period, and the amount of postage due thereon; the amount of property found in the same; the amount restored to owners, and the amount for which no owners have been found, and the disposition made of the balance on hand.

Also, the cost of the transportation of the mails and the postage collected in each of the several States during the same period.

Also, the number of letters conveyed during the same period by the Cunard, Collins, Bremen, and Havre lines of steamers respectively, distinguishing the paid from the unpaid; also, the number of newspapers conveyed by the same lines respectively, and the amount of postage collected on the same.

Also, to report the amount of postage collected by each of the said lines in the United States and Great Britain, respectively; and the amount of commissions paid to our postmasters on the balance due and paid to the British Government on account of postage.

Also, the number of dead letters returned to the United States and Great Britain, respectively, under the postal treaty, and the amount of postage due thereon.

Also, the same with regard to dead letters returned to the United States and Bremen, respectively.

Also, the amount required from and paid to the British Government on account of closed mails, and the rates per ounce of such conveyance.

Also, the amount paid for the transmission of letters to the continent of Europe and to China by the Oriental line of steamers; also the number of letters sent to China, via Marseilles.

Also, the number of letters conveyed between New York and California, and also between New York and Oregon, via Chagres and Panama, and the amount of postage collected thereon, distinguishing the paid from the unpaid, and the number of free letters, and the number of newspapers, and the postage thereon.

Also, the number of letters and newspapers conveyed by the Charleston and Havana steamer, and the amount of postage collected thereon.

Also, the number of ship letters received during the same period in the offices of the United States, and the amount paid for the same.

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested, in his next annual report for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1852, to embody answers for that period to the inquiries in the preceding resolution.

Mr. RUSK. I promised to read that resolution, but neglected to do so on account of other matters; and I now desire to ask the Senator whether it contemplates that it shall be answered now, or in the annual report of the Postmaster General?

Mr. SUMNER. It is designed that that part relating to the last fiscal year shall be answered now; and that that relating to the next fiscal year shall be answered in the next annual report of the Postmaster General. In introducing the resolution, (which I did after some consideration of the matter, believing that the topics to which it relates were of great importance,) I ascertained from a person whom I considered a competent judge, that the inquiry could probably be answered in the space of three weeks. The matters are important; and therefore seem to justify the inquiry.

Mr. RUSK. The resolution asks for information which is important, and which I think ought to have been, or at least a large portion of it, ought to have been returned in the annual report of the Postmaster General. But it struck me, as it was read, that it would occupy a longer time than three weeks to prepare the information. I know that they are very much engaged in the Post Office Department. They have not clerks enough. In fact, they are asking for more. The Postmaster General has no clerk of his own. To be sure, nominally he has a clerk assigned to him; but he is at the head of a bureau, and can only spend part of his time with him. I am anxious that all the information asked for in the resolution should be before the Senate. I think a large portion of it is very important.

Mr. BADGER. Let us pass the resolution at any rate. If we cannot get it in three weeks, let us get it in three months.

The resolution was then adopted.

NAVY-YARD AND DRY-DOCK IN CALIFORNIA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill to establish a navy-yard and depot on the bay of San Francisco, in California.

Mr. BRODHEAD. When the Senate adjourned the other day, I had nearly concluded the remarks that I intended to make on the subject of the dry-dock, basin, and railway in California. I shall now occupy but little of the time and attention of the Senate, in concluding what I have to say.

It is important, in the first place, Mr. President, to ascertain exactly the question which is to be decided, and the facts which bear upon that question. The question now to be decided by the Senate is, whether we will establish a basin and railway in connection with a dry-dock in California, or a pier. That is the precise question now under consideration.

I stated the other day, that the proposed structure of a basin and railway was not only without, but against, the recommendation of the Navy Department; and, besides, that it is useless and unnecessary. The honorable Senator from California, in his speech, referred to fortifications on the Eastern and on the Western coasts, and to steam-vessels. With that portion of his speech—and he occupied most of his time in discussing questions of that kind—I have nothing to do; I have no reply to make to it. I have stated that the basin and railway would cost at least $1,000,000; and, therefore, that the pier, which will cost but $50,000, ought to be adopted, in compliance with the recommendation of the Navy Department. That Department has never yet, as I will show, recommended this basin and railway; and no vessel has ever yet been tested upon one, either in the merchant or naval service of the United States. Nay, more, Mr. President; not only is it without the recommendation of the Navy Department, but it is against the solemn decision of the last Congress. I will refer to the last navy appropriation bill, to sustain this allegation:

"For the floating dry dock in California, $150,000; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby required so to modify the contract, alleged to have been made on the 17th of January last, as to confine the same to the construction of the floating dock alone, without the basin and railway."

That was based upon the recommendation of the Navy Department. I stated this once before; and how was it met by the honorable Senator from California? He stated that he would not intrude upon the private business—it was private bill day—but, says he—

"When I do speak, I pledge myself not to leave the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BRODHEAD], for the argument brought forward this morning, and which has been so laboriously prepared, an inch of ground to stand on."

"The Senator's speech is a mere rehash of arguments which have been brought up, time and again, in opposition to this system, and discredited by both Houses of Congress."

Here I make an issue of fact with the Senator. I show the act of Congress sustaining those arguments, if they ever were advanced before. I was not a member of the last Congress. But the honorable Senator, when he addressed the Senate last, said that Mr. Henshaw, upon a former occasion, recommended this dock. Now, upon an examination of what Mr. Henshaw said, I find that he only recommended it to be tested. He did not recommend the adoption of it, as I understand it; if he did, I can be corrected. He recommended the testing of it. Then Mr. Mason came into office. He was succeeded by Mr. Preston, and he again by the present Secretary of the Navy. I will show you, presently, the opinion of Mr. Mason, and then I will give a brief sketch of the history of these dock operations on the Atlantic side; and if I do not show you one of the most magnificent schemes of speculation that was ever carried through Congress, I am very much mistaken. I will do it from the record, from the record which the contractors themselves have made.

Mr. President, I have said that this was not only useless, but unnecessary. In answer to that, the Senator from California says that the basin and railway are not to be erected until those which are in Philadelphia or Kittery shall be tested. Suppose the test should fail, then when are you going to have a dry-dock established, and how? Suppose it should fail—as it has signally failed in Philadelphia, as I will show. The Philadelphia dry-dock is not only a signal failure, but it is a nuisance, and has cost near a million of dollars. In support of this allegation, I will show what the honorable Senator himself said on this subject when he first called up this bill. He is chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and ought to be good authority:

"There is another reason why this bill should pass. At the last session of Congress there was an act passed authorizing the building of a sectional floating dock, and there was a site selected for the location of that dock. But, upon an experiment made at Philadelphia, it has been ascertained that there is not water enough at the site selected."

What is the depth of water at the site selected by the joint commission which was sent out in 1848 and 1849, and made a report in 1850? I will presently read an extract from that report. I understand there is forty feet of water there. Then, if these contractors told the truth in regard to the location at Philadelphia, when they were making their application for that site, the selection made by the joint commission sent out under the last Administration is correct, and this bill ought not to pass in its present shape. When they were before Congress before, the contractors stated, over and over again, when they were charged by the gentlemen whom they have taken into partnership with them, that their structure would require greater depth of water than was to be found in any one of the navy-yards—that their structure could be put up in Philadelphia. But when it is put up, we find in the deficiency bill an item of $12,000 to be appropriated for dredging in front of the dry-dock, notwithstanding that, by the terms of the contract, it was to be taken off the contractor's hands and tested last June. It may have been taken off their hands; but no vessel, no ship-of-the-line—and it was designed for ships-of-the-line—has ever yet been placed upon it; and I think never will be.

Mr. President, this plan of dock has been known to the public for years past. How, then, does it happen that the whaling vessels that are fitted out in New England have never adopted it? Why is it that this basin and railway has never been adopted in the merchant service? That is an important inquiry. Do you suppose that the intelligent Yankees who fit out these vessels would not have used this dock, if it were as useful as it has been represented? I made inquiry of the honorable and distinguished Senator from Rhode Island upon the subject, and I found that they never have adopted it. This basin and railway has never been adopted in the merchant service. But, says the honorable Senator, they are about to build one in New York. How does it happen that they never built one before? But I would like to know how he obtained his information.

Mr. GWIN. Do you deny it?

Mr. BRODHEAD. I want to know whether he speaks from personal knowledge. I would like to know how, and where he got the information.

Mr. GWIN. I assert the fact. If the Senator denies it, I am ready to give the proof.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have never yet heard of one being established; and I doubt whether the honorable Senator has seen it.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President—

Mr. BRODHEAD. I do not doubt that he has been so informed—not at all. I do not doubt but that he believes all that he has said. But, sir, I know very well that if it had been such a useful structure it would have been adopted long since. Why should the Government adopt it first?

But it is said, Mr. President, that this pier would be eaten up by the worms. Well, sir, it can be coppered, as I said the other day, in the same manner that floating dry-docks are coppered. If the project of building a basin and railway is adopted, how long will it be—and I put the question to the Senator from California, and to the Senate—how long will it be before the floating dry-dock, which was ordered at the last session, and which the Senator from California informs us is now on its way out, can be put to use? It cannot be used without a basin and railway, or a pier; and it will take six or seven years, according to the statement of the Navy Department, to construct the basin and railway. So the structure which we ordered at the last session, and for which we are to pay $610,000, will be idle and useless, and will be eaten up by worms before the railway can be constructed.

I will now go into a history of the dock operations on the Atlantic side; and I will state first generally how it is, and then follow it with the proof. These gentlemen came here in 1843 or 1844—two sets of them—each claiming a patent. They both presented memorials, in opposition to the recommendation of the Navy Department, and they informed Congress what these docks, basins, and railways could be established for. They estimated the expense at $350,000 or $400,000. They have received about $800,000 for each one, and I will show the modus operandi presently.

In 1844 Mr. John S. Gilbert presented his memorial here on the 29th of March. I have the original document which was presented in this body; and I wish it to be noticed that he is one of the contractors in the case now before the Senate, as I understand. On your table is the contract for the establishment at Kittery, in which his name appears. He had a contest with a gentleman by the name of Dakin, as I find by the record, and they contested the matter for years; and finally I find them all together, and the work divided up.

Well, sir, Mr. John S. Gilbert, one of the partners in the contract for the construction of the California dock, presented his memorial, a part of which I will read:

"For a floating dock at Brooklyn, New York, built in the best manner, of galvanized iron up to the load line, capable of raising and sustaining the largest line of battleship in our Navy, with armament and stores on board, weighing five thousand two hundred tons, $250,000.

"For a dock to be built in the same manner at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for a frigate of the first class, $150,000.

"For a dock to be built in the same manner at Pensacola, for a frigate of the second class, $100,000.

"For basins and railways, to be used in connection with the docks proposed by your memorialist, are estimated to cost $40,000 each."

I read also from a document entitled "A Brief Sketch of the Plan and Advantages of a Sectional Floating Dock," published in 1843, the following:

"From the foregoing plain statement of facts, certificates, and recommendations presented in this document, members of Congress will be enabled (without being compelled to depend upon the judgment or opinion of those who are prejudiced against all improvements in our Navy, or whose interest leads them to oppose) to judge for themselves, whether it will be for the best interest of the country to construct an expensive excavated dock, requiring eight years to build it, at an expense of $1,200,000 when completed, or to build an economical floating dock, at an expense of only $250,000, which can be completed in six months, and which it is believed by those best able to judge, will be the most serviceable dock for all naval purposes."

A ship-of-the-line is the largest vessel in the service.

Mr. BADGER. Is that for building a ship-of-the-line?

Mr. BRODHEAD. No; it is for building a dock for a ship-of-the-line. He then goes on to praise his own dock, and shows that the dock of Mr. Dakin is not worth anything. I intend, sir, to use the evidence of these men against each other, and to show that they went together, and both plans of docks were adopted, and that they must have made $1,000,000, if they told the truth; and it follows further, that if they told the truth in their memorials, the docks which they have constructed are not worth anything. He then goes on to praise this dock right well, and says that Mr. Dakin's dock is not worth much. Here is the memorial, which any Senator can see. Then Mr. Dakin presented his memorial. But before leaving this memorial of Mr. Gilbert, I must also read you what he says in regard to the depth of water required to work Dakin's dock:

"It is important to observe that a dock on the plan here proposed can operate at any navy-yard where the water is deep enough to float a ship with her armament on board. No expense for excavating and keeping open the channel will be necessary, as is the case with other docks. Mr. Sanger, the engineer at the Bureau of Docks and Yards, reports that the expense of dredging the channel, to enable Dakin's dock to operate, including crib-work to keep the same open, will be $150,358."

And yet, sir, Dakin's dock has been taken, and Gilbert is one of the partners for constructing it.

Now, I will read to you how much he did receive, after Mr. Dakin had withdrawn his opposition to him, and he had withdrawn his opposition to Mr. Dakin:

"For balance floating dock at Kittery, $437,325; for basin and one railway, $282,580."

Now, look at the contract on the table for the establishment at Kittery. You will find this same gentleman is one of the partners in the business for which he and his associates offered to build this basin and railway for $40,000, thereby getting Congress to pass the act, and then, when it was passed, they received $282,580; and the other gentleman received at Philadelphia $411,059 for a basin and railway, and $402,683 for a dock, making in all the sum of $813,742. For the dock, basin, and railway at Pensacola they received $921,937, and for the dock at California 610,000, making together $3,078,594—a pretty good sum of money for one set of contractors to receive, who excluded competition by claiming a patent.

Now, sir, Mr. Dakin presented his memorial to Congress, in which he complains that there was a violation of his contract made for putting up a dock at Pensacola; he also complains that his original contract was violated, and desires that it may be altered. He says that "Mr. Upshur entered into a contract with him for $70,000; that his plan is decidedly the best, and that the plan of the 'other gentleman ought not to be adopted.'" Here is the memorial. Both these gentlemen were well sustained by scientific gentlemen, as they say.

Well, sir, they contested the matter up to the year 1847, as I find by the record; various contests took place between the parties represented by these two patentees and their associates. Then Congress passed an act directing the Secretary of the Navy to cause to be constructed at each of the yards of Kittery, Philadelphia, and Pensacola, a dry-dock for ships-of-the-line, and a railway at any such place as may be preferred by the Secretary of the Navy. You perceive that this first act of 1847 conferred a discretionary power on the Secretary of the Navy. But, sir, the contest commenced before him, (Mr. Mason,) and here is his report on the subject. The contest commenced before him, and they refused to allow the Secretary of the Navy to use their patent-right; and that is the way the matter came back to Congress again. I will read what the Secretary says:

"Each of the several plans of the docks submitted to the Departments was a patented invention, and good faith would not permit me to invade that patent, by using it, without the consent of the proprietors. Therefore the proprietors of the two plans of docks known as the balance and sectional dock, in their propositions, in answer to the invitations of the Department in March last, do not specify any price at which the right to use their patents would be sold to the Department."

Mind what an honest report this is—

"—And the price contained in their proposals for the construction by contract greatly exceed the sums appropriated for the object to the three navy-yards. The chief of the bureau of docks and navy-yards, under my direction, again addressed the proprietors of these two plans; again called their attention to this point of inquiry, and requested them to state the price at which the Government would be permitted to use the patent in constructing the docks authorized."

"They declined to make such an arrangement, but again repeated the offer to contract for the execution of the work." The Secretary of the Navy replied that he could not evade a patent-right, and hence the whole matter came up again in Congress in 1848. But what does the Secretary of the Navy say as to the propriety of making these docks?

"On the question of the most suitable plan for a dry-dock, my own opinion, officially formed in 1844, in favor of the permanent stone dock, as preferable to all others, is unchanged."

Well, sir, then it came into Congress. Those gentlemen who had contested the ground before in Congress, and got their bill passed, leaving it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, came into Congress again, and in 1848 obtained the passage of an act under which these contracts were made. Here is the act, sir, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, and directing him peremptorily—for, sir, nothing was left to his discretion—to adopt the plans of both these gentlemen.

Now, you can easily understand how it was done. They got tired of warring with each other, and then they came to Congress and get the contracts together. They get all the contracts they had been asking for, one set getting the contract for the work at Kittery, another at Philadelphia, and another at Pensacola, all of them going on together; for their names are all in the contract for the California dock. Now, this is very evident, and the reason must be apparent to every one, how they obtained nearly $1,000,000 for each of these structures, when their memorials show that they offered to do the work for $350,000 or $400,000. So that, if they told the truth when they came to get the contracts, they have made $1,000,000.

Now, Mr. President, I think it is time that Congress should quit this dock building and abandon this system of making contracts, and refer that business to the executive branches of the Government, so that there may be some responsibility somewhere, as there ought to be. I think that Mr. Preston, when Secretary of the Navy, complained of this mode of proceeding on the part of Congress. We charge the Navy Department with $2,000,000 for dry-docks, in opposition to the recommendation of the Department, and then we go before the country, complaining of the heavy expenses of this Government, and opposing a Whig Administration for doing it. Sir, that is not right. The expenses of this Navy Department run up to $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 higher than ever before, and the answer to the inquiry as to the cause of that fact, is found in these Congressional docks, in opposition to the recommendation of Mr. Secretary Mason, in opposition to that of Mr. Secretary Preston, and in opposition to the recommendation of the present Secretary of the Navy himself. Is this the proper tribunal? Are we to examine and decide between particular classes of docks? How many members of this body have seen and examined docks? It is our business to pass laws, not to make contracts.

I have prepared a good many other facts upon this subject, Mr. President, but I will reserve them, for the present. But I will ask what is the necessity for these immense naval establishments? Ought they not to bear some proportion to our Navy? What is the extent and magnitude of our Navy when compared with these vast naval establishments of our country? Why, sir, we have but seventy-five vessels in all. We have but eleven ships-of-the-line, one razee, twelve frigates of the first class, two of the second class, twenty-one sloops-of-war, four brigs, three schooners, five steamers of the first class, seven steamers less than the first class, and five store-ships—in all seventy-five. Now we have a dock for every eight vessels that we own, whether in commission or out of commission, whether old or new. I think, therefore, Mr. President, we ought to abandon the contract system; or, if contracts are to be made, let them be made by the executive branches of the Government, and let them be given to the lowest bidder.

Mr. GWIN. Does the Senator mean to abandon all contracts? Are we to make no more? For instance, would he do away with contracts in regard to our printing?

Mr. BRODHEAD. The honorable Senator from California asks me whether I am willing to abandon all contracts, and he illustrates by referring to our contracts for printing. In answer to that, I reply at once, that I would prefer to have a Government printing establishment. But that is a business which particularly appertains to this body; the business of building dry-docks does not; and how shall we undertake to decide between these different classes of docks. I therefore think that we should abandon this contract system, because in many respects it has an evil tendency. I do not blame these gentlemen for coming here and obtaining large contracts. They have a perfect right to do so; but if one set of gentlemen come here and make large contracts, and thereby secure to themselves large fortunes, others may do the same thing, and their number will increase from year to year. Sir, we have a Secretary of the Navy; we have a bureau of docks and yards; we have a bureau of construction and repairs; we have naval architects and engineers, and yet we cannot trust our Navy Department with the building of a dry-dock. We ourselves are to decide as to the particular dry-dock that shall be built. What necessity is there for this? If we are to canvass and decide upon these matters in detail, let us dispend at once with the Navy Department; let us abandon our bureau of yards and docks, and construction and repair, if we in the Senate are to do the business which appropriately belongs to them. Sir, I regard this as a perfect answer to any advocacy of this contract system which has grown up here.

Now, sir, I will remark here that I have prepared a bill, somewhat modified from that proposed by the honorable Senator from California, and which I think will be sufficient to carry out his design. I am willing that he should have a dry-dock and navy-yard; I am also willing that he should have a marine barracks—although I question the utility of a barracks—and that he should establish a pier. But it is said—that is the great argument against this pier—that it would be eaten up by the worms. Now, I would like to know from the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, how they protect their piers where these immense whaling vessels are fitted out? I have been given to understand, that in the North they have a way of protecting them; and if they can be protected from the worms in Rhode Island by covering them with copper, or driving copper nails in them, which I understand to be the process, this pier can be protected in the same way. But I very much doubt whether that dock will ever be very much used there, if they establish this basin and railway, for it will be eaten up with the worms before they can be constructed. It will take at least six or seven years to do all this, and the Secretary of the Navy knows it. This dock, therefore, will be useless, and the great number of ships engaged in the Pacific commerce, and anchoring in the bay of San Francisco, will have no dock to which they can resort for the space of six or seven years, under the plan which it is here proposed to establish. I have prepared a bill, sir, which I intend to offer as a substitute for that offered by the Senator from California; and allow me to say here, that I never could understand why another commission should be sent out to California.

Sir, there was a joint commission sent out to California, composed of six highly respectable gentlemen, three from the Army and three from the Navy, who selected a location in 1850, and they made a report, establishing a navy-yard and depot on the Bay of San Francisco. Here is the extract respecting that subject. It may be necessary. I do not come here to dispute the propriety of another commission. I have, however, provided, in the substitute which I propose, that when the last board shall report, the location shall be left to the President and the Secretary of the Navy. I think we ought to leave some discretion with the Department upon that subject. I therefore propose to strike out that portion of the bill, which is in these words:

"As will be most suitable in every respect for such an establishment, and susceptible of complete defense both by land and water, at the nearest point to the city of San Francisco;"

And insert the words:

"Suitable in every respect for such an establishment, provided it has not already been done."

Then I provide that this jury shall be sworn; and I also provide that the Secretary of the Navy shall decide which of these sites he will select; and then I provide for the establishment of a pier in place of this basin and railway; and the last section contains a provision for an appropriation of $500,000. I intend to offer this at a proper time as a substitute for the entire bill, establishing a navy-yard, depot, marine barracks, and marine hospital, and pier to be used in connection with the dock, and which is now on its way to California, which would be useless for six or seven years, if we did not establish a pier. A pier can be constructed in a few months.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow me, I would like to ask him a single question.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I perceive that the honorable Senator has given considerable attention to this subject and appears to be well acquainted with it. He spoke of some of these docks as being nuisances, and also of their being tested. I would like to ask him if any one of them has been tested, either that at Kittery, or at Philadelphia, or at Pensacola?

Mr. BRODHEAD. I will answer the question of the Senator from New Hampshire as well as I am able. By the contracts for the construction of this dry-dock, and basin, and railway at Kittery, and also for the construction of those at Philadelphia, they were to be completed in May or June last. They were to be tested with a ship-of-the-line. No test has yet been made to my knowledge. The Secretary of the Navy, at the opening of the session, reported to us upon this subject. He says that in regard to this dock at Philadelphia, there is a dredging machine in operation, and I find that it is in operation, because in the deficiency bill there is an item asking an appropriation of $12,000. He makes the same remark in regard to the dry-dock at Kittery. He says the ice prevented the test from being made. But you will find that they were to have been tested last June. We have no knowledge of their having been tested yet. I would like to know from the honorable Senator from New Hampshire whether he has any knowledge of their having been tested?

Mr. HALE. I am not aware that the dock at Kittery, which is some twelve miles from my residence, has been tested. I perceived that the Senator from Pennsylvania possessed considerable information upon the subject, and I asked him the question for information. So far as I am aware, the dock in my neighborhood has not been tested at all.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Now refer to the contract on the table, and it will be seen that they were to have been finished last June, taken off the contractors' hands, and the reserved twenty per cent. paid. The contractors said, no doubt, it was not for them to find water to test them. Congress ordered the contract to be made, and that is one of the ways in which we can see the evils of this Congressional contract system. That is all I have to say at present.

I will now inquire if it will be in order to offer the substitute at this time?

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator propose to strike out the whole of the bill and insert?

Mr. BRODHEAD. Yes, sir. I do not wish to offer amendments in detail, and have put the whole in a bill as a substitute.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] will be first in order; and after that is disposed of, the Senator can move to strike out that portion which has been inserted, together with the rest of the bill. At present it will not be in order.

Mr. BADGER. I am very sorry to perceive, sir, that the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania has permitted himself to become excited respecting the question now before the Senate. I am sorry for it, sir, in the first place, because it will have an injurious effect on the honorable Senator's argument. It prevents him from bringing out his facts in that consecutive order which would have given to them full weight and influence. And, in the second place, because as a mere business matter, I do not think that any excitement or irritation can very well enable us to form a just decision upon it.

When things relate to facts and figures, and depend on evidence and proof, perhaps we should get on quite as well by taking a calm and deliberate survey, as by permitting ourselves to be hurried, or the circulation of the blood to be agitated and the mind tossed from its perpendicular state, rendering it difficult to take other than an oblique, and, therefore, not very satisfactory view of the case.

I am afraid, sir, that there was something in the mode in which the honorable Senator from California spoke the other day that the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not consider quite courteous; at least that there was something in the style and manner of the remarks that has induced him to indulge a little personal feeling on this question, and has had the unhappy effect to induce him, in the whole tenor of his remarks, to allow an undertone, or current, of sarcasm, or reproachful expression to affect his observations; for, though it is calculated to affect the minds of hearers unfavorably towards the subject, it does not really tend to show that the subject ought to be unfavorably regarded.

Now, sir, this being a business matter, I propose to treat it as a business matter, there being nothing in the case which is not to be considered on the evidence and proof now before the Senate, or to be before the Senate. I will not follow the example of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania in permitting myself to be excited, or in making the confident assertion of what is, or what I may show to be; because, if I make these assertions and do not support them by the proof, it will place me in an awkward position, while the assertions do not help forward the case; whereas, if I can support them with proof, the preceding confident assertion is not required.

Now, sir, if I can command the attention of the Senate, I will endeavor to show—I do not say that I will show; I will do as General Miller said he would when directed to carry a particular battery, "I will try, sir"—in the first place, that the measure proposed by this bill is necessary and proper; and, in the next place, a large portion of the Senator's remarks are entirely beside the question before the Senate, because the honor and faith of this Government have been pledged by a contract which has been made to do the very thing that this bill now proposes shall be done. In order to show that, I beg to be allowed to see the bill for a moment, in order that we may understand what is the question under the consideration of the Senate, so far as the objections of the Senator from Pennsylvania are concerned.

The amendment which I had the honor to submit, by the direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, proposes, if it shall be adopted in the bill, to provide:

That as soon, after a suitable site shall have been secured, as it shall have been ascertained to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, that the basin and railway now being constructed at the navy-yard at Philadelphia or Kittery are in full and successful operation, the Secretary of the Navy be and he is hereby authorized and directed, to enter into a contract with the patentees for the construction of a basin and railway in the most approved form connected with the said navy-yard, adopted substantially on the basis of agreement made with them, under the act of September 30th, 1850, and cited in the report of the House of Representatives dated January 26th, 1851.

Now, in the first place, I submit to the Senate that nothing is proposed to be done here, which involves any hazard or risk to be assumed by the Government, until it is decided whether a basin and railway is an improvement which can be put into successful operation. The whole of that part of the bill is suspended, upon a previous condition that that fact shall have been established either at Philadelphia or at Kittery, and that at one or the other of these places this basin and railway, in connection with a dock, shall have been put in successful operation. If that is not done, no expense is to be incurred. If the experiment proves a failure, not a dollar is to be expended.

Then, Mr. President, I say, that supposing this plan of a basin and railway to have succeeded, it is necessary, and very highly necessary, that that improvement shall be established upon the coast of the Pacific. Why sir, what is this basin and railway? I am assuming the work to have been done as the bill proposes it shall be done, that is, put in full and successful operation. Why, it is the absolute consummation and perfection of all docking purposes, and systems. The great difficulty, the great trouble in all operations, respecting both the military and commercial marine, has always been from the immense weight and massiveness of vessels, to have an opportunity, from time to time, of being subjected to thorough examination, and complete repair. The old system of the stone dry-dock, is nothing in the world but the excavating of a vast basin, walling it up, and then floating in a ship, and bailing out the water, leaving her sunk below in a damp place, with a very imperfect light for operations upon her bottom, with the continually recurring necessity, day after day, of pumping operations, to keep that basin clear of water—the wit of man never having invented one, into which water will not find its way—capable of receiving but one vessel at a time, and incurring, from the nature and character of the improvement required, an immense expenditure of money.

Now, what is the basin and railway? It is this, that by taking the sectional floating dry-dock and sinking her in deep water, the ship is passed with ease upon that dock; by emptying the water tanks, which exclude the air, and thus allowing the air to return, she is raised, and she is moved into the basin, having a firm and level bottom. She is then brought, with the vessel upon her, to the front of one of the railways. She is then sunk until the bottom of the dock rests upon the bottom of the basin, leaving her in exact apposition with the railway; then that which before was floating rests firmly and solidly on the bottom of the basin. In this condition, by steam power, the vessel is just moved off her, high and dry, upon the rails, and there she stands, with ample light, perfectly dry, and, if you please, under such a house as they are in the habit of erecting to cover ships that are building, or ships that are laid up. There, with every facility in the world, the operations required are performed, and the vessel returns with like facility to the element in which she is to float, and either carry on commercial purposes, or purposes of war, with this additional facility, when one vessel is placed there, this dock can immediately bring another, and place that upon another of the railways; and so six, seven, eight, ten, or a dozen, as you have the necessary number of railways, and as the necessities of your service may require.

Now, that being the nature and character of the improvement, assuming—as I am doing all along, because the bill assumes it—that it should have been ascertained to be put in full and successful operation, I ask, whether it is not necessary that such an improvement as that should be on the Pacific ocean? Why, the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, in the remarks which he made when the subject was first up, seemed to consider that there was no necessity for any such establishment as this on the Pacific; because, he said, we had a half dozen of them on the Atlantic coast. Well, does that furnish any reason why we do not need one on the Pacific, to say that we have half a dozen on the Atlantic? Why, it might have been with much stronger force argued, that there was no necessity for one at Kittery, at Philadelphia, at Norfolk, or at any other point on the Atlantic coast, on the ground that we had one in New York. Or would it be an objection to one at New York, that we had one at Norfolk?

Again: in the remarks which the Senator first made on this subject, he urged as an objection, that if you had this dry-dock there, vessels must at last be repaired upon the Atlantic coast; because, he said, the materials could not be procured on the Pacific; or that, because of other difficulties in California, repairs could not be made upon the spot. That is an assumption for which I know of no evidence. It is contradicted by those who have the best means of knowledge; and, therefore, I think that in that assertion the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania was decidedly mistaken.

It must be borne in mind that the only question now before the Senate is, as to the basin and railways. The dock has already been contracted for, as I shall have occasion to show to the Senate presently, for another purpose. Then there being a dock contracted for, and a stone dock being out of the question—because I suppose nobody proposes that we should have a stone dock in California—the only question that remains is, whether it is necessary to have also the basin and railways, or whether a pier will answer.

In the first place I remark, that, with the pier, the dry-dock is useless for but one vessel at a time; because the vessel, being raised by the sectional dry-dock, has to undergo all the repairs which she may require upon the dock itself, and has to remain there until those repairs are completed, and she is discharged. Now, that is a process that may take three, or six, or nine months; or it may be longer. On the coast of the Pacific, where we propose to have but one establishment of the kind, you are asked to have that one establishment so arranged as that it can accommodate the purposes of but one ship at a time!

One of the reasons why it was necessary to have many of these dry-docks on the Atlantic coast, was because of the propriety, and sometimes necessity, of having facilities within convenient reach for attending to and repairing a number of ships at a time. Then, if in California, if on the whole coast of the Pacific, we are to have but one dry-dock, is it not evident that we must have it connected with such an improvement as will make it available for more than one ship at a time?

But, again: with the dock, you must have either a pier or a basin and railway. I have already stated, that connecting the dock with the pier merely, is liable to objection; for it makes the dock unavailable, except for one ship at a time. Now, as to its cost. It was said by the honorable Secretary of the Navy, in a letter communicated to us at the last Congress, that a pier could probably be erected for $50,000. That is very true—"probably," but not certainly, in California. In New York it might be so, or in Norfolk; but it is very doubtful whether a pier—even of wood—could be constructed in California for $50,000. We all know that the prices of materials in the present condition of that country must be greatly enhanced beyond the prices of such articles on the Atlantic coast. But if the pier is erected of wood, as has already been asked, how is it to be secured and perpetuated? The sea-worm in California will consume it directly. In six months it will be honey-combed and worthless. What, then, are you to do? Pay $50,000 more to put in another pier, and $20,000 or $30,000 to get the old pier out of the way. Why, the Senator from Pennsylvania says that the pier can be coppered. I was astonished to hear this remark made by a gentleman of his sagacity, living in the part of the country from which he comes. Take the piles of which the pier is composed and copper them, and then bring to bear upon them the immense weight by blows necessary to drive them into the places in which they are to stand as a fixture—what becomes of your copper? It will be split, rent, torn. Though at a little distance the piles might show as fair an exposure of copper as some members of the profession to which I belong are said to show a fair exposure of brass, it would answer no purpose; for these worms respect not the appearance of the thing. If there are fissures in the copper, they have sagacity enough to find them, and pertinacity enough to enter through them.

Again: let us suppose that you have got your pier coppered and sunk. Does not the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania know that the coppering of ships has to be renewed every five or six years—that the copper is subject to corrosion by contact with the salt water—that the bottoms of the coppered vessels have to be examined from time to time, and the deficiencies of copper supplied, so that, in the course of five or six years, the process has to be wholly renewed? Now, will you tell me how you are to get down into forty feet water, and recopper a pier? With very great respect, it appears to me that the idea almost involves an absurdity. I am not so confident as to say that the operation could not be performed at first; but certainly I may say, that it must be so difficult to renew the coppering of a structure forty or thirty or twenty feet under water, as to be almost impossible. How do we renew coppering on vessels? According to the old-fashioned way—and it is still pursued where there are no docks—they were dragged up on shore, and then pulled down till their bottoms were exposed so that the necessary examination could be made.

But, again: what will be the expense (and this is a matter that addresses itself to our inquiry as to economy) of coppering this wooden pier? We must recollect that this pier is to be some three hundred feet long, so as to answer the purposes of a breakwater, to preserve the dock attached to it from the action of the waves driven by the winds. Here you are to have it extended out two hundred or three hundred feet, and it must be sunk into deep water. You must copper it all over—you must not leave a single point at which the worms can enter. What will this cost? I feel very sure that you cannot copper the pier for less than $100,000.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I understand the Senator to say, that the piles to be driven down cannot be coppered. Now, I understand they are doing that very thing at Pensacola. I understand that it is being done there, and I would like to know from the honorable Senator from Florida, [Mr. MORRIS,] if he were in his place, whether such is the fact? I would also like the honorable Senator from Rhode Island to state how these structures are protected from worms in Rhode Island? I wish this information at the proper time. I do not wish to have the Senator from North Carolina interrupted.

Mr. BADGER. Until we have some evidence upon that subject, I shall assume at present that they are not engaged in the process of coppering the pier at Pensacola, for the reason that I understand that that pier is being built with stone.

Mr. GWIN. That is so.

Mr. BADGER. I presume that they would hardly go to the unnecessary expense of coppering a stone wall. Supposing that $50,000 are to be the first outlay, and assuming that the coppering could be accomplished for $100,000, and that we should have to renew the coppering once in every four or five years, and allow for the difficulty of getting down thirty or forty feet in the water to copper it, double cost, we shall have $150,000 to start with, and an outlay of $200,000 every five or six years to protect it from the worms. That being the case, I do not think it will be considered as a remarkable operation in point of saving. Then, if you build the pier of stone, it will cost two thirds, or at all events one half of the price of the basin and railway. The reason why it approximates to it so much, is this: the basin has also one of its sides projecting into the water to answer the purposes of a pier; but in consequence of its attachment to the basin, a very short pier comparatively answers all the purposes. The stone pier which is now being erected at Pensacola, has cost already $400,000, and it is not much more than half completed. Then the question which is presented to the Senate upon that head (it being undoubted that the dock must have either a pier or a basin) is whether she shall pay $600,000 at the least for a pier, or shall pay $340,000 for the basin and railway, which includes in substance the pier. That is the whole question; and it seems to me that when the matter is reduced to that point, there remains nothing further to be settled.

I look upon this measure in California as important, not only for the purposes of public vessels of the United States, but I look upon it as highly important to the commercial marine of this country. It has been said by the honorable Senator that we have not many public vessels, and shall not, therefore, often require the use of such an establishment in California. Assume it to be so. The Secretary of the Navy, and the officers under his charge, can permit this basin and railway to be used for the accommodation of the commercial marine, when it is not required for the Government. When we consider the condition of things on the Pacific coast, it is in the highest degree important that that particular form of improvement should be adopted; it being admitted, on all hands, that we must have one of some kind and description. We want such an improvement. It is necessary for the purposes of the Government, and will, at the same time, promote the commercial prosperity of the country, and afford facilities to those carrying on the immensely important and profitable business of the Pacific.

I have said this much, for the purpose of showing that what is asked by this bill, is not unreasonable in itself. But in the next place, I think I am able to show that, as honest men, representing an honorable and faith-observing constituency, we have no choice but to do what is proposed to be done by this bill. This Government has already made a contract with the patentees, which is binding upon it in honor and in faith. That, I think, is capable of being clearly established. By the naval appropriation act of September, 1850, this appropriation was made:

"For commencing the construction of a floating dry-dock on the coast of California, $100,000; and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to enter into a contract for the construction, with all reasonable dispatch, of a sectional or balance floating dry-dock, basin, and railway, at such harbor on the coast of the Pacific ocean as he may select, of a capacity and dimensions in no respect inferior to those of the dry-dock now in progress of construction at Pensacola."

Here is the authority. Now, under that authority the Secretary entered into a contract, a complete contract, and the contract is as binding upon the honor and faith of this Government as if it had been attested with a thousand seals. I wish now to refer you to a letter upon that subject, addressed by the Secretary of the Navy to the House of Representatives, at the last Congress. It is dated the 21st of January, 1851. It will be observed, that in that month, and two or three days before this letter was received, a resolution was introduced into the House of Representatives, and adopted, to inquire of the Secretary of the Navy whether any contract had been made under the provision in the appropriation bill of the preceding year, and, if so, what it was, and if the contract had been completed and executed; and requiring the Secretary to suspend all further proceedings until the direction of Congress. The Secretary shows the various proposals that have been made, and then says:

"Messrs. Dakin, Moody, Gilbert, and Secor at length offered to undertake the contract at the above estimate of $1,530,237."

That was for a dry-dock, basin, and railway—

"—This was declined by the Department, and Mr. James Brooks of St. Louis, who produced unquestionable evidence of character, as well as ability, to give security for the completion of this work, submitted a proposal for $1,309,000. This being the lowest bid offered, would have been accepted, but for the reason that Mr. Brooks disclaimed any pretensions to a patent-right, and wished to enter into no legal controversy in respect to that alleged by the other bidders, and proposed only to do the work; doubts being entertained whether a contractor for the work might not be enjoined or otherwise impeded by legal process in its execution by the claimants for the patent above-mentioned, negotiations were continued with Messrs. Dakin, Moody, Gilbert, and Secor, with the knowledge of Mr. Brooks; and they were finally informed, as the last proposition of the Department, that if they would do the work on the terms stated in the law, at the sum of $1,450,000, the contract would be concluded. They desired time for consultation, and on Friday last, the 17th instant, informed the Department that they accepted this proposition. The contract has not been signed or written, nor has any bond been executed for its fulfillment; and regarding the request contained in the resolution of the House as equivalent to a command, I shall take no further steps towards its completion until the pleasure of Congress in regard to it shall be made known."

Here, according to the Secretary's statement, he told these gentlemen, if you will undertake to do the work required by law, at a certain time, you shall have the contract. They say to him, we accept the contract. Now, I should be glad to know what makes a contract if that does not? That the Government is not bound by it is true; nor would they have been bound by it if it had been signed, sealed, and delivered. The Government cannot be bound in such a sense as to be compelled to perform a contract. Simultaneously with the resolution offered in the other House, was a resolution offered in this House in relation to that contract. The honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MASON,] by the unanimous direction of the Naval Committee, made this report on the resolution:

"That, having communicated the resolution of the Senate to the Secretary of the Navy, the committee received in reply the letter of the Secretary to the chairman of the committee, dated January 27, 1851, with a copy of his letter therein referred to, addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, dated January 21, 1851, which accompany this report, marked A and B.

"The law referred to in the resolution of the Senate, limited the authority of the Secretary to contract for 'a sectional or balance floating dry-dock, basin, and railway, of a capacity and dimensions in no respect inferior to those of the dry-dock now in progress of construction at Pensacola'; and the committee are satisfied from the communication of the Secretary, that the contract he has made is on terms as advantageous to the Government as the work to be done will admit. The committee are not aware of any reason to induce them to recommend any amendment or modification of the plan for this dock, prescribed by the law referred to, even were the subject now susceptible of such modification. But it appears from the communication of the Secretary above-mentioned, that he had actually contracted for the work before the resolution of the Senate was adopted, nothing remaining to be done but to reduce the contract to writing, and its execution by the parties. In the absence, then, of fraud and misrepresentation, (which is not alleged,) the committee cannot recommend that it should be disturbed.

"The only modification of which the plan would be susceptible, is to dispense with the basin and railway, as authorized by the existing law; but for this, under the law, the contract is already made. The committee consider these appendages as peculiarly important to a dock, should they be found, on experiments yet to be tried with a like work now in progress of construction at Philadelphia, to be of practical value.

"But, as they are further informed by the Secretary of the Navy, the contract as made authorizes him to abrogate so much of it as provides for a basin and railway, 'if the basin and railway, in connection with the dock at Philadelphia, shall not realize the ends expected from it at its completion; and in such case, the dock 'only is to be completed, and paid for at a proportionate price.'

"The committee, on the facts thus reported, ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution."

I have a report before me, which I will not trouble the Senate with reading, from the Naval Committee of the House, coming to precisely the same conclusion. And in the report of the Secretary of the Navy, made in answer to a call of the Senate, at the instance of the Senator from Pennsylvania, it is shown conclusively, that the Secretary himself considered the contract as made. In that report, after speaking of some parties who had made offers to him under the law of the last session, about the dry-dock alone, he says:

"The same parties had submitted what they styled a bid for the former contract, after being informed that it was concluded."

Here is the case: Congress directs or rather authorizes a Government officer to enter into a contract for the construction of such dock, basin, and railway; restricts him to no person, and not in regard to terms. They leave it to him altogether. He enters into the contract. He agrees upon the terms of it, he having proposed, and the contractors having accepted, the terms upon which the work was to be done. Then comes the resolution of the House of Representatives which requests him to proceed no further. His letter distinctly informs them that, but for that resolution, the contract would have been immediately written and signed; but that, interpreting their request to be a command, he suspended further proceedings. Although that discharged the Secretary, I very respectfully submit that it did not discharge the Government. It does not discharge us. We had no more right to break the contract before it was signed than after it was signed. Why is a contract reduced to writing and signed? It is to answer but two purposes: one, to prevent mistakes as to the terms of the contract; and the other, to enforce a legal means of coercing a reluctant man to perform his contract. But contracts made by the Government bind only the honor and faith of the Government; and every gentleman knows, as he would consider his own honor bound by such an engagement, so is the honor of the Government bound. So it was considered by the committees of both Houses at the last session of Congress. So it was considered by the Senate; for, when the appropriation bill the last session came before the Senate, containing the clause which directed the abrogation of that contract, and the making of a new contract, an amendment was agreed to, striking out the provision; but by a mistake, in the hurry of business, on the last night of the session, the amendment was not engrossed, and the bill passed without it. But the sense of the committee and the sense of the Senate was the same; and I submit, that no man can read the papers in the case without coming to the same conclusion.

Then the Government have made this contract. The honorable Senator from Pennsylvania speaks with a good deal of energy about Congress, at the

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

SATURDAY, MARCH 27, 1852.

NEW SERIES.....No. 55.

last session, having solemnly abrogated the contract. I have yet to learn that the abrogation of a contract is a bit more correct or appropriate if it is solemnly done than if it is done in a hurry. But the honorable Senator is mistaken. There was no solemnity about it.

Mr. BRÖDHEAD. I desired to say, and I believe I did say, they solemnly abrogated an alleged contract. I do not agree that there was any contract which was very binding, or that any damage could be recovered for a violation of it, supposing the Government of the United States could be sued.

Mr. PRATT. Do I understand the Senator from North Carolina to contend that the contract which he supposes to have been entered into imposed any legal obligation upon the individuals who made it, and who entered into it? Are they now bound to the Government? Are those individuals bound by what the Senator terms the contract to do the work? If they are bound, must they not do it?

Mr. BADGER. My answer to that is, that when the contract was entered into, the terms of it remaining only to be reduced to writing and signed, they were ready, desirous, prompt, and eager to sign the contract, and the Government refused. That is the state of the case.

Mr. PRATT. But I understand that there is no obligation upon them.

Mr. BADGER. If the honorable Senator refuses to perform an obligation which he makes with me, I suppose that, if I choose, it releases me from the performance of the obligation on my part with him. But these parties claim the performance of the contract. They have not accepted any release. I must confess that I do not see the pertinency of the inquiry. If the honorable Senator means, that if the Government, after making a contract, refuse to carry it out, the contractors are thereby discharged, and the Government are under no moral obligation to discharge it, he means that the Government can always honorably discharge itself from the execution of a contract by not performing it.

Mr. PRATT. If the Senator does not see the pertinency of my inquiry, perhaps other Senators may. In my judgment, nothing can be termed a contract which is not binding on both parties. Now, the Senator says that this is a contract equally as binding on this Government as if it had been reduced to writing, and signed and sealed. I ask him whether this contract, which he alleges is equally as binding on the Government as if these formalities had been complied with, is also equally binding on the other parties?

Mr. BADGER. It is binding on the other parties just as it is binding on the Government. How is it binding on the Government? Will my friend inform me? Suppose it were reduced to writing and signed, how would the Government be bound?

Mr. PRATT. That is the Senator's allegation. He alleges that it is binding on the Government. I deny it. He alleges that it is equally as binding on the Government as if it had been a contract reduced to writing, and signed and sealed. Now, I say that it is essential to every contract, that both parties should be bound by it. And I ask the Senator to say directly, without going round the bush, whether or not, in his judgment as a lawyer, this contract which he alleges to be binding on the Government of the United States, is binding upon these parties?

Mr. BADGER. Why, sir, if my friend had only attended to what I have said, he would have discovered that I was not talking of what was binding, as a lawyer. I know enough of public law to know that the Government is not legally bound by any contract. The enforcement of a contract against the Government by legal means, is an impossibility. It is no beating about the bush at all. The gentleman asks a question, without understanding the proposition which is before the Senate. I affirmed that the Government was bound in faith and in honor—that is what I have said, over and over again—as much as if the contract had been signed; and I say that the other parties are bound in faith and honor, as much as if it had been signed. Certainly; and if you can escape from the obligation on the part of the Government because there is not a legal coercion and control over the Government, the Government never would be bound; for if the contract had been signed on both sides, the Government would have been bound only in honor, while the opposite party would have been bound in law.

But the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania says that Congress, at the last session, did not solemnly abrogate a contract, but they solemnly abrogated an alleged contract. That presents a curious idea. An alleged contract either exists or it does not exist. If it exists, it may be abrogated; if it does not exist, I should like to know what abrogation can apply to it. If there was no contract, it could not be abrogated. The thing that was abrogated, therefore, was the contract; but the person who drew the provision in the House of Representatives thought he was particularly smart in not stopping the Government, and giving the contractors a legal advantage over it, and therefore put in an "alleged" contract. But the Senator says it was solemnly abrogated. Sir, there was as little solemnity connected with that abrogation act as ever attended another; and I am extremely happy to think it was so. The truth is, that the two Houses, instead of taking up the report of the Naval Committee on the subject of the contract, and making it a matter of debate, and settling the principle of it, did nothing about it; and all these provisions were sprung in an appropriation bill, and passed here in the hurry and confusion of the last night of the session. The truth is, that the provisions in regard to it are so contradictory and absurd that it is impossible to make one agree with another. The Senate never intended to abrogate any contract. We passed an amendment to prevent that effect; but in the confusion of the last night of the session it was not engrossed, and hence the bill passed without it.

But, further: I was about to say, when I was interrupted by the Senator from Pennsylvania, this Government can enter into no contract except with the particular parties with whom this contract was made. If, therefore, this basin and railway is to be constructed, it must be constructed by a contract with them. They have patent-rights for half a dozen years unexpired. The Government cannot, according to what is justly characterized "an honest report of Secretary Mason," invade the patent-right. It is not one of those cases in which you can say we will repudiate this agreement, and put this matter out to the lowest bidder, because no person has a right to contract but the owners of the patent-right. Then, why should we not enter into it? It is stated in the report made from the Naval Committee by the Senator from Virginia, during the last session of Congress, that we were unable to discover that the contract could be altered or arranged so as to be more fair and reasonable, and advantageous to the Government, than as it had been stipulated; and I will venture to say, that if Senators think a business transaction of this kind worth looking into, and will examine the report which we have from the Secretary of the Navy, and see the processes of examination by bureaus and chief engineers, time and again repeated for the purpose of ascertaining what was the lowest sum that could be reasonably allowed; and, after all their views, the striking down by the Secretary of some $80,000 or $100,000 from the estimate they had made, they will be satisfied that no process can be adopted by which this work, if it is to be executed at all, can be obtained upon better terms. I have said that the dock is already contracted for. The only question, therefore, is as to the basin and railway; and upon the grounds which I have stated, it seems to me clear that we cannot do better than to pursue the engagement entered into at the last session of Congress, and authorize its honest completion by passing the bill which is upon your table.

I will now call the attention of the Senate to the report made by the Secretary of the Navy, in order that they may see the kind of competition that has been interposed, and the sort of applications that have been made by persons who were exceedingly desirous to obtain this contract. In a letter written by the Secretary of the Navy to Messrs. R. B. Mason and William Ballard, two of the applicants, he relates this circumstance:

"You are mistaken in the assertion that you were solicited to bid for this contract by me."

That is this contract for the dry-dock under the act of the last session.

"On the contrary, you were informed that if Dakin & Co. would accept the terms I should propose, after full information and consideration. I thought there was no alternative but to allow them the contract; and you may remember, that in reply to this, you inquired whether I could not provide in the contract for the payment of certain amounts which you alleged were due from Mr. Dakin to you; and that I answered I had no power over that subject, but the courts of justice would no doubt afford all proper relief."

"The proposition presented by you, through Mr. Boker, is far less detailed and definite than I should have felt bound to require before closing a contract, had I been at liberty to consider it at all."

"Another gentleman, claiming an exclusive right to the patent for the sectional dock on the Pacific coast, made a proposal at a much less price than you. He, however, admitted that the amount agreed to be paid by the Department to Dakin & Co. was not unreasonable for the work actually required to be done; but he expected to supply a cheaper construction which would answer the purpose. I apprehend you will find, on a careful examination, that you have been under a like mistaken impression in your estimates."

Now, I will ask the attention of the Senate to the kind of proposals made by Messrs. Ballard & Mason. A great deal has been said about these men proposing to do the work for less money.

"Mason, Ballard & Co. propose to take the contract for building the sectional dry-dock, basin, and railway on the coast of California, on the terms offered by the Secretary of the Navy to Messrs. Dakin and Moody;"

That is, to take it for the same price—

"Messrs. Mason, Ballard & Co. being considered the servants of the Government, and under the protection of the principle of the right of the Government to use a patented invention for necessary public purposes upon just compensation."

These men propose that they will do the work for the same amount which the Department was to give the patentees, provided the Department will indemnify them against the consequence of invading a patent-right; in other words, that for the same sum that the patentees agreed to do the work, they will do it, provided that the Government will pay such further sum as may be necessary to indemnify them against the consequences of invading the patent-right. Mr. Thomas, a gentleman who claimed an interest as the original patentee, the Secretary states, made a proposal to do this work for some two or three hundred thousand dollars less. I do not recollect the precise sum. But when he was informed at the Department of the materials out of which the Department required these things to be constructed, he said, at once, he contemplated materials of an inferior character, and that if these were required the terms of the patentees must be considered as reasonable and proper. I believe, therefore, the more this matter is looked into the more it will be found, in the first place, that this measure is necessary and proper, both in relation to the public marine and the commercial marine of the country; and that, in the next place, a contract has been actually entered into, binding upon the faith and honor of the Government, and improperly suspended by the appropriation bill of the last session of Congress, and the resolution which passed the House earlier in the session, and which this measure is intended to reestablish and carry into effect; and, in the last place, that if the contract were perfectly open, upon an inspection of these papers it is apparent that it is fair and reasonable; and, as was reported by my friend from Virginia with the unanimous concurrence of the committee, at the last session of Congress, could not be entered into on more just and reasonable terms.

There was a great deal in the remarks made by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, the application of which to the subject under the consideration of the Senate, I could not perceive. It may be for a want of clearness of perception. He said that the two sets of patentees once had a controversy before Congress, and that each man maintained the superiority of his own patent, and depreciated that of the other. He tells us that at one time they proposed to build these piers for $40,000; which I suppose they could do now if they were to be built of wood. He tells us that these people finally, finding it a bad business to engage in quarrelling with one another, agreed to unite, and each became interested in the patent of the other. He tells us that he does not blame the patentees for endeavoring to get all the money they can out of the Government, but that it is our fault if we allow them to get it improperly. He inveighs against the system of what he calls Congressional docks; and he decidedly prefers to leave the Department to erect the old stone fabrics to which I have referred. Well now, there may be, for some purpose or other, a great deal of force and propriety in these remarks, but I do not see what application they have to the subject under consideration.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I did not undertake to decide what sort of a dock should be adopted, but what I intended to say was that Congress should not undertake to decide it, but that the question should be referred to the Naval Department, that some person should be responsible, and that the Secretary of the Navy, with the aid of the bureau of docks and yards, was the proper tribunal to decide it.

Mr. BADGER. I was very well aware that the Senator did not express his opinion about the docks, but he told us over and over again, that the authority of the Department was against this kind of dock. Well, then, he says he is for leaving it to the Department. Of course it follows that the Department will act on the old plan of stone docks. That is what I mean to say. I do not mean to say that the Senator had expressed his opinion, but that he was for leaving it to the Department altogether when he informed us that they would certainly go in favor of the old stone docks. Now, as I said, these remarks did not strike me as being germane to the question under consideration of the Senate. It may be true that Messrs. Dakin & Moody, and the other partners, had an angry controversy with each other, and that each was endeavoring to do as much mischief to his opponents, and as much good to himself, as he could. Suppose it was so, and suppose we want a public structure erected; suppose these men can do it for us on better terms than anybody else, and suppose they are the only persons who have a right to contract for it, shall we, because they have had an angry controversy between themselves, formally refuse to make the contract? For what purpose? To punish them, by declining to avail ourselves of the opportunity afforded us of doing good to the Government and the people? Surely not. It is a matter of very small importance to this question what disputes they had with each other, and whether they were willing to build wooden piers for $40,000, or, if the Senator pleases, to build stone walls for $40,000. Whatever mistakes they may have made with regard to the value of the work they were going to construct, it is demonstrated—if we can place any reliance upon the bureaus of the Naval Department, to which the Senator refers, and to which he seems disposed to transfer the decision of this matter; they have examined it; naval constructors have examined the subject—that the prices at which these structures were proposed to be taken—the price for which the Secretary had engaged, according to his letter to the House of Representatives at the last session—is lower than the lowest fair price, without a margin for profits, that was made and estimated by these officers. There can, therefore, be no question about it.

But, again, I did not hear the first remarks which the honorable Senator made upon this subject; but I confess I was pained to read in them about this "fourth estate" of contractors. Now, I am in the habit of thinking that an imputation of that kind—a sneer upon a whole body or class of men—is very apt to be both unjust and unwise. Suppose we were to discharge all our contractors, and do all our business ourselves, does the honorable Senator think we should gain anything either in credit or in money by the carrying of the mails ourselves? Surely not. After all, while there have been many men in that class, avaricious, griping, and dishonest, I do not know that it stands out a singular and unexampled spectacle to the world upon that point. Why, Solomon told us long ago, that sin sticketh close between buying and selling; and a very distinguished writer in England thought there was something about the pursuit of the profession to which I belong that was calculated, while it made the head clear and astute, to harden and obscure the moral perceptions of the heart. Is there any human employment which has not its peculiar temptations to evil? Yet, among all the different classes of mankind you find good and bad men. And, permit me to say, after all, that this Government has derived as much benefit, upon the whole, from contractors in its various departments as from any other persons. Often, I admit, very injurious contracts are made; but the worst system of contracts which the Government has ever pursued; so far as I have observed—that is to say, that in which evil most frequently happens—is that of putting out Congressional printing to the lowest bidder. I say that for the benefit of my friend from Connecticut, [Mr. SMITH.]

Mr. SMITH. Thank you.

Mr. BADGER. Nor do I agree with the honorable Senator that these men are not to be blamed for endeavoring to get all the money they can. They have no right to get money improperly. They have no moral right to ask more than is fair, and reasonable, and just, and proper. If they have done so, my system of ethics condemns them. They have no more right to demand what is improper, than we have to grant it. But in this case there is no evidence that any such demand has been made. It is proved, as far as such a subject can be possibly capable of proof, that the agreement was once entered into, binding on the honor of the Government, and would have been put in the form of a written contract the next day but for the interposition of the House of Representatives. It is proved that if it had not been made, it ought to be made, and that the interests of the country require such an establishment, and that, upon no other proceeding, can that establishment be obtained upon the same terms with the same advantages, and in the same perfect condition, and at as small an outlay of money.

Mr. President, I do hope that the Senate, in considering this matter, will lay aside a great many suggestions and remarks which have been made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, evidently sincerely felt, but springing out of an excited state of mind, and growing out of the fact that the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, perhaps, not quite as courteous as he ought to have been, and as I certainly should have been, had the chairman of the committee been absent—I will say that of myself—and the duty had devolved upon me. But, laying that aside, I hope that we shall proceed to consider this as a business transaction, and that we shall not be guilty of the folly, in the first place, of sacrificing the honor of the Government, by repudiating a contract made by it, through its agents, when we are not only to make no money by it; when we have not only not the poor, pitiful apology of pecuniary interest; but when, unless we are to give up the Pacific coast entirely, and refuse any of these facilities, we must lose a great deal of money by it.

The whole matter stands on this: Shall we have a stone pier, that will cost $600,000, at the lowest calculation, or shall we have a basin and railway, including all the advantages of the pier, and many more for $840,000? That is the question. One or other we must have! It is no longer a question about the dry-dock. The contract is made for that. It is now in process of being erected; and when it is put there, it ought to be put in a manner to answer the purposes of the Government most beneficially. According to the argument of the other side, we are to give up these advantages for the purpose of saving the difference between $600,000 for the pier, and $840,000 for the basin and railway. I was extremely sorry, at the last session, to see, in the hurry and haste of the last hours of the session, an amendment to the appropriation bill passed, which was not understood, I am persuaded, and which could not have been understood in the House of Representatives, in effect repudiating a contract of this Government, and sullying the fair fame of the country. It is not too late to reinstate ourselves where we stood; and whilst we execute the contract for the benefit of the country, we save ourselves from just reproach. That was an act passed in a few hours, at the close of the session, in haste and confusion, with no time for debate or investigation. We can be excused provided we now repair the damage, when we see the mistake into which we were betrayed in the hurry and confusion which surrounded us.

Mr. CASS. "Noise and confusion."

Mr. BADGER. Well, sir, be it so. "Noise and confusion."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before the question is taken, I would like very much to get a little information from the Senator from North Carolina. He speaks of a contract having been prepared to be executed by a party, but says that it was not executed. I wish the Senator to inform me the state of the law under which the contract was made; whether there was any law authorizing the Government to make the contract, and what the law was?

Mr. BADGER. There was a provision in the appropriation bill of 1850—

"For commencing the construction of a floating dry-dock on the coast of California, $100,000; and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to enter into a contract for the construction, with all reasonable dispatch, of a sectional or balance floating dry-dock, basin and railway, at such harbor on the coast of the Pacific ocean as he may select, of a capacity and dimensions in no respect inferior to those of the dry-dock in progress of construction at Pensacola."

That is the law under which the terms of the contract have been agreed upon, and the price settled. It would have been signed, I suppose, the next day, or as soon as it could have been done, and thus completed, but for a resolution of the House of Representatives, requesting the suspension of the work.

The amendment submitted by Mr. BADGER to the amendment of the committee, was agreed to.

On the motion of Mr. GWIN, a verbal amendment was made in the first section; and then the amendment of the committee, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I wish to offer several amendments to the bill; and I do so by modifying the bill as I propose to amend it, and offering it as a substitute for the bill as it is now before the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE. I would suggest to the Senator that he had better submit his substitute and move that it be printed, as the propriety of passing the bill is to be tested upon the substitute.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Perhaps I had better state my amendments, and then have the substitute read. If it is the desire of the Senate, I will state in what particulars I have changed the bill; but if the Senate wish to have it printed by to-morrow morning, and have the vote then taken, I have no objection.

Mr. GWIN. To-morrow is private bill day, and I should like to have a vote to-day.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I am quite willing to have the vote taken to-day, and therefore I will state my amendments.

In 1850 the joint commission made a report, fixing the site for a navy-yard, and dry-dock, in forty feet water, at Mare Island.

The present Secretary of the Navy, I understand, has sent out another commission. Now, I propose to make it optional with the Secretary of the Navy, when both of these reports shall be before him. Then I have provided that the jury to assess damages, if the land thus taken should be private property, shall be sworn. To that, I presume, there can be no objection, as it is not very material. Then I propose, that the Secretary of the Navy shall be authorized and directed to provide for the establishment of a pier. The main question is between the pier, and basin and railway.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator has on two occasions alluded to the joint commission, whose acts, he says, are conclusive in the case. He supposes they are. Let me tell you what that joint commission did. They selected a site at Mare Island, it is true; but they did not select it because there was forty feet of water there, for they did not know it. Subsequent to that selection, officers on the coast survey have been there, and it has been ascertained that although it is one of the best points on the coast, it has not water enough. The Secretary of the Navy, in order that there should be no mistake, as there has been in Philadelphia, in regard to the question, has sent a board there to examine the site, in connection with the depth of water ascertained by the coast survey, subsequent to the selection. Nobody objects to the selection. The subsequent board has been sent with a view to ascertain whether or not there is enough water for the working of the dock. The dock has already been ordered. It is not under consideration at all. The board are going to make an examination, in order that there may be no such mistake as was made at Philadelphia, to locate it, not according to the recommendation of the former board, but to ascertain whether there are any better locations—that is, equally good—with a sufficient amount of water.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I ask for the reading of my substitute.

Mr. ATCHISON. I move that the reading of the substitute be dispensed with, and that it be ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 25, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw that motion for a moment, in order to enable me to submit another motion. Quite a number of Senate bills have accumulated upon the Speaker's table, and if there be no objection, I move to take up those bills upon which no debate shall arise, for the purpose of having them appropriately referred.

Mr. HOUSTON. I tried myself the other day to have those bills taken up and referred; but it was objected to by a gentleman upon the other side of the House. I understand there are some among them which it is proposed to debate.

Mr. JONES. But I propose to take up for reference only those bills to which there shall be no objection.

Mr. STANLY. Suppose there should be no objection to any of these Senate bills, I ask how long a time would they be likely to consume?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman propose to limit the time?

Mr. JONES. I propose to take up only those bills to which there shall be no objection.

Mr. STANLY. But how long will it take to get through with them?

Mr. JONES. Not more than thirty minutes.

Mr. STANLY. I have no objection to the proposition if you will limit the time to half an hour. What I want is, that the deficiency bill shall not be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. JONES. Then I will limit the time to that.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Will bills upon their engrossment, and bills upon which the previous question has been ordered, be disposed of in this way?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that to be the proposition.

Mr. HOUSTON. Why it will take half an hour to call the yeas and nays once, should they be asked for on either of those bills.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now insist upon my motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. STUART in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The business before the committee is House bill No. 207, to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1852; the following clause of the bill being under consideration:

"For payment to the American party of St. Regis Indians, (less the sum of one thousand dollars, appropriated by the act of twenty-seventh of June, eighteen hundred and forty six, in pursuance of the stipulation contained in the supplemental article,) as a remuneration for moneys laid out by said tribe, and for services rendered by their chiefs and agents, in securing the title to the Green Bay lands, and in removal to the same, agreeably to the provisions of the ninth article of the treaty with the Six Nations of New York, of 15th January, 1838, $4,000."

To this, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] proposed the following amendment:

For payment to the Seneca Indians, of New York, for moneys wrongfully withheld from them by an agent appointed by the Government for the management of their affairs, as per report of Thomas B. Stoddard, commissioner, selected by the Secretary of War to make the requisite investigation, pursuant to the direction contained in the fourth section of the act of 27th June, 1846, making appropriations for the Indian department, $25,505 50.

The gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. WOODWARD,] offered the following amendment to the amendment:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby required, upon payment of the money herein specified, to take such further steps, if any may be necessary, as shall enable the United States to recover the amount due from said agent.

The question pending, was upon the amendment to the amendment.

The question was put, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon Mr. JOHNSON'S amendment.

Mr. HAVEN. I think the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] accidentally fell into an error in reference to the amount his amendment proposes. He proposes to insert $25,505 50. Now, the estimate for the deficiency which has been sent in, is $28,505 50. I move to amend the amendment, therefore, by increasing it to that sum.

Mr. JOHNSON. In copying that amendment I made the mistake. The estimate is for $28,505 50. I have put it in the amendment as $25,505 50. The gentleman is correct in his statement, and I would have called the attention of the committee to the mistake if he had not done so.

Mr. HAVEN. I move the amendment for the purpose of setting the matter right, and, at the same time, to enable me to make a suggestion or two in relation to the propriety of including this appropriation in the bill under consideration.

Mr. Chairman, this, as I understand it, is a just, equitable, fair, and legal claim upon the part of the Seneca Indians residing in the western part of the State of New York, against this Government. It is objected to, however, on the part of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS], upon the ground that these moneys which went into the hands of the Indian agent, as he calls Mr. Stryker, were not moneys emanating from this Government, and were moneys which the Indians were entitled to from other sources. Now, it is true, as the gentleman states, that these moneys did not emanate from this Government; but it is also true, as appears from the report of a committee in the Senate, a copy of which is printed with these estimates, that in 1794, the Superintendent of Indian Affairs, who was appointed by the General Government, did, under the instructions of the General Government, take charge of moneys due the Indians, as this was, and arising, by the way of interest, upon certain stocks of the United States held by a certain corporation in the State of New York, and also of annuities due the Indians from the State of New York. Well, sir, in 1845-'6, while the Senate had been lately engaged in acting upon a treaty which was made with these Senecas in reference to the sale of some of their reservations in western New York, the Senate discovered that there had been large frauds committed upon the Indians by this agent; and acting upon that information, which they received through the Quakers, who had taken a deep interest in the affairs of the Senecas, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate [Mr. Sevier, of Arkansas] proposed to make the Seneca nation good for the injuries and losses they had sustained in consequence of those frauds, and of the misappropriation by Mr. Stryker of the funds, or rather of subverting them to his own use. That committee presented a bill, which, amongst other things, was intended to accomplish that purpose, the fourth section of which bill makes an appropriation of the sum which, by this amendment, is now proposed to be appropriated. The bill passed the Senate, and came to this House, but the House would not accept the proposition. It doubted whether any fraud had been committed, or any money had been withheld by the agent. They having struck out the section, the bill went again to the Senate, and a committee of conference was appointed. They came to an understanding, which was reported back to both Houses and adopted. Now, I ask this committee for a moment to look at the condition in which this matter then stood. The Senate were satisfied that the money ought to be paid, and these Indians be protected by this Government. The question made between the Senate and this House was not whether the Government was responsible for the action of the agent; that was conceded by both Houses; but whether the agent had actually received these moneys and withheld them from the Indians. That was the question, as you will see by this report. The fourth section of the act of 1846 provides that—

"The Secretary of War be, and he is hereby required to ascertain what annuities or moneys have been wrongfully withheld from the said Senecas, by the late sub-agent of the United States, and so lost to them; and to that end the said Secretary is authorized, if, in his judgment, it shall be necessary or expedient to do so, to issue a commission or commissions to some discreet person or persons, to be selected by him to take testimony in the premises, and to report the same to Congress; and to defray any expenses that may be incurred in the execution of the provisions of this section, a sum not exceeding $500 is hereby appropriated."

Under this provision, the Secretary of War appointed an agent, who, after having investigated the matter, reported to the Secretary of War, in substance, that there was, unquestionably, at least $28,505 50 which the agent had received, belonging to these Indians, and which was wrongfully withheld from them. Now, why did this House then ask for this investigation and report? The Senate were satisfied that the agent had received the moneys and wrongfully withheld them, and had provided for their payment to the Indians; the House said, we admit that if the agent has the moneys and wrongfully withholds them, we ought to pay—but we are not satisfied that the agent has wrongfully withheld the money, and, therefore, we ask the investigation provided for in the fourth section. This course was taken, so that, in case it should turn out that the charges against this sub-agent were true, this House might make the appropriation, and thus preserve the honor of this Government by dealing fairly and honestly with these Indians. Now, the commissioner reported to the Secretary of War, as I have stated, and it was so reported to the Senate, by the Secretary of War. It was referred by the Senate to their Committee on Indian Affairs, which committee made a report, adopting the main conclusions of the commissioner, and to which report they annexed the estimates and conclusions of the commissioner, which they considered just and proper, and the amount they so found due the Indians and wrongfully withheld from them, was this sum of $28,505 50. Their report was based upon that of the commissioner. I have this report with that of the commissioner and the Secretary of War by me now. Then, in addition to all this evidence, you have the Secretary of the Interior coming here, and saying I ask you to keep the honor and good faith of this Government with these Indians. I ask you to appropriate this money, which is due them, but of which they are still deprived by frauds committed upon them in the years 1837, 1838, and 1839, by the agent of this Government. But the next thing you hear about it is, that the Committee of Ways and Means, probably not having examined it carefully, come here and strike it out of the deficiency bill. It is not in the line of their duty to know in reference to this matter. This comes particularly within the sphere of another of the committees constituted by this House—that on Indian Affairs; and the appropriate duty of the Ways and Means is, then, to provide the means of discharging the obligation and saving the honor of the Government. The Committee on Indian Affairs have examined it, and they come here and tell you, by their chairman, the appropriation should be made, that the claim is equitable and just.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I rise more for the purpose of obtaining information in regard to the proposed amendment, than for any other purpose. I would like to know of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] or any other gentleman who is conversant with the facts in the case, whether this agent was an officer appointed by the Government of the United States, and received the money as such, or whether he did not receive it as an agent appointed by the Indians themselves for that purpose?

Mr. HAVEN. I can state the facts as I understand them upon that subject, and as they appear in the report which was made by the commissioner to the Secretary of War. A treaty was made by this Government with these Indians in 1794. By the sixth article of that treaty of 1794, an annuity of $4,500 was to be paid to these Indians by the General Government. That article provides that it shall be paid by and under the direction of the superintendent to be appointed by the President for that purpose. Such superintendent was appointed, and from that time down to the present, the various superintendents have not only received these annuities, but, under instruction and direction of the Government, have acted as superintendents of most of the affairs of the Indians. The Indians have acted under their direction, and by their advice in very many of their national affairs. These superintendents have been rather guardians to the Indians than their agents. These superintendents from 1794 to 1830 received all these moneys as superintendents, and paid them over to the Indians; but in 1830, when Judge Stryker was appointed, he, by virtue of that appointment, as it appears from the report of the commissioner, went to Mr. Ingersoll, the agent or superintendent mentioned by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] yesterday, and, as superintendent or agent, demanded $7,500, part of this $28,505 50. It was paid to him by the old agent or superintendent, Ingersoll, as a superintendent or agent, and received by Judge Stryker as such.

Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman does not exactly comprehend my question. I understand this agent did not receive the money from the United States, but from the State of New York. My question was this: was this fraud committed by Mr. Stryker as an incumbent of any office which he held under Government to receive and dispose of this money?

Mr. HAVEN. I think it was.

Mr. PHELPS. Was he not responsible by his bond for this money?

Mr. JOHNSON. If the gentleman will allow me, I will answer the question asked by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS.] It was the duty of the superintendent, and was made so under the express instructions of the War Department, to receive this money. I have read his instructions over the signature of the acting Secretary of War at the time.

Mr. HARRIS. It is very clear to my mind, that this whole matter must turn upon one point. If it was committed to an officer of the Government to receive and dispose of these moneys, and he has been guilty of a dereliction of duty, and the Indians have been thereby defrauded out of that money, it is very clear to me that the Government should refund it. But, upon the other hand, if it should appear that this fraud was not committed by Mr. Stryker as an officer of the Government, but that he was merely an agent appointed by the Indians to receive the money and disburse it, then it is equally clear that the Government should not be liable for his default. If it should appear, as was stated by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS], and as was stated in the report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on yesterday, that he was appointed by the Indians, and not by the Government of the United States, to receive this fund, then I hold that the Government is not responsible for any act of malfeasance that may be committed by him.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Does not he know that the report which the gentleman from Missouri read, was a report long since made, and before any investigation was had; and Mr. Medill does not report upon the fact, that the Secretary of War had authorized and required an agent to take charge of the funds due from the State of New York to these Indians?

Mr. HARRIS. I will suggest to the gentleman, that unless there is a provision by treaty authorizing the appointment of such an agent, the Secretary of War would have no power to appoint one. A reference to the treaty will settle the question. And in further answer to the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] I will remark, that this report came from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs many years ago, when this fact was fresher in the recollection of the officers of the Government, and of the parties whose duty it was to know something about it; and I should think that this report ought to command more of our confidence than a report made at a subsequent period, when the facts to some extent must have faded from the recollection of all the parties, perhaps.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken upon the amendment to the amendment, to strike out $25,000, and insert $28,000, and it was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the amendment of Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas.

Mr. SWEETSER. Upon that I call for tellers. Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. SWEETSER and JOHNSON, of Arkansas, appointed; and the question being taken, the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 37; no quorum voting.

Mr. COBB. Let there be a recount.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection a recount will be had.

No objection being made, a recount was ordered and had, and the tellers reported—ayes 84, noes 39.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBB. In looking over the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] I discover that it does not certainly insure the payment of the money to the Indians. I desire to propose an amendment, to which probably, the gentleman will not object; it is to insert after the word "Indian," the words "per capita," so that the Indians may be certain to get their money.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am perfectly willing that such amendment shall be made. I think it ought to be made. I hope that by the unanimous consent of the House, it will be made.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment can be admitted only by general consent—the clause having been adopted.

Mr. PHELPS. I have a word to say in relation to that matter.

Mr. JOHNSON. I object to the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama. It will give rise to debate, to which I am opposed.

Mr. PHELPS. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB.]

Mr. COBB. Suppose I make a five minutes speech. I would if I thought it would do any good. I think every member will see at once the necessity of the amendment I propose—that is, to insert after the word "Indian," the words "per capita," so that the Indians will be certain to get what is appropriated.

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to a question of order. I understand the gentleman to offer his amendment to a clause which we have already adopted, and which is not now before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] rises to a point of order.

Mr. PHELPS. I hope my friend from New Hampshire will withdraw that question of order.

Mr. HIBBARD. Will you renew it?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

Mr. HIBBARD. I withdraw the question of order.

Mr. PHELPS. The position taken by my friend from Alabama [Mr. COBB] is right in the main; but it is applicable to the whole sum proposed to be appropriated to these Indians. It is wrong in this particular: You now make the Government of the United States responsible for certain moneys which belong to Polly Jemison, and which she deposited with that agent, and—

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I rise to a point of order. I wish the Chair would state now what the question is before the committee, which the gentleman is speaking upon. Will the Chair have the amendment read?

Mr. HIBBARD. I renew my objection to the amendment, as being out of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was about to state that I do not want to support it, for, after looking at it, in connection with the amendment itself, I find that it does not come in such a form as to be applicable to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] makes the point of order, that it is not now in order to make an amendment to the clause adopted by the committee. The Chair is inclined to think that the point of order is not well taken, and that it is in order to offer the amendment.

Mr. HIBBARD. I must appeal from that decision. I understand the Chair to decide that it is in order to amend a clause, after the committee have adopted it. It strikes me that such a decision will lead to disastrous results hereafter. I appeal from the decision.

Mr. COBB. I can add the proviso at the end of the section—that the money shall be distributed "per capita."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has made a decision, and the gentleman from New Hampshire takes an appeal. The decision is this: an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] and it was adopted. That amendment having been adopted by the committee, the Chair thinks it is competent to offer an amendment to that, as much as it is to any other part of the bill that has not been passed by. This amendment, having been adopted by the committee, becomes a part of the bill, as much so as if originally placed there, and is therefore open to amendment. From this decision, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] appeals; and the question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. HIBBARD. I call for a division of the question. I look upon it as an important principle in practice.

Mr. COBB. We might get into some difficulty and change our opinions, as we frequently do here. If it is the pleasure of the House, I will withdraw my amendment, and insert the proviso at the end of the section.

No objection being made, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. COBB. I move to insert, at the end of the section, the proviso that the money to be paid under the provisions of this section be paid "per capita."

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that my colleague has withdrawn his amendment, and that he intends to offer a proviso.

Mr. COBB. I have already done so.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let me suggest to my friend from Alabama, if he intends to apply the principle to the amendment, whether it would not be better to wait until we get through the Indian appropriations, and then introduce his proviso, and make the principle apply to all the appropriations in this bill for the Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama will be reported.

The amendment was accordingly read, as follows:

Provided, That the money appropriated under the provisions of this section shall be paid per capita.

Mr. COBB. Do I understand the chairman of Indian Affairs to say that I am right in moving this amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. That money cannot be paid per capita. It is due to individuals, and is not for distribution generally.

Mr. COBB. A great quantity of this money will go to agents who are hanging around this Hall, unless a proviso of this kind be introduced. It belongs to Indians, if to any one, for whose benefit we are anxious it should be appropriated. And unless we make this provision, or one similar, they will be defrauded out of their just dues.

Mr. FITCH. I wish the gentleman from Alabama to modify his amendment. The most of this money is due to individuals by name, and not per capita; and, moreover, it is money due by the State of New York, and not by the United States. The money was placed in the hands of the United States officer, who acted as trustee. We do not know the treaties which have been made with these Indians, for they are not before us; but I think the money ought to be paid to the individuals to whom it is due by the treaty.

Mr. COBB. I will modify my amendment to meet the views of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was modified to read as follows:

Provided, That the money appropriated by this section shall be paid to the persons to whom it may be legally due.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would suggest to my colleague the propriety of taking his own amendment, and drawing it up to suit himself. I think it reads:

Provided, That this money shall be paid to the persons to whom it may be legally due.

My colleague I know wishes to accomplish that which is very desirable in reference to all Indian appropriations. He wants, and I give him credit for it, to prevent the appropriation falling into the hands of agents and cormorants who are hanging around this Hall of legislation for the purpose of defrauding the Indians out of their substance. But, sir, he will not be able to accomplish his purpose by this amendment; because, should an agent come here with a power of attorney to receive the money, he becomes the party to whom it is legally due. Under that proviso the agent can receive it, just as well as he could without the proviso.

Mr. COBB. I do not want the gentleman from Alabama (my colleague) to put words in my mouth with reference to these agents. As far as some of them are concerned, they are useful beings.

Mr. HOUSTON. Your proviso does not accomplish the purpose of preventing these agents from receiving the money.

Mr. COBB. Then I will take it all back, if it is not satisfactory. I will withdraw it, as there seems to me to be a difference of opinion in relation to this matter.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I would like to see a provision inserted, to carry out the intentions of the gentleman from Alabama, and would suggest that one be prepared to meet the case.

Mr. WOODWARD. I have an additional section, which I will propose, which will indicate the mode of payment under every section of the bill, and of course cover this case.

Mr. COBB. Very well, then; I will withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama can withdraw his amendment by unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move to amend the bill by striking out the following items:

"For the reappropriation of the following sums, carried to the surplus fund, per warrants numbered twelve and thirteen, and dated, respectively, the 30th of June, 1846, and the 3d of June, 1848, under the following head, viz:

"For carrying into effect Choctaw treaty"—act 11th of June, 1842, $95 83.

I moved this amendment, sir, although I believe that the item ought not to be struck out at all. I moved it for the purpose of reaching the ground upon which the remainder of the estimates, furnished by the Indian department to this House, and to be offered by me as amendments, will be objected to, under a point of order. The ground upon which I move this amendment is, that the item I proposed to strike out, is not a deficiency. I will read the item, sir. It is:

"For the reappropriation of the following sums, carried to the surplus fund, per warrants numbered twelve and thirteen, and dated, respectively, the 30th of June, 1846, and the 30th of June, 1848, under the following heads:

1. For carrying into effect Choctaw treaty, act of 30th of June, 1842..... $95 83
2. For carrying into effect Choctaw treaty, on account of lands relinquished, act of 2d of March, 1831..... 826 26
3. For payment of Pottawatomies, on account of crop abandoned, act of 3d of March, 1839..... 742 50
4. For payment of Pottawatomies, for twelve log-houses destroyed, act of 3d of March, 1839..... 600 00

Now, sir, this is not a deficiency existing and occurring in the appropriations for the current year. It is to restore a surplus carried to the Treasury, and it is not strictly a deficiency. Yet they will contend that the section may be allowed to come in as a deficiency, and by the rule they adopt—which is no rule at all—they will expect to exclude the remainder of the same class to be offered by me as amendments to this bill. The amendments I shall offer are the estimates the Department furnished to the Committee of Ways and Means. I shall offer none other. If they are attempted to be ruled out upon a point of order that they are not deficiencies, then I refer you to their whole bill, and shall move to strike it out, item by item, on their own reasons; and I must be sustained. So the committee, in adopting such a principle to govern with this deficiency, having utterly failed to respect it themselves, will have adopted an absurdity. I have no hesitation, sir, in expressing my belief, when the Committee of Ways and Means adopted the rules which made up these deficiencies in the Indian bill, that they had no rule at all, but went by guess, taking up what they liked, and, without much investigation, rejecting what they did not like, exclusive of the consideration of the question whether these items were deficiencies or not. Let us examine the history of this deficiency bill.

A few years ago, a deficiency bill was never heard of. Was there no deficiency bill, however? Yes, certainly there was, and always has been, a deficiency bill as far as we are able to trace back the history of the Government. It has gone under a different and distinct title. It will be found to have gone under the title of "Acts legalizing" debts incurred by the Government and Departments, and providing moneys for their discharge in the current fiscal year. You have but to look at the deficiency bill to show the absurdity of the objections which have been made by gentlemen against the estimates of the Department when offered here in the nature of a deficit. Look at the deficiency bill last year, when the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BAYLY) was at the head of the Committee of Ways and Means. Look at the deficiency bills before that time, and what do you find? Why, you find, from what I will read here from this book, a few facts distinct and irresistible.

You will find, Mr. Chairman, in this deficiency bill, six items only, that may, in their legitimate and strict construction, be called a deficit. You find there are, at the same time, forty-two items of new and original matter for the purpose of making up this deficiency bill; and the items are not strictly to provide for deficiencies in appropriations, but to meet the current wants of the current year. The first bill referred to was approved 29th February, 1851, and under the same Committee of Ways and Means of the last Congress; the second deficiency bill was approved 15th May, 1851, and in the latter you find twenty-one items of deficit, with forty-four items of original matter. Sir, the true rule we must come at is, what is and what is not deficiency for the Government service for the current year? It must be what the Departments, and Executive, under their respective reports to this House, know to be necessary to carry on the service of the Government. That is a deficiency. Where a deficiency occurs within the current year, the general appropriation bill is not the proper bill in which to provide for it; it is a different thing, and it provides for the expenses of the ensuing years only. All estimates to discharge the obligations of this Government, whether they originate by law or treaty, or by the immutable principles of common honesty—every one of them occurring within the current fiscal year—are legitimately deficits, and nothing else. It is left to the wisdom of the Ways and Means Committee to discover anything different. They would have discovered something, which is to be enforced under your tribunal, sir, which would discharge the obligations of the Government, not by paying, but by excluding them. If such items are not proper in deficit bills for the current year, they cannot be proper in the general bill which provides for the ensuing year. But they desire to proceed with these estimates of the Government as if they were for private claims, and consign them to the fate of private claims, to wit—to die of neglect.

Mr. HOUSTON. I confess I am astonished at the course pursued by my friend from Arkansas, and I put it to him now whether it is right for him to make a motion for the purpose of consuming so much of the time of this committee, which ought to be appropriated to legitimate business, merely to argue and remind that committee what was settled in his favor yesterday? The point was submitted to the Chair; the point of order was overruled by the Chair, and the gentleman was permitted to offer his amendment; and it seems to me to be wholly unnecessary to make this motion now for the purpose of rearguing this matter.

Mr. JOHNSON. I must correct the gentleman. He says I do it for the purpose of consuming time. It is not so. It was not decided in my favor, except upon one point.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Arkansas alludes so often to the Committee of Ways and Means that really he would seem to convey the idea that he designs to cast reproach upon them for the course they have pursued.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not design that.

Mr. HOUSTON. As far as the Committee of Ways and Means is concerned, they have had no concerted action upon the point of order made yesterday by my friend from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] and very properly made. It was not a matter considered by the Committee of Ways and Means. It was prompted by his own judgment of rules that ought to govern here. The committee took no action upon it, and had no agency at all in it.

But I am willing, Mr. Chairman, to take the gentleman at his word, and strike this from the bill, if he contends it is improper; or, I am willing to take it out and let it take its chance in the Indian bill. The course which the Committee of Ways and Means pursued in regard to all these items was, wherever an item presented itself that they believed was one about which there would be no cavil at all, they allowed it, whenever they could conscientiously do so. All the claims which were put in were put in substantially upon that principle. The propositions which we rejected were those which were disputed as to facts and as to law, and have been before two branches of Congress, and matter of litigation in truth. I, sir, do not desire to interfere with the bill as it is before the House; but I appeal to the gentleman from Arkansas—I appeal to every member of this committee, desirous of passing this bill—and I think I may base that appeal upon a reasonable footing, and if so I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will respond to my appeal; and if he does not, I hope the committee will. My appeal is this: I desire to have action upon this deficiency bill. These amendments of the gentleman from Arkansas will be delayed but a few months at the outside, if he will withhold them and offer them as amendments to the Indian bill, which will shortly come up.

Mr. BROOKS. This is in the Indian bill—the same item.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. If such a case as that should take place, when will the general Indian appropriation bill be passed?

Mr. HOUSTON. I respond to the gentleman, let it be in August or September. How much will he gain in point of time by insisting upon the items going into this bill? Why a few months only. I appeal to the gentleman from Arkansas to withdraw his amendment, and let it go into the Indian bill, when it can be discussed there just as fully as here, and no time will be lost.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. If the House reject that amendment, or in other words, if the House refuse to strike out the clause, I say that it shows that the balance of the estimates ought to come in; and I hope the House will refuse to concur in the motion I made.

The question was then put on the amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to insert, as an independent section, to follow the one just read by the Clerk, the following:

For payment of Presha Bedwell, (formerly Presha Foreman,) being the amount of an award by the Cherokee Commissioners in her favor, which was erroneously paid by a former Cherokee agent to some one who personated the proper claimant, $464 00.

Mr. J. This claim originates under the treaty for money misapplied. It is an appropriation of the sum of $464, which amount of money was by mistake paid to the wrong person. The Government has found it extremely difficult entirely to escape from frauds of this character, which have been practiced upon it. The amount here asked to be appropriated was due to the particular Indian named in the amendment, Presha Bedwell, which was paid over by the agent of the Government, to a person who personated this claimant. I do not know that the amendment needs further explanation, as I can see no reason in the world, that can be advanced against its adoption by the committee. It comes here recommended as an estimate from the Department.

Mr. HOUSTON. From the reading of this amendment, the committee will see clearly what it is. [Here the amendment was again read.] Now, you see, facts are involved that we, as a committee, making merely appropriations, cannot investigate. In the first place, who personated the claimant? How, where, and when was the money paid? All these facts must be looked into, and reported upon. Then the House—

Mr. JOHNSON. The Committee on Indian Affairs investigated the matter. I will send up this paper to be read, that gentlemen may know its contents. I thought that the Committee of Ways and Means had not examined the estimates that were submitted to them. There is no dispute about that.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, }
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, April 22, 1851.
SIR: Your letter of the 23d ultimo has been received. The case about which you inquire, that of Presha Bedwell, (formerly Presha Foreman,) has been carefully investigated in this bureau, as well as in the office of the Second Auditor, and no doubt remains but that Mrs. Bedwell is the party in whose favor the award of the Cherokee commissioners for $464 was made; and it has also been clearly ascertained, that the amount of said award was paid by a former Cherokee agent, P. W. Butler, Esq., deceased, to some one who personated the proper claimant. As the said agent's accounts, which included this payment, have been settled—and recourse cannot now be had upon his sureties for the reimbursement of the amount, there being no fund under the control of this Department out of which Mrs. Bedwell can be paid, the only remedy left, for her, is to obtain from Congress an appropriation of the amount due her; and this will be asked for by this office at the next session of that body. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. LEA, Commissioner.

JOHN ELLIOTT, Esq., Charleston, Bradley county, East Tennessee.

Mr. HOUSTON. It may be that the Committee on Indian Affairs have looked into it. I do not pretend to say that they have not. But let them report their bill for the correction of this error on its own merits, and do not let us load down our appropriation bill—and especially a bill which is to supply deficiencies, with private claims which must be to delay or defeat it, by statements of facts for and against it. In this bill to appropriate money to carry out the treaties and laws of the country, we do not, or should not appropriate for the payment of private claims. I should regret deeply, under other circumstances, to put off the claim of any one because it was a private claim. It does seem to me that, had the gentleman from Arkansas reported a bill for the relief of this Indian, with this statement of facts, the House would not have hesitated to pass the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. The House never passes a bill upon a statement.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to know the date of the communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which has just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. April 22d, 1851.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I would like to inquire under what treaty this money was to be paid?

Mr. JOHNSON. It was due to that Indian under a treaty the date of which I at this moment do not recollect.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have two more amendments of the same class. All that I want to do is to discharge my duty; and, as the committee have declined to pass one of them, I will not submit the remainder.

I offer now the following, as an additional section, to come in after the two hundred and thirty-sixth line:

For the liquidated balance found due the Creek Indians for losses sustained during the last war with Great Britain, by that portion of the tribe which was friendly to and cooperated with the United States, in accordance with the promise of the Government, $110,417 90; to be paid by the United States agent to those Indians now living, and the legal representatives of those deceased, who are entitled to receive the same in proper person.

Mr. J. said: That, Mr. Chairman, is an item which has been due long since—that has been adjudicated after having been investigated by the express orders and authority of the Government—and is now estimated for in the regular estimates of the Indian department. It is to discharge an obligation in the nature of a treaty—an obligation incurred by us during the late war with Great Britain, which I explained the other day in the one hour speech which I had the honor to make to this House. It seems to me to be as clear a case as there is under the light of the sun. At present, as I have only five minutes, I can but approach the points which I understand will be presented in opposition to this amendment. The claim originates in this way: When the friendly Creeks joined the forces of the United States, in making war upon the hostile Creeks—or, rather, in the progress of the war—General Pinckney gave them an assurance and his pledge as a major general of the United States Army—and that authority was recognized by the General Government—that they should be indemnified for the losses and injuries that they had sustained. This fact will not be disputed, I imagine, by any one. At the expiration of the war—it will be alleged by the opponents of this amendment—there was a communication from the friendly Creeks, stating that $60,000 would be received as indemnity. There was no such thing. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that a letter was written by the agent, Hawkins, at the making of the treaty—long after the promise of Pinckney—saying that the friendly Creeks would, in his opinion, have taken, at that date, $60,000. The Indians made no such offer or statement, and no investigation had been made; and, in fact, the supposition even that the $60,000 referred to these losses, is a total mistake. But allowing it to be no mistake, still it was the agent, and not the Indians, that made the guess of $60,000; and is evidently and absolutely a rough guess. They will rely upon it, however, as a thing having the force of truth, and will insist upon it in the very face of the action of the Government of that day, requiring that same agent to investigate, ascertain, and report the amount of the losses, and in the face of the report of that same agent setting forth that over $100,000 was claimed, of which amount he was satisfied, and had allowed over $76,000 to be due; and his further statement, that the investigation was unfinished, and would be progressed with as early as possible.

The letter containing the guess of $60,000, as what they would then have received, it is now asked, shall be taken and relied upon against the actual investigation made by the same man. Thus would we make this House and these States abandon their honest obligations to the glaring dishonesty of both. The same gentleman then was instructed by the department to go on and complete the investigation. He was taken sick and died. He was succeeded by a man named Mitchell. Mitchell proceeded with and concluded the investigation. When the full investigation was reported, it appeared that the Indians had claims to the amount of over $300,000. That agent of the Government rejected all excepting $195,000. Of that amount, $55,000 had been already paid by the Government, thus leaving, without interest, still due, the amount now asked for, after thirty-six years' delay, to wit, $110,417.

The simple question is this: Under the promise of General Pinckney, are we liable for "losses and injuries" to the Indians? It has been acknowledged over and over again. How have we paid it? We have paid $85,000; no more. Was that the whole amount due them? No, no, no. Then what is the remainder? Answer, $110,000. By whom ascertained? By our own officers. Is it acknowledged? Yes, yes. After full and thorough examination, the validity of the debt was recognized by the Government, and the estimates are now sent to the House of Representatives. The sum of $110,000 is now asked. This is a short and explicit statement of this case. I shall now leave it, and wait to hear the objections to be urged by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] with regard to it. Those opposed to amendments always have the last word; and, I need not say to the committee, it is impossible fully to explain an item of this character in the short space of the five minutes allotted to me. I ask the attention and memory of the House to the statement of this case as contained in my speech made the other day.

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] proposes an amendment to this bill, by which $110,000, and upwards, is proposed to be appropriated, upon an alleged claim arising in behalf of certain Creek Indians in the year 1814. If the Government of the United States was justly indebted to the Creek Indians in 1814, in the sum proposed by this amendment, they are as justly indebted in the interest upon that amount from that time to the present. It cannot be expected in a claim of such magnitude that any gentleman, in a speech of five minutes, can present his reasons for or against its adoption. I, therefore, have but a very short time, in which I cannot possibly refer to all the points made by the gentleman who advocates this amendment. He correctly remarks, that in 1814, during the Indian war, a letter was addressed by General Pinckney to Colonel Hawkins, at that time the agent of the Creek Indians. I will read an extract from that letter:

"That the United States will retain so much of the conquered territory as may appear to the Government thereof to be a just indemnity for the expenses of the war, and as restitution for the injuries sustained by its citizens and the friendly Creek Indians."

Pending the treaty made in 1814 by the entire Creek nation, the friendly Creek Indians were willing to accept $60,000 as a full indemnity for the losses which they sustained. The gentleman from Arkansas, however, says that that $60,000 was only as an indemnity, by virtue of the treaty adopted in 1814, for the losses sustained by the friendly Creek Indians. I deny that position, and I say that the treaty of 1814 shows that there was an express reservation of all the rights of the friendly Creek Indians within the territory ceded by the treaty of 1814 to the Government of the United States. I have before me that treaty, and I will briefly refer to the first article of it, made with General Jackson. After stipulating what tracts of land, what country is ceded by the Indians—after defining the boundaries of their lands—there is the following proviso:

"Provided, nevertheless, That where any possession of any chief or warrior of the Creek nation who shall have been friendly to the United States during the war, and taken an active part therein, shall be within the territory ceded by these articles to the United States, every such person shall be entitled to a reservation of land within the said territory of one mile square, to include his improvements, as near the center thereof as may be, which shall inure to the said chief or warrior and his descendants, so long as he or they shall continue to occupy the same, who shall be protected by, and subject to, the laws of the United States; but upon the voluntary abandonment thereof by such possessor or his descendants, the right of occupancy or possession of said lands shall devolve to the United States, and be identified with the right of property ceded hereby."

There was still another provision, by which the property taken by the hostile Creek Indians either from the citizens of the United States, or from the friendly Creeks, Chickasaws, and Choctaw Indians, who were engaged in war upon the side of the United States, should be restored to the officers of the United States, and to be returned to all the persons from whom they had been thus captured. I say $60,000 was an ample compensation for all the losses which the friendly Indians had sustained in 1816, their lands having been expressly reserved to them by the treaty to which I have referred.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman mistakes the fact; they never made any such acknowledgment.

Mr. PHELPS. The letter of Colonel Hawkins expresses that this was the declaration of the friendly Creek Indians at the time of the negotiation of that treaty. That is the evidence I have upon this point. But, again: The gentleman relies upon a report made upon this claim by a late Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and who is laboring upon the same impression as the gentleman from Arkansas—to wit, that this amount of money, $85,000, which Congress afterwards appropriated for the purpose of satisfying the claims of the friendly Creek Indians, was paid to those Indians. I say, that this commissioner proceeds upon the same erroneous supposition that my friend from Arkansas has adopted—to wit, that this amount of money was to satisfy the claims of these Creek Indians, who were to be benefited by virtue of the treaty of 1814. I have shown you by that treaty that their lands were reserved to them, and, consequently, this indemnity was for their personal losses—for their personal property, which was captured by the hostile Indians.

But, again: there is another point of view in which I present this claim. To whom is this money to go? Who are the Indians that are to receive this money? The nation? No. Because, if you appropriate it to the nation, you pay it to those Indians who were engaged in a war against us, as well as to those who fought upon our side.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to strike out all except one dollar. In order to vote understandingly, we should apprehend the nature of this claim; and if it is a claim at all, it is not due to the Creek Indians, but to individual Indians of that nation. In 1812, '13, and '14, when this country was engaged in war, as the gentleman from Arkansas has correctly stated, certain officers promised that the friendly Creek Indians who fought with the troops of the United States should be indemnified for all their property captured or taken by the hostile Creek Indians. After the war was over, Captain Hawkins was charged with ascertaining the amount of these liabilities of the Government. Under these terms he reports in his letter, to which reference has been made, that the whole amount would not exceed $100,000, and that amount, upon revision, he thought, could be reduced. There have been $85,000 paid, as stated by the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON.] Now, if this claim is just, this money is to be paid to those particular chiefs and warriors, if they are living, who were friendly and fought for the United States, against their own countrymen. If they are dead and having heirs surviving them, then this money is due to their heirs. If they have no heirs at all living, then the money does not go to anybody. I consider, then, that if we pay this money to the Creek Indians, it goes into the coffers of the Creek nation; and those who were in the war, and took property from the friendly Creeks, may be benefited by this appropriation. If the Committee on Indian Affairs, or the Committee of Claims, or any other committee of this House, will take up this case, investigate and ascertain what particular Indians, who were friendly to the United States, are entitled to the specific sums of money which make up this aggregate sum of $110,000, and report such a bill here providing for the payment of the particular Indians who sustained losses, or, in case of their death, to their heirs, I will vote most cordially and cheerfully to pay this money to them. Let us know who are the Indians, and who are the heirs. I think we should not only be just, but we should, upon all occasions, be liberal to the Indians in this country. I say, if you will ascertain who are the particular Indian chiefs and warriors of the friendly party entitled, I will vote for a bill to pay them. But, until I know who they are, I cannot vote this money. I know that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] would not, nor would any member of this committee, ask for the payment of this money if it were going to the Creek nation as a nation. If it is due at all, it is due to particular individuals; and when it can be ascertained and a specific appropriation made to them, then I will give it my support.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will accept the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. JONES. I will remark, that I do not think it comes properly before the Committee of Ways and Means. It has been rejected by that committee, and by the House, ever since it was first reported to them.

Mr. JOHNSON. As far as I am concerned, I have investigated the whole of this matter minutely. I am not disposed to press upon this House a single thing which should not be at once acted upon, and I will withdraw this amendment upon the very express statement of the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] because I do know, and will show here to this House, all the parties by name, and show exactly how the whole of this money can be paid. I will also, as I have consulted with two members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, bring it again before our committee, and have a full report made under the instructions of that committee; and I will upon that present them this item, as an amendment to the general appropriation bill. But for the good that it will do me—and that I may mark this affair for future reference—I do declare my belief that the very same men who make war upon it now will make war upon it again, and will know no more about the case when it comes up again than they do now. That is my humble opinion—not perhaps because they do not want to do it, but because they let it pass by, saving themselves trouble, and knowing that in ignorance there is safety for the Treasury. I challenge and invite investigation, and express these things in this emphatic manner for the purpose of compelling these gentlemen to protect themselves by investigating the case. If they do that, then I am satisfied that they will have honesty enough to discharge their obligations.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the gentleman, as I have said before this, if this committee will report a bill specifying the amount of money due to each one of these Indians, or his heirs, I will support it.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is right.

Mr. JONES. Not as an appropriation in any of the general appropriation bills. I do not think it is the proper place.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then you will not discharge your honest obligations? What sort of conduct is that? Will this House discharge the honest obligations of Government, when there is simply a debtor who has the obligations of your major general in time of war, your commander-in-chief, who stands in all such cases as a minister plenipotentiary? I shall now withdraw my amendment; and when it comes up again, I hope I may not have occasion to make the same reproaches against gentlemen—that they know no more about this matter than they profess to know now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, offered the following amendment, to come in after line one hundred and sixty-seven:

For printing, binding, &c., six hundred copies of the first volume of the foregoing work, for distribution among the new members, $6,575.

Mr. J. This is an agreeable duty to discharge; one which, I have no doubt, there are gentlemen of the Ways and Means who will consider it almost impudence for me to discharge. But, nevertheless, I take great pleasure in discharging it, and I believe there are a good many in this House who will concur with me as to the propriety of my action, and support me in it.

The design of that amendment is to pay for the reprinting of the first volume of the work which I now hold in my hand.

A MEMBER. What is it?

Mr. JOHNSON. It is "A History of the Condition and Progress of the Indian Tribes of the United States, by H. R. Schoolcraft. Illustrated by S. Eastman, of the United States Army."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Arkansas, that his amendment needs some alteration. It speaks of a "foregoing work," to which no allusion is made in the preceding part of the bill.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a question of order. The amendment, as I understand it, proposes to supply the members with this volume. Now, I make this point of order: that that provision cannot properly go in this bill, as there is no existing law authorizing the publication of these volumes for the House.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, sir, I will withdraw my amendment, and offer it hereafter as an amendment after the one hundred and ninety-first line, where it will come in more appropriately.

The amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. SACKETT moved to strike out the following clause:

"For interest on the amounts awarded Choctaw claimants, under the fourteenth article of the treaty of Dancing Rabbit creek, of 27th of September, 1830, for lands on which they resided, but which it is impossible to give them, and in lieu of the scrip that has been awarded under the act of 23d of August, 1842, not deliverable east, by the third section of said law, per act of 3d of March, 1845, for the half year ending 30th of June, 1852, $21,800."

Mr. S. said: I submit that motion for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the Ways and Means, under what law this appropriation is made? What law makes it necessary to make the appropriation?

Mr. HOUSTON. My recollection now is, that it is under a law passed in 1845, but I may not be correct as to that.

Mr. DUNHAM. It is under the law of 1842.

Mr. HOUSTON. There was a law passed in 1842, and one in 1845, upon this same subject; but I do not now recollect under which of those laws this appropriation is required. They both bear directly upon this same point, and make it the duty of the Government to pay interest upon this scrip.

Mr. SACKETT. I have examined the acts, and can find no law requiring the payment. There may be some such law, but I do not find it in the act of 1842, or in that of 1845.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is such a law.

Mr. SACKETT. This whole matter arises out of a treaty, made with the Choctaw Indians in 1830, by which certain Indians, who chose to become citizens of the United States, were to have certain lands. The Government, having disposed of those lands, saw that they had not the ability to furnish them to the Indians. Under the act of 1842, these Indians were given certain land scrip as a substitute for the lands they were to have had under the treaty of 1830. At a subsequent period, and in liquidation of the original claim for lands, an award was made by the commissioner, and an appropriation made, in the act of 1846, for the purpose of paying interest on that award. I can find no appropriation subsequent to that time, either in the deficiency bills or in the general appropriation bills. I, therefore, call upon the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to show the necessity of this appropriation under some existing law. I have not been able to find any.

Mr. PHELPS. By the act of 1842, it was provided that a certain amount of land scrip should be given to these Indians, in lieu of the lands which had been reserved to them by the treaty of Dancing Rabbit creek, and which had been sold by the Government of the United States. That land scrip was to be given to these Indians, to be located in the State of Mississippi; and by a subsequent act of Congress, either in that State, or Arkansas, or Louisiana.

The act of 1842 provided that one half of that land scrip should be delivered to the Choctaw Indians, when they migrated to the country which was assigned to them on the west of the Mississippi; the other half was to be issued at such place as might be directed by the President of the United States. Subsequently—I think it was by the act of 1845—the other half of this land scrip was directed to be delivered to the Indians when they reached their new home, west of the Mississippi. The reason why this item appears in this deficiency bill is, that the money has been appropriated to pay the interest by the calendar year, and not by the fiscal year; and this item pays merely the interest for this half of the present fiscal year.

Mr. SACKETT. I find no such appropriation in the acts of 1849, 1850, or 1851. Can the gentleman show me the act?

Mr. PHELPS. I cannot, at this moment, turn to it.

Mr. SACKETT, (to the Chair.) Would it be competent to pass over this clause for the present, until the committee have an opportunity to examine the act?

Mr. HOUSTON. I have examined this claim minutely, in conjunction with the gentleman from Missouri, and the other members of the Committee of Ways and Means; and I assure this committee, that there is not only a law which required the Government to issue scrip to the Choctaw Indians for the lands they had lost, but that there is a subsequent act which funds that scrip, and requires the Government to pay interest, as proposed in this bill. There is, therefore, no use in passing over the clause.

Mr. PHELPS. In answer to the gentleman from New York, I will read him the clause from the act of 1846, which will, I think, be satisfactory. It is as follows:

"For interest on the amount awarded Choctaw claimants, under the fourteenth article of the treaty of Dancing Rabbit creek, of the 27th September, 1830, for land on which they resided, but which it is now impossible to give them, and in lieu of the scrip that has been awarded under the act of 23d August, 1842, not deliverable east by the third section of the said law, per act of 3d of March, 1845, viz: $3,725 for the year 1845, and $35,575 for the year 1846."

These appropriations have heretofore been made for the calendar years, and not for the fiscal years.

Mr. HOUSTON. And this appropriation is for the present half year.

Mr. SACKETT. I have looked at the acts for three or four years subsequent to 1846, and I find no such appropriation.

The question was then taken on Mr. SACKETT's amendment, to strike out the clause, and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk then reported the next clause, as follows:

"For compensation to three special agents and four interpreters for the Indian tribes of Texas, and for the purchase of presents, fifteen thousand dollars."

Mr. BROOKS moved to amend this clause, by adding thereto the following:

"Provided, That one of these special agents shall be directed by the President to confer with the proper authorities of Texas, with the view to an arrangement for placing the Indians in that State under the exclusive control of the General Government, and of reserving to them some territory in which they shall be secure in their possessions."

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to a question of order. Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That amendment certainly cannot be in order, if I understand it.

Mr. BROOKS. For what reason?

Mr. HIBBARD. The amendment is irrelevant to the subject-matter embraced in the clause, and is not therefore in order.

Mr. BROOKS. It is a provision for the special direction of one of the agents, assigning him his duty, as to how he shall use the time and what he shall do with the money. It is clearly in order. The clause appropriates $15,000 for the payment of these agents, and the question is, shall you give them special instructions.

Mr. HIBBARD. The clause proposes to appropriate $15,000 for the purchase of presents, the gentleman from New York submits an amendment, providing that certain directions shall be given to the agent.

Mr. BROOKS. I beg to correct the gentleman. The money is appropriated "for compensation to three special agents."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The amendment proposes to authorize the President to enter into negotiations with the State of Texas, to purchase a country from that State, for the purpose of locating the Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that, inasmuch as the amendment undertakes to define the duties of one of the agents provided for in the clause, it is in order.

Mr. BROOKS. I wish to make a few remarks upon that amendment. My object in offering it is, in part, to call the attention of the committee to our Indian relations of Texas. We are now spending in Texas, for the purpose of keeping these Indians in order, something like three millions of dollars, in the expenditures of the army, and probably—for I have not made the calculation—a larger amount than three millions of dollars. In addition to that, we have in this appropriation bill $50,000 deficiency for Texas volunteers, who have cost in all between two and three hundred thousand dollars.

These enormous expenses for the Indian department and army of Texas arise wholly from the fact that Texas has reserved to herself, as she had a right to do, all the public lands lying within her borders, allowing the Indians no possessory rights; and as the columns of emigration go forward in Texas, they are constantly meeting with the Indians; and the first intimation the Indians receive that they are to lose their lands, is from the chain of the surveyor and his corps of attaches marking trees. The consequence of this is, that there is continual excitement and hostility between the Indians of Texas and the people of Texas.

Texas, it must be remembered, copies the Spanish law and customs as to Indian lands. She allows no usufructuary rights to the Indians, as the other United States do, but claims the Indian lands as her own, free from all possessory incumbrances.

Now, sir, there was a treaty like that suggested in my amendment negotiated by General Houston in 1843, and it was understood to be a treaty boundary line between the Indians of Texas and the people of Texas. I only ask in my amendment that one of these special agents be directed to inquire into these facts, and see if anything can be done with the authorities of Texas for fixing a boundary line, beyond which the white man shall not go. It is better and cheaper for us to pay $10,000,000 now for defining a boundary line between the Indians and the people of Texas, than to be paying between $3,000,000 and $5,000,000 every year for the support of the army in Texas and the subjugation of the Indians in Texas, the main cause of whose hostility is the invasion by the people of Texas of their territorial possessions, of which they believe they are being unjustly deprived.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If I understand the amendment, it proposes to invest in the President the power to make an arrangement with Texas by which a certain portion of her public lands shall be set apart for the Indians.

Mr. BROOKS. No such thing at all.

Mr. JONES. Well, that will be the construction given to it.

Mr. BROOKS. "To confer with the proper authorities of Texas," is the language.

Mr. JONES. Exactly; and suppose, upon a conference with the authorities of Texas, the President should agree with Texas that if she would set apart a certain portion of her territory for the use of these Indians, the government of the United States should pay to her $3,000,000, $4,000,000, $5,000,000, or $10,000,000, and then come here and submit it to Congress, will it not be claimed that this contract was made under authority of law, and will not the United States be bound to carry it out? It is a provision of too much importance, I think, to be brought in here and enacted into a law in this hurried manner. It should not be incorporated into this bill. If such authority is to be conferred upon the President, let the matter be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Let them investigate, and then draw up a bill and report it to the House. It seems to me it should not be thus hurriedly adopted by the House.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I should like to know of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] why the Indian bureau cannot make these inquiries without any additional authority by law?

The CHAIRMAN. No further discussion is in order upon this proposition.

Mr. SACKETT. I desire that the amendment should be again read, so that we may better understand what it is.

The amendment was again read by the Clerk.

The question was then put, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. I move to strike out the entire section for the appointment of these agents.

The only place where we can possibly reach the item now before us is, to insert it as an amendment to the Indian appropriations in the bill now before us. There is no item in the regular Indian bill for Texas, and there is nothing upon which we can possibly hang this item except this special place. Every other attempt will be ruled out of order.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] asks, why not let the Committee on Indian Affairs bring in a separate bill? Why, sir, you could not give such a bill vitality or existence. You could not draw the attention of the House to it. You could not galvanize it into existence. There is no other possible form in which you can accomplish the object. Here is an appropriation to maintain our Indian relations in Texas; relations which cost us not only immense sums to protect Texas, but in consequence of which spring the greater part of our difficulties under that part of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, which compels us to keep the Texas Indians out of Mexico. We ask for no appropriations—we ask for no definite arrangement; we only ask for a conference of our Government with the authorities of Texas, to see what, if anything, can be done.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a point of order. I am compelled to appeal to my friend from New York, as one of the Committee of Ways and Means, and as one who deserves to get this bill along, not to press this matter. This appropriation has just been voted down, and it is just as relevant to any appropriation bill as it is to this.

Mr. BROOKS. You cannot get it in any other bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would not otherwise make a point of order against one of my colleagues upon the Committee of Ways and Means, but we shall never get through this bill if this kind of debate goes on.

Mr. BROOKS. I moved to strike out the entire section, and I am speaking against that item. I am speaking against any appropriation, unless something can be done with the money to better our Indian relations in Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BROOKS. The real practical question before the committee, then, is, shall you take this opportunity, and the only one you will have, to regulate our Indian affairs with Texas? That is one question, and another one is: shall you go on as you have heretofore done, and spend from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 for the support of your army in that State, making no practical effort to remove the causes of such an enormous expenditure?

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to know if that is in order?

Mr. BROOKS. I say it is cheaper to give $10,000,000, if necessary, for the purpose of having your Indian affairs definitely settled in that State than it is to support half your army there for the purpose of keeping those Indians from maintaining what they believe to be their rights. As an example of what is going on, I ask the attention of the House to the following extract from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

"José Maria says, [I quote from the report of the Indian agent, Stern,] that then there was a line below which the Indians were not allowed to go, but the white people came above it, marked trees, surveyed lands in their hunting grounds and near their villages, and soon they would claim the lands; if the Indians went below, they were threatened with death; that this was not just." "That a party of white men had recently (13th June, 1851), been in his country, surveying land and marking trees; that he followed them, told them they must mark no more trees, and must leave the country; that he would not molest them, but they should not survey his lands."

Now, it is this very conflict between the rights of the Indians, or what they believe to be their rights, and what would be their rights in any other part of the United States, and the claims of Texas, which makes it necessary to expend from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 every year for the support of your army. If you do not regulate this matter now, you will have no other opportunity to do it, in order, this session. If this is not a proper place to bring this amendment in, there never will be a proper place. I tell gentlemen again, there is no other bill, nor any other Indian bill, upon which you can hang any law for the regulation of our Texan Indian relations. There is no other point at which it can be made in order, and there is no other time, unless you do it now. If you do it now, you will have hereafter to put in the deficiency bill payments for Texas volunteers in Indian wars, and payments for quartermaster's movements in the army. Economy, then, demands that you act now.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York whether there is any legislation upon the part of Texas authorizing the Governor of that State to enter into an arrangement with the Government of the United States, in relation to that matter? That will show whether there has not been some move upon the part of Texas which we ought to meet by a corresponding action.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I am opposed to striking out this clause of the bill.

In reply to the observations of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] I will say, that I do not understand why the Secretary of War may not, under the instructions of the President, open any communication with the Governor of Texas or the Legislature of that State, which the Executive department of the Government may consider proper or judicious. If it be designed by the introduction of this proposition, to take the initiative for empowering the Executive to make another contract with Texas for the purchase of, or the jurisdiction over, her lands, then it becomes us, instead of putting it into this bill in this hurried manner, to pause before we attempt to take that initiative step.

In relation to this chief, José Maria, of whom the gentleman from New York speaks, I believe he has under his command just about ninety men. Now, I say it would be cheaper for us to gather up these Indians, and take them off upon the wild lands of the United States at the borders of Texas, than it would to undertake here to confine them in Texas. The Secretary of War, in his report, calls upon Congress to look to the Indian affairs in Texas. He calls upon us to acquire some particular section of country, and to appoint an agent. Now, if that agent is to have authority to bind this Government, even by implication, to the purchase of the jurisdiction over any given amount of land in Texas, I say it would be unwise in Congress to place any such power in the hands of any such agent whatsoever. Let the President correspond with the Governor of Texas, and let the Legislature of Texas take the initiative step. Then it will rest with the legislative power of the Government of the United States to determine whether they will progress with the contract. It seems to me that this is a case that does not admit of two views.

Mr. HOWARD. Is it now in order to offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order.

Mr. HOWARD. I move to increase the appropriation $5,000.

Mr. Chairman, I was not opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] I am not at all opposed to the United States inquiring into this matter, and more particularly as it has been recommended by the Indian Department, as well as by the Secretary of War. I wish, however, to inquire of the honorable member from New York, in relation to one matter. He says that the state of Texas, or the citizens of Texas encroach upon the Indians' land. Now, I had occasion to go into that matter fully during the last Congress. The Indians have no title of occupancy in Texas, and never had, for the simple reason, that, under the Government of Spain any title to occupancy was never admitted at all. It gave these lands to the Indians whenever they settled into the habits of civilization. It gave them certain tracts of land in fee, but never recognized any right whatever to wild lands. Such was the law under the Republic of Mexico. Under those laws they were entitled to the same amount of land as the whites, whenever they settled into the habits of civilized life, and embraced the Christian religion. They were entitled to the same rights as the native born citizens of Mexico, when Texas seceded from Mexico. This was the state of things that existed. Her Indian relations were precisely in that condition. The consequence was, that when we became annexed to the United States, this Government, by virtue of its Constitution, and the federal compact, undertook to control and provide for the Indians.

Now, I have no doubt Texas, if this Government asked it, would part with a portion of its territory for Indian purposes. But she would not cede her jurisdiction over it except upon condition that ceasing to be Indian territory, it should revert to the State.

Now, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] proposes, if the Government choose to take all these Indians out of the State of Texas, and place them upon some of the public domain in New Mexico, we shall not object. But you must take care of them in some way. If you do not provide some forces, or some means to take them off, we shall be driven to make war upon them ourselves, and force them into New Mexico. Then the Government can settle them as it pleases.

Mr. SACKETT. By the act of annexation of Texas to this country, the lands within the jurisdiction of that State, belong to the State of Texas. By what right, therefore, do we assume to give jurisdiction, to give the right of occupancy, to give possession, or title for any purpose whatever, to any other power, or persons? Sir, we have no such authority. What are the consequences to grow out of the exercise of this power? The lands of that State are pledged for the debts of the State. What are the consequences to follow, if we interpose and take the lands away from this State, by the sovereign act of the Government? We, at least, lay ourselves liable to the charge that we intend thereby to assume the payment of this debt, to the extent of the lands which we take away, and which are already pledged as security for the payment of the State debt.

Mr. HOUSTON, (interrupting.) I would like to ask the gentleman from New York, by what authority we interfere with the Indian tribes in New York, or with the lands of the Indians in that State?

Mr. SACKETT. We have no original authority to do it. The title is in the Indians by an original right. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HOWARD] concede the right of the United States to take away a portion of our lands, and give them to the Indians?

Mr. HOWARD. I expressly deny that; but we have the right, under the Constitution, to regulate commerce with the Indians, and to regulate Indian affairs.

Mr. SACKETT. I see, sir, no escape from the conclusion I have spoken of, if we undertake to control and give possession of these lands, as against the authority of Texas. That is the point to be met. We take away from the creditors of Texas the security which the Republic of Texas gave to those creditors. I think we are treading upon dangerous ground, in the adoption of the amendment. I hope it will not be adopted.

The question was then taken on the amendment offered by Mr. HOWARD, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. EVANS. I move to diminish the appropriation $3,000. It is true, as stated by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. HOWARD] that by the Spanish law no property in lands in Texas is recognized as being in the Indian tribes. But the Indians did not help to make those Spanish laws. They themselves have always contended that they had the right to the lands, and they have never recognized the binding force, or the validity and obligation of those Spanish laws; and every time you encroach upon what they assert to be their rights—every time you go where there is game, and drive them out, and deprive them, by that means, of their subsistence—you get up an enmity to the United States, which has to be controlled by your troops. I do not care whether the Spanish laws recognize any right in them or not. The question is, have they any right, or do they claim any right whereby their connections with the United States are involved? It is known to every body that they do. Our attention has been frequently called to it. No one wants to deprive Texas of her land, or has any one ill feelings towards Texas. Every one wants her to retain her right to the lands, and pay her debts, and do with the land what she pleases. But I hope the gentleman from Texas will allow this proposition of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BROOKS,] or some proposition similar to it, to prevail. Let the Government enter into some negotiation with the State of Texas for the purpose of putting an end to these difficulties. We are involved in the expenditure of a vast sum of money every year on account of Indian wars, on the borders of Texas, and it is a notorious fact that many of these Indian wars, perhaps I may say, in truth, all of them, have grown out of conflicting claims between Texas and the Indians. I do not say that their claims are just; but they think that they have a title, and a right, and they seek to assert and enforce that right by carrying off Texan property, or committing other depredations, which the Government of the United States are bound to redress.

Now, in order to do this thing as cheaply as possible, and get rid of this large expenditure in which we are involved in the protection of Texas, I suggest that gentlemen will allow this proposition to prevail. Let a negotiation be opened between the President of the United States and the Government of Texas—not giving him authority, however, to involve this country in debt without the further action of Congress—and see if we cannot set aside some lands upon which the Indians will rest satisfied, the property in which shall, after the Indian occupancy ceases, revert to Texas.

Mr. HOWARD. My friend from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] misunderstood me, if he understood me as being opposed to the proposition of the honorable gentleman from New York, [Mr. BROOKS,] I am quite willing that a negotiation shall take place. I think it proper that it should; but I wish it to be understood that it does not proceed from Texas, but from this Government. I believe it necessary in order to the management of our Indian relations in Texas. That is all I have to say upon it.

Mr. EVANS. If you think it necessary, let us have it. But when the gentleman said that these Indians have no right of occupancy, I said that they claimed the right.

Mr. HOWARD. That claim has no legal foundation. We know that every European government, when it discovered a country, assumed that it had title to the soil, and even went so far as to reduce the Indians to slavery; and that that is one of the best recognized principles of international law. The fact that the Indians have no title has been recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States in two or three different decisions. The distinction between the regulation of Spain and the regulation of England in relation to the right of discovery, has been recognized by the Government of the United States in treaties, and in various other forms. All that I have to say is, that the Government of the United States has assumed, by virtue of annexation, the regulation of the Indian tribes. That is a part and parcel of the compact. But that Texas will be liberal in relation to that matter, and is willing to meet the Government of the United States more than half way, in a liberal adjustment and arrangement to provide for these Indians, is a fact that I know, and which, no doubt, will be made apparent if an amendment of this sort is put into this bill, or in any other. But what I wish to be understood as saying is, that Texas invades no rights of the Indians, and never has, either by her citizens or her government.

Mr. EVANS. If there is no objection, I will withdraw my amendment.

No objection being made, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. FITCH. I offer the following amendment, of course of my own personal responsibility, and not as one of the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is to come in in the one hundred and eighty-second line, after the word "presents." The amendment is as follows:

To negotiate with said Indians, under instructions from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for their removal from that State to some designated unoccupied territory of the United States; and also to increase the appropriation $25,000.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this debate relative to the Indians of Texas with no little interest. I think there is some propriety in making some other than the present disposition of these Indians—at least in getting them without the jurisdiction and the limits of Texas. I am not willing that Texas shall come up here with a proposition for us to purchase another strip of her territory, at a cost of ten or twelve millions of dollars, for the purpose of giving possession of it to these Indians. The objections to accepting or acting upon such proposition, will be obvious at once to every member of the committee; and I fancy that this very provision, as it now stands, is only an entering wedge to a proposition of that kind. Of course, an attempt to purchase of Texas any portion of her territory for the Indians, or for any other purpose, reopens in part, at least, the sectional questions which we trust are now, for the time being, settled; for a "Wilmot proviso" will immediately and warmly be sought to be inserted in any such purchase, and as warmly resisted. I propose by this amendment that the Government of the United States shall negotiate directly with the Indians, and that Texas shall have nothing to do with the negotiation. I believe that Texas desires to be a party to this negotiation; but she will not necessarily be so, and ought not to be. Texas acknowledges no right, on the part of the Indians, to this territory, and I do not wish to purchase the right. We can negotiate with the Indians themselves—negotiate for their removal beyond the jurisdiction of Texas, and place them upon our territory, to which our title is indisputable, and where there shall be no authority to interfere with our control over them.

Texas demands of us compensation for depredations which she charges are committed upon her citizens by the Indians within her borders, while at the same time, by refusing us jurisdiction over the territory occupied by them, she practically prevents us from so controlling them as to prevent their depredations. Under the existing state of things, we cannot control them. We have no power over the territory occupied by them. Yet Texas holds us responsible for their good behavior, and claims of an enormous amount have been presented, and are now pending before the Committee on Indian Affairs, for damages inflicted by them upon her people. These claims, if allowed, will be a source of wealth to the citizens of Texas, as another ten million purchase of territory will be to her government. I desire to cut off both by removing the Indians beyond her boundary, where we can control them without asking the consent of that State, and without purchasing that consent, or any more of her territory.

Mr. HOWARD. Now, if the gentleman is in earnest, and if it is the object—which it ought to be—of this Government to place these Indians in some position where they can have a clear recognized right to location, I admit that it is a sound and wise policy. But I believe, furthermore, that if these Indians were taken to some parts of the territory of the United States, or in any other country where they can cultivate the soil, and where they can be allowed to carry on the business of grazing, to which they are naturally adapted, they would in a short time become civilized; but in their present condition they must be killed out, or removed from the country.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. FITCH,] by adding $5,000, which will make the whole sum $30,000, appropriated towards the making of treaties with these Indians, by which we shall remove them. Now, I have never heard the suggestion broached before, but it strikes me at once, if it can be made practical, as the very best thing, in regard to these Indians, which can be effected. I feel a little sore myself, and do not expect that I shall ever get over it entirely, [laughter,] about the $10,000,000 voted heretofore, with all the attending circumstances; the whole matter was altogether painful. I am opposed, then, if we can get clear of these Indians, to taking from Texas any more of her territory. The very best disposition that can be made of these Indians, by this Government, will be to remove them beyond the limits of Texas. This, then, is an authority to proceed in that direction if it be found practicable. This appropriation is proposed to be made towards that purpose, that the department may be enabled to proceed in the matter. But what, Mr. Chairman, is our situation, if we do not take some step of the kind? Upon the table of the Committee of Indian Affairs, is now found piled up bundles of claims from citizens of the State of Texas, against the Government—over $100,000 of claims—which it is urged that this Government should pay. In regard to these claims, we find it a most difficult matter to determine; not one of the intercourse laws of the United States governing our Indian relations, extends over that State, so that they are there without Indian laws. The very provision to which this amendment is offered, is an original act, extending there the policy of this Government; and is not sustained by any previous and existing law whatever on the face of the earth. This is an appropriation to pay for Indian agencies in the State of Texas, which now do not exist there. I will not pretend to state what the result will be in the event we do not take some steps in this matter, as to the destiny of these Indians; but just one glance ought to satisfy this House. Look at the claims set up by the State of Texas. Texas totally denies and repudiates the right of occupancy of these Indians, and you cannot fail perceiving what must, under such circumstances, be the destiny of these tribes. There is something due to them from this Government. It is humanity that is due, and a gentle and fatherly guardian care. If this claim set up by the State of Texas to the right of occupancy of these lands be right, this Government ought to come forward and do something. If that claim is right, we are bound to remove those Indians from there, or to enter into negotiations with the State of Texas, by which they will be allowed a certain limited tract of country, in which they can remain in peace. Nor until this thing is done can the United States extend her intercourse laws over these tribes; until this is done, we cannot have any effective government relations with them, and every appropriation which is made in regard to this subject must be made without the authority of law—without the authority of treaty; and where, indeed, there is no existing obligation in the world to make any, but that of humanity to the Indians within the limits of Texas. It is necessary that the proposition of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] or that of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Fitch,] should be adopted. It is necessary that we should settle upon some definite, fixed policy. Then let us authorize negotiations to be entered into with these Indians by the Government of the United States to remove them beyond the limits of Texas.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HIBBARD. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas. I hope it will not be adopted. I hope none of the amendments, touching this matter of negotiation with Texas, will be adopted by the committee. I regretted the introduction of the amendment by the gentleman from New York. A question of order was raised, which was overruled by the Chairman, and the decision was acquiesced in by the committee. There remark I propose to make is submitted to the discretion of the committee, and it is in the nature of an objection. This is a question which ought not to be considered here. This is an appropriation but to supply deficiencies, and I apprehend that nothing is in order but an item in the nature of an appropriation for a deficiency. This is two removes from being, in any degree, germane to the object of this bill. It does not propose an appropriation. It does not even propose what use shall be made of the appropriation provided for in the bill. It directs the President of the United States, or the Indian Department, to enter into a negotiation with the authorities of Texas, upon a matter entirely independent of that provided for by the bill. I foresaw the evils to which this course would lead. I think that the committee have already begun to have practical experience of them. Why, it has already opened up, not only the subject of the Indians in Texas, of their title to land in Texas—the question whether or not they have any title, and if any, what it is, but the whole question of the Texas boundary bill of the last session—slavery, the Wilmot proviso, and all. If we begin in this march of progress, I know not where we can end. If we can commence one negotiation, we can begin to provide for another, and we can introduce a provision inquiring into the expediency of repealing the Texas boundary bill of the last session, or any other measure. I hope the committee will stop short of a beginning in this matter. It does not belong to the bill. There are things enough in it already that do not belong there. I trust that the amendment will not prevail.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken upon the amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. EVANS. I move to amend, by increasing the sum to $50,000. I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Fitch.] I consider it is a very important one—one that will save to the Government $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 a year, in the matter of claims for indemnity and otherwise. We are told that there are claims now in the committee room of the Committee on Indian Affairs to the amount of $100,000, presented by citizens of Texas, demanding recompense for depredations committed upon them by Indians, against whose ravages we are bound to give protection. Consider, besides, that a vast body of claims, I am told, amounting to millions of dollars, are here or upon their way here, which are being presented by citizens of Mexico, who claim indemnity under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, for the ravages of Texas Indians; and is it not apparent to every one, that if we can remove those Indians, an appropriation of $50,000 for that purpose would be a most economical expenditure? There could not be a better policy, than to expend it as soon as possible. I wish the language of the amendment had been a little different. It strikes me, from hearing it read, that it is an appropriation of $25,000 for the negotiation. I would make it an appropriation of $50,000 for the actual removal. I may be mistaken, as I have not looked at the amendment. In some shape—either in that shape, or the one offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,]—I am willing to vote for it. I trust every man in this committee who is in favor of a real, genuine economy, will give it his support. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] thinks that it may open the question of slavery. I do not see, by any sort of possibility, how it can have that effect. If I thought it could—

Mr. HIBBARD. I said only that the discussion had been brought in here.

Mr. EVANS. I admit it has been mentioned here. You cannot prevent the question of slavery from being discussed here; but it can lead to no practical results. This does not involve any connection with the slavery question. It is the appropriation only of a small sum of money to a purpose of real, true, genuine, thorough economy. That is what it will be found to be. It will, if it lead to a successful negotiation, save us $100,000 a year in the shape of claims from Texas; and perhaps millions, which we may hereafter be obliged to pay to Mexico. I say, if its purpose can be effected—if it can be only carried out, we ought now to make a beginning. I am glad that it has been introduced here. It was discussed in the last Congress. I want, however, the rights of Texas to be reserved. I do not wish in any way to trench in the slightest degree upon any part of her just authority. Let her have all her lands, and their proceeds, but let us get rid of the Indians; and in doing so, we also get rid of a great part of the troops upon the Rio Grande, which are now necessary to prevent the Indians from crossing over into Mexico. Those Indians now cross the river and go into Mexico, because they assert that they have a right—a title to lands situated there, of which they have been deprived by the Spanish construction, of no title to Indians in land, which the gentleman from Texas alluded to as the law of that State. Let us remove them to some unoccupied district of this country, where they can have no access to Mexico—where they may feel that they have some title in the soil—where their rights are respected—where they may perchance become cultivators and producers. Now make a beginning, and, my word upon it, we will finally diminish the expenditures of the Government in a very considerable degree.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland will be rejected, and also that of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Fitch.]

Mr. FITCH. I hope not.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman has already said that in his speech: I take the ground that the amendment was offered in all sincerity, and I am opposing it in the same spirit. I would have made the point of order, but it was not competent to do so, because my colleague of the Committee of Ways and Means, as I believe, had proposed an amendment, upon which I made a point of order, which was overruled by the Chair. I then desired that the committee should take its own course. Now, sir, we see what is the result of a departure from the rules of debate by a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, who ought to aid me in suppressing debate. That proposition is not precisely germane to this bill. While we are now proposing an appropriation, not as a deficiency to Texas of $15,000 to carry through this fiscal year, which was omitted at the last session, a motion to amend is made. The Chair entertains that motion—that in a deficiency bill you may bring forward a proposition regulating the whole of our relations with the Indian tribes in Texas, just as well the Indian tribes in New Mexico and California. The proposition is as broad as it is possible for any proposition to be connected with our Indian relations, and I hope, therefore, and appeal to the committee, that we shall not persist in the course of debate of this sort. I concur and sympathize with all of those who are arguing that our relations with the Texas Indians require some legislation. Our connection with these Indians is embarrassing, and it will so continue until we legislate upon the subject in some way, and I call upon my honorable friend from Arkansas, [Mr. Johnson,] who is so diligent and faithful in the discharge of the duties connected with his position—and who has the Indian policy under his charge—as to whether his committee will not act upon this subject as an independent question. I ask him if it is not proper that it should be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which has the control of the regulation of the Indians in Texas. I hope, therefore, as this is a subject of such vast importance, and involving such great consequences, not only to Texas, not only to the Indians, but the Government of the United States, that the proposition will be matured in the Indian Committee. When it meets with the concurrence of that gentleman and that committee; when they shall indorse the proposition that negotiations shall be established between us and these Indians, by which we will be relieved of the difficulties now existing, I shall be prepared to go for it. I sympathize with him.

I now propose to answer the argument of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] who says that this is the only bill to which you can attach this proposition. I ask if it could not as well be attached to the ordinary Indian appropriation bill? Your proposition appropriates for the purpose of carrying out and keeping up our Indian relations in Texas, and it is just as proper to come in that bill as anywhere. I trust that it may not be pressed now. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw it from this bill, as it can be as well considered and acted upon hereafter.

Mr. BROOKS. Show me an item in the Indian appropriation bill where there is an appropriation to which this can be attached.

Mr. HOUSTON. My recollection is, that it can be attached to that bill. If it is not, Mr. Chairman, I ask why it should not be matured by the Indian Committee, and reported upon its own responsibility. That committee can and will do it.

Mr. BROOKS. The item under consideration is not a deficiency item. It is for a future year.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from New York is mistaken, or else the Indian department is mistaken.

Mr. PHELPS. I will inform the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] and my friend from Alabama, [Mr. Houston,] that if this is not a deficiency, then the Department of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs sent officers into Texas as their agents unauthorized by law.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The gentleman states that this is not a deficiency—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can only proceed by the unanimous consent of the committee, as the debate is exhausted. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. Evans.]

The question was then taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to insert fifteen. I merely wish to state what will facilitate this matter. I will explain to the gentleman, in the first place, that this is no deficiency, and is not in accordance with any law, but only by recommendation of the Indian bureau as for the best interest of the Government, and thus sustained by annual appropriation. It is unfortunate that we cannot extend the intercourse laws over the State of Texas without her consent. The suggestion made by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is, that this matter can be brought in under the general appropriation bill for the Indian service. I am not informed as to the relevancy that this amendment would have to any existing proposition contained in the regular appropriation bill, and therefore I cannot speak of the advisability of such a course; but as to the matter of referring it to the Committee on Indian Affairs, I must say that I do not feel that there is any security in the world that we could, through this House, give any vitality to any bill outside of a general appropriation bill. Such is the unfortunate character of the legislation of this House, and ever has been since I was first connected with it. I will say to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] I have no doubt in the world that his amendment is excellent, and it would be well if he adjudged it possible to defer it for the general bill, when, if it shall be admissible at all, I have no doubt he will be able to carry it. I shall support his amendment myself, if none is offered which I may think still better; or, if he will make his proposition embrace an authority to the Government to treat with the Texas Indians for removing them altogether, I will so vote still more cheerfully.

Mr. BROOKS. But can I get it upon a point of order? The Chairman will rule me out of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I will have to leave the gentleman to exercise his own best judgment about it, and I will support him in the movement, let him present it when he may.

Mr. FITCH. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] but do not intend to consume any of my five minutes in speaking against it. The effect of my amendment does not appear to be understood; I so infer, at least, from the interrogatories propounded to me. I am asked why I do not so word it as to provide peremptorily for the removal of the Indians. Because we recognize them as a nation with whom we must treat. A treaty having been made as provided for by the amendment, that treaty must be ratified by the Senate before it can go into operation. I propose to treat with them, and not with the State of Texas. I wish again, for one moment, to call the attention of the committee to the enormous amount of claims Texas has presented for depredations committed by these same Indians. As I remarked a short time before, the Indians are now placed beyond our jurisdiction. We cannot control them. Whatever our disposition may be so to do, Texas will not permit it. We propose to place them where we can control them. Then we can prevent these claims from being presented, because we can prevent depredations being committed by the Indians. If the estimate of the number of Indians in Texas, made by the quartermaster's department, is correct, the amount of depredation claims already presented to the Committee on Indian Affairs, is some $4,000 or $5,000 for each Indian warrior. Each warrior has damaged Texas to that amount. It is not to be presumed that these claims will all be allowed, but it is not probable we can escape allowing some of them. If the Indians are inclined to cultivate the soil they cannot do it, because their title to it is not recognized by Texas. Their title is not, in her estimation, as good as that of the preëmptor who walks in and takes the very land to which the Indians may have given additional value by partial cultivation. They are compelled then to remove from year to year, or to commit violence upon those who trespass upon what they doubtless honestly think to be their rights. Give them land which they may not only call their own, but which shall be their own, and they will be much more likely than now to abandon their roving and predatory habits, at least it will not be half so difficult to control them, as we find it today. I trust, therefore, that my amendment will be adopted. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HOWARD] says, "if I was in earnest;" as if I was not! I offered the amendment in good faith, and hope the opposition of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will be unheeded by the committee. If the amendment is out of order—and to that point alone was directed the argument of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and that of another member of this committee, the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. HIBBARD]—it would be equally out of order in any other bill emanating from the Committee of Ways and Means, or any other standing committee. It is no more out of order than several provisions which the Committee of Ways and Means have themselves inserted in the bill; and when they can make no other opposition to it than a point of order, they admit that its merit cannot be successfully controverted. So far from being out of order, this bill and this provision is the place for it. Elsewhere no action even of the Committee on Indian Affairs, or other standing committees, could prevent it from being left for one or two sessions among unfinished business, as those conversant with such matters here well know. Ingrafted upon this bill, the amendment will have that vitality which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BROOKS] wishes for his; while, as a separate bill, experience here teaches us its merit, however great it may be, cannot galvanize sufficient activity into it to insure its early passage.

The question was then taken upon Mr. JOHNSON'S amendment, and it was rejected.

The question then recurred upon Mr. FITCH'S amendment.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move to strike out $25,000, so as to adopt the view of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. FITCH,] leaving the amount to stand at $15,000. I do not perceive any necessity for increasing the appropriation for the purpose of opening a negotiation.

Mr. FITCH. I object to that. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] will at once perceive, if there is a deficiency now of $15,000 for the purpose asked for in the original provision, of course he leaves nothing to carry on the negotiation; but if, under the amendment I have offered, these negotiations have commenced, we must appropriate a sum for that purpose now under the head of deficiency, during another year.

Mr. MARSHALL. The proposition to provide for the salaries or compensations of these special agents in Texas, and make presents to the Indians, is $15,000. The gentleman proposes to introduce in that an amendment to negotiate with the Indians for their removal, but on account of the introduction of that proposition to increase the appropriation by $10,000, that appropriation of $25,000 can be applied by the Department to the procurement of presents, as well as to the negotiation. I do not suppose that the Indians can be removed out of Texas for either $15,000 or $25,000, and I do not see the necessity of any money to open the negotiation with them. The agents are there, and they are being paid. Their business is with the Indians.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman is not aware of the fact that these Indians have always to be supported, while you are making a treaty with them. The history of the whole period of the Government, shows that you cannot make a treaty with the Indians without money.

The question was then taken upon Mr. MARSHALL'S amendment, and it was rejected.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. FITCH,

Mr. FITCH demanded tellers, which were ordered.

The question was then taken, (Messrs. FITCH and HOUTSON acting as tellers,) and resulted—ayes 76, noes 12. No quorum voting.

Mr. HENN moved that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order. If there be no objection, there will be a recount.

There being no objection, the tellers resumed their places, and the question being again put, it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 79, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM moved to strike out the following clause of the bill:

"For continuing the collection, and for publishing the statistics and other information authorized by the act of 3d March, 1847, and subsequent acts, $17,000."

Mr. D. said: I move to strike out that provision because I think it is a most wrongful expenditure of the public money. There has been already expended for the purpose for which this appropriation is asked—in 1847 $5,000, in 1849 $5,000, in 1850 $10,000, in 1851 $15,300, and they now ask for $17,000 more. They have but just begun the work. It is another of those publications that are fastened on Congress, and that go on increasing year after year, like the Archives and various other works that have been published here. As an evidence of this, the committee will recollect that the gentleman from Arkansas, but a little while ago, offered an amendment to reprint the first volume of this very work, for distribution to the new members of this Congress. Any gentleman who examines the work must say that it does not contain that kind of information that ought to be procured and published at the public expense, however valuable it may be as a literary work. I have mentioned the amount which has been already expended on this first volume, and the expense of a publication of this sort goes on increasing year after year, in a sort of arithmetical progression. The first volume of this work was distributed to the members of the last Congress, and now an estimate has been sent in, and an amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas, to go back and reprint that volume for the new members of the present Congress. Then, again, you will give the second volume, which will be distributed during this Congress to all the members of the last Congress who are not now here, because they have got the first volume and must have a complete set, and so it will go on increasing year after year. This is another of those speculations which are becoming so common in this country.

We shall go on publishing books, until our Government is turned into an immense book concern. Why, sir, you can go into half the book stores in the country, and buy all the information usually contained in these works for yourselves, for one fourth the cost of them to the Government. In my opinion, if I may be allowed to quote an old adage, "the play will not pay for the candles." It is not only a most ridiculous thing, but a most willful and wicked perversion of the power of this Government; to publish at the public expense such works as this, for a limited distribution, as all such distributions must be, if for distribution at all.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The honorable gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DUNHAM,] a member of the Committee of Ways and Means—the committee who have reported this provision for the continuation of the collection of this statistical information, that it may be preserved and given to the world—now moves to strike it out.

A Voice. He opposed it in the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then he preserves his consistency by opposing here what he opposed there. Did the gentleman oppose it during the last Congress?

Mr. DUNHAM. Most certainly, I did.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, I suppose the gentleman took his book, as a matter of course.

Mr. DUNHAM. To be sure I did.

Mr. JOHNSON. I took one, and I took it in obedience to the policy adopted by the act of 1847, that provided for the collection and publication of the history and statistics of this peculiar race, and the distribution of them. The object is to preserve them, and hand them down to posterity. Sir, these works will furnish facts throughout ages to come, when not only shall we be gone and forgotten, but when, perhaps, there will be no remembrance that there ever was such a Congress as the Thirty-second. I am opposed to abandoning that policy which was adopted, after mature consideration, by the Congress of 1847, and that was to collect all the information that could be obtained in regard to the Indian races inhabiting this continent, or those parts of it which belonged to, or have since been acquired by the United States. I am opposed to striking out this clause, because it would be an abandonment of that policy. Sir, we owe it as a debt to our native land—

Mr. TUCK, (interrupting.) I wish to inquire of the gentleman if this appropriation is to pay for expenses already incurred under the act of 1847, or for expenses to be incurred in the future?

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman must ask that question of the Committee of Ways and Means. I will thank him not to interrupt me again with questions irrelevant to the train of remarks which I am indulging in. I am upon quite a different branch of the question.

I was saying that there is a debt that this Government owes to the land in which we live—a debt which if it has not been discharged by every nation throughout the world that has existed before us, ought to have been, and has been in some measure, by almost every nation of which we have any knowledge. Sir, there is no subject whatever connected with our history, that will in future years be one of deeper or more thrilling interest than this one relating to the aborigines of our country. They are now fast disappearing from the continent. If we were to abandon the policy, of collecting these statistics and this information, for twenty-five years, half the means of giving it to our posterity and to the world would be lost, and lost forever. Now is the time, and the only time, at which we can prosecute the work.

The only question, then, can be as to its propriety; and it seems to me, that in that point of view, it addresses itself to each one of us, and that the heart of every man here should respond to it. We should do something to perpetuate the history of our own country, from the time we ourselves came into possession of it.

Sir, I am opposed to striking out the clause, notwithstanding what may be said about making this Government a "book-making concern." It rises above and goes beyond any such considerations. It is a just, honorable, and creditable appropriation of the public money; and it is not an extravagant one; when we consider that this book is sought after, not only by the people of the United States in every direction, but also by foreign governments, as containing matter deeply interesting, and about which the greatest curiosity is felt. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Indiana will not prevail, but that we shall allow these investigations to go on until the work is concluded.

Mr. DUNHAM. I should like to ask the gentleman if he has any information when the work will be concluded? and whether it will be completed within the next twenty years?

Mr. JOHNSON. I can answer that question.

The CHAIRMAN. Further discussion is not in order.

Mr. TUCK moved to amend the clause proposed to be stricken out, by reducing the amount to $16,000.

Mr. T. said: Had the gentleman from Arkansas answered my inquiry with his usual courtesy—

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not intend to be discourteous. I will answer the gentleman's question now, if he will tell me what it is.

Mr. TUCK. I say, had the gentleman from Arkansas answered my question with his usual courtesy, I should probably have refrained from making this proposition of amendment.

I find this fact, which I deem it important that we should know in voting on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, that this appropriation of $17,000 is to meet the payment of expenses that have already been incurred, and to pay for printing which is now going on, and which was authorized by the act of 1847.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will answer the gentleman that, so far as I am concerned, finding that this item was one which the Committee of Ways and Means had adopted, I did not investigate it, and therefore could not answer his question. The Committee of Ways and Means, however, certainly must be able to answer it. It is their business to do it.

Mr. DUNHAM. I can inform the gentleman from New Hampshire that the item which I propose to strike out is for the collection of further statistics. The next clause is for arrearages in the work already done.

Mr. HOUSTON. I regret that my friend from Arkansas, having investigated everything else with his usual acuteness, has omitted this item. The $17,000 in this clause, is for continuing the collection of information intended for the volume partly matured and in hand.

Mr. DUNHAM. But not published.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is not published. The second item is for arrearages in the publication of the work.

Mr. TUCK. It was my understanding that this proposition was to pay for expenses already properly incurred, under the act of 1847.

Mr. DUNHAM. Not at all.

Mr. TUCK. The gentleman thinks he understands it, but he is mistaken. These expenses have been regularly and legally incurred, and the publication is now going on. This is strictly a deficiency, which we are bound by law to pay.

Mr. VENABLE said: Mr. Chairman, not quite three hundred years since the white man first placed his foot upon this continent. Those then in possession have perished and passed away before his aggressive march, like the snow before the rays of the sun. The memorials of a race, manly, fierce, and warlike, are fast fading away, and tradition becoming diluted with fabulous narrative, is losing all claim to credibility. In this state of things, our Government, some years since, directed by law, the collection of the remnants of those memorials; they made a praiseworthy effort to snatch from oblivion that which was now certain, and embody it in a work which should have for the evidence of its authenticity, the seal of the department to which it was confided. To perform it, one was selected whose personal knowledge of the peculiarities and the history of the Indian race was combined with high literary attainments, and yet higher moral qualifications. A life spent in association with, and a profound sympathy for, the aborigines, qualified him to perform the task in a manner which commends his work to the confidence and admiration of the world; and by it the name of Henry Schoolcraft will descend to posterity, canonized as the friend and historian of a most interesting people, now rapidly passing away. I said it was a praiseworthy effort on the part of our Government to have some mark of their veneration for science and true history, which would endure, as was well said by my friend from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] when, most probably, we, as individuals, would be forgotten. It will be honorable to this Congress to direct the continuation of this philanthropic, as well as literary enterprise. I cannot be insensible to the obligation which rests upon us to preserve from utter oblivion the memorials of those whose possessions we have forcibly seized, to redeem ourselves from the just imputations of being more barbarous than the savages to whose domains we have succeeded. The war-whoop has been exchanged for the lamentations of tribes driven from the homes and the graves of their ancestors. No ruined cities, no dilapidated temples, no records, even in hieroglyphics, remain to preserve the memory or the character of their institutions; and it would be treason against the laws of literature, science, and benevolence, to pause before the accomplishment of this work. I feel it, sir, to be a sacred duty to communicate our portion to the learning of the world, to vindicate the truth of history by relieving it from the shadows of tradition and fable. I have heretofore opposed the large book-making enterprises of promiscuous works, upon which our Government has entered, and shall continue to do so; but I will not commence by ousting one of the most praiseworthy and valuable which has ever engaged our attention. I would vote to purchase that fine picture now exhibiting in the rotunda, because it, with lifelike vigor, portrays one of the most remarkable incidents in our revolutionary history. It is a suitable companion to those now filling the niches. It represents Washington crossing the icy Delaware, in the gloomiest epoch of our struggle; a bold manœuvre, second only to the passage of the Alps by Hannibal and Napoleon; made in the presence of a superior force, and, by its success, giving hope to a desponding people, and forming the turning-point in our revolutionary history. Such memorials are precious as well as instructive. We look from canvas to canvas, and we see the warrior, the statesman, and the sage, and read the whole history of the Revolution in the work of the artist. To preserve the memorials of the Indian race, to become familiar with their present history, will give us sympathy for their wrongs, and awake a sense of justice to those who remain—arrest a policy which, in a few generations, must utterly destroy them, and cause us, as a Government and a people, to redeem the errors of the past by a system of just policy in the future.

I cannot adopt a policy which so much resembles that of China and Japan; which regards the rest of the world as outside barbarians, and repudiates all claims upon ourselves for an equal contribution to these subjects of scientific pursuits, the evidences of which are to be found in our own archives.

Mr. STANLEY. My colleague will pardon me for asking this question: How are we to have the goodness of our hearts perpetuated when our memories are forgotten?

Mr. VENABLE. The criticism of my colleague is both profound and striking, and I doubt not will secure to him lasting renown.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise, sir, in order to make an amendment. I propose to add $50 to the appropriation, and I am very happy to find myself concurring entirely with the views of my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. VENABLE.] I agree, sir, in his view of the importance of this appropriation, and in its perfect propriety in this appropriation bill. I was in earnest when assenting to the propriety of purchasing the beautiful picture that is now to be seen in the rotunda, illustrating one of the most important events in our revolutionary history; and it was with perfect sincerity that I proposed to my friend from Alabama to supply that deficiency in our gallery of paintings, and to put in an appropriation for that purpose. Of course, sir, I would not venture to make such a proposition myself.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to know what the cost of that would be.

Mr. JONES. Is this discussion as to procuring pictures, in order?

Mr. STANTON. I will confine myself to the question of books. My time is not out yet; and, in reference to books, I was very much of the same opinion as my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. VENABLE.] In reference to the celebrated Patent Office report, I was sorry, sir, to hear the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DUNHAM,] I believe it was, say that this was a wicked perversion of the powers of the Government; but I do think, sir, he will consider on reflection that that was an extravagant declaration, unsustained by any conduct of the Government with which I am acquainted. It has been supposed by some that this Patent Office report is of but little value; but I may say that I have found gentlemen possessing the highest degree of intelligence and education who have expressed to me their opinion and belief that this Patent Office report is the most valuable thing ever received from this Government. That is the general opinion entertained by intelligent men in my district. I have been apprised of its importance, and I think that my honorable friend from North Carolina will find among his constituents a similar opinion. But, sir, his opinion may be correct and mine may be incorrect; but in regard to this picture, which is the subject of the amendment which I have suggested, I think there ought to be but one opinion. But, sir, if there be no gentleman here who wishes to oppose the amendment I have offered, I will, with the permission of the House, withdraw it, satisfied as I am that this appropriation for the books is safe, and that this House, if it will not sanction the appropriation for the picture, will at least leave in the appropriation for the books.

Mr. STANTON, by consent of the committee, withdrew his amendment to the amendment; and Mr. TUCK, by unanimous consent, also withdrew his amendment.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. Fitch to strike out the clause; and it was disagreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I wish to offer the following amendment, which, I think, is germane to the question:

For printing, binding, &c., six hundred copies of the first volume of the foregoing work, for distribution among new members, $6,575.

I find, sir, that the item explains itself tolerably well, and I find that it raises the question of distribution, and as to what disposition shall be made of them. The Librarian is bound to preserve these books; but libraries are not always safe. Scatter them, scatter them, if you would preserve them. I do not think that a better method can be adopted than distribution. If any gentleman should not wish to keep them himself, he can dispose of them where he pleases, and the books will be preserved, and the history they contain will be preserved. I do not receive any benefit from this myself, for I have received the first number, and I shall vote to give the new members this number, and not confine them to the second volume, and a broken set. Unless this amendment is adopted, they will not get the first volume. Now, sir, to give them the second volume, and not the first, does not seem to be consistent with good sense, and so far as I am concerned, I have no hesitation in voting for a sufficiency, that the Department may have them in hand, for distribution to all future members until the work is concluded.

Mr. EWING. I wish the gentleman to explain the statement he made. Is it that those members who are in this Congress will get the second volume if this amendment passes?

Mr. JOHNSON. The plan of distribution of the first volume, under the law of 1847, was left at the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The plan adopted was to embrace the members of both Houses of Congress, heads of Departments, and the foreign ministers that were here, and those new members who are here, were necessarily embraced in that system of distribution, and they will receive the second volume only for want of enough of the first to supply them. Sixty or seventy volumes only are now left on hand.

This work will extend to five volumes, and it will complete the collection of the entirety of the statistics and of the history of the various tribes. If you now adopt this amendment, it provides for six hundred copies, which will be amply sufficient to keep on the set of books as they progress in their issue. It will take about a hundred, I think, for this occasion; and the residue will lay over until the next successive numbers are issued and distributed.

Mr. EWING. Will the gentleman explain the difference between the proportion here and that which has reference to the distribution of books voted heretofore?

Mr. JOHNSON. This is a distinct matter from the books voted heretofore.

Mr. EWING. The proposition is only intended to give new members the first volume.

Mr. JOHNSON. The second volume they get on their coming here, and if the appropriation is not passed, the first volume they will never receive.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I think the House ought to understand this proposition before they adopt it. I am aware that I am addressing a body of men, a great majority of whom are new members, and of course interested; still I appeal to their sense of justice and propriety to say whether they are willing now to commence a system which, if continued, will work so gross injustice as will this if the amendment of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] prevails.

Those members who were here the last Congress, have received the first volume; and those who are not returned, receive only that volume—they do not receive the entire series. Those who come to the second Congress, get two volumes, and so on to the end of the course. If this amendment prevails, you will give to the members who come here for the first time at the close of publication the whole series. By this arrangement you give to one man $50 or $100 worth of books, while you give to another only one single volume. Is this just and equal? What good is to be done by it? How is the public interest to be advanced?

But there is another view of this matter. If this system is to be adopted, let it be done by a bill introduced for that purpose, and not by way of amendment to a deficiency bill. If you intend to carry out the system, instead of printing six hundred of the first volume, you should print six thousand copies, or as many as may be needed.

Mr. SMART. I desire to ask the gentleman from Connecticut if he did not receive the first volume of this book?

Mr. CLEVELAND. I did; and I am willing to vote every gentleman upon this floor the volume ordered by this Congress. Then you treat all members alike.

Mr. SMART. Then why object to the amendment?

Mr. CLEVELAND. I did not vote for any of these books in the last Congress; but I received mine, and I shall vote for the new members of this Congress to receive the books which it is customary to vote them. I do not intend to be ungenerous to my brethren upon this floor, who are new members; but I ask gentlemen to look for a moment at what will be the result of the adoption of this system; and, if they are determined to adopt this amendment, to publish six hundred instead of six thousand copies, to distribute among all the new members for the next five, ten, or twelve years. I think we do strict justice to every member, whether new or old, if we give him, while he is in Congress, the volumes which is published by the order of that Congress. If you go beyond that, you do manifest injustice, not only to the country at large, but to those gentlemen who were members of the last Congress, but do not happen to be returned to this. The committee must see that those gentlemen who come here in the Congress in which the fifth, tenth, or the last volume is published, will receive the entire series, as I before remarked, while those who were only here in the last Congress will receive but one.

Mr. PERKINS. We will vote you down, though.

Mr. CLEVELAND. My good friend says they will vote me down. I have no doubt they will; it is for their interest to do so, but I intend my reverend friend shall vote against his conscience if he does. I intend that he shall know what he is voting for, and the injustice of it. I have made these remarks to show this committee that this is a system which ought not to be commenced, and that gross injustice will be done if it is.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will say a few words in explanation of what induced the Committee of Ways and Means to exclude this item.

Mr. FITCH. Is the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means in order?

The CHAIRMAN. He can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. I believe there is a rule of this House which provides that no member of this House shall vote upon a question in which he is personally interested. Now, I want to know whether there will be a quorum left here, if none of the new members are allowed to vote? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. That is a question which the Chair cannot undertake to decide.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to correct an error in the point made by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.] This is not a matter in which the new members are personally interested. The books are furnished to members for the public good. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. STANTON. I was going to say that, upon that principle, gentlemen could not vote for the civil and diplomatic bill, which provides their pay and mileage.

The CHAIRMAN. This conversation is out of order. The Chair repeats that he cannot undertake to decide in relation to the personal interest of gentlemen in this matter.

The question was then taken upon Mr. JOHNSON'S amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I think we have done business enough for one day. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call for tellers upon the motion. We shall never get through this bill if we go on at this rate.

Mr. CLEVELAND. If the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is anxious to go on, I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to get on far enough, so that we can finish the bill to-morrow, and not consume both days, which should be devoted to private business.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Why, we shall not get through it in a week.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. HOUSTON. Upon that motion I ask for tellers.

The tellers were ordered; and Messrs. GORMAN and BRECKINRIDGE were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 31.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman [Mr. STUART] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 207, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. ORR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion, and allow us to take up and refer the bills upon the Speaker's table. It will take but a few minutes.

Several MEMBERS objected.

The question was then put, and carried in the affirmative; and

The House adjourned till twelve o'clock to-morrow.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. FLORENCE gave notice of his intention on to-morrow, or upon some subsequent day, to ask leave to introduce a bill to prescribe by law, or regulation, the number, character, and position, of signal lights to be borne by steamers and vessels, between sunset and sunrise, on the waters of the United States.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. HENN: The petition of James Sanderson and 108 others, citizens of Iowa, asking for the establishment of a mail route from Kanawha to Sargent's Bluffs.

Also, the petition of Admiral B. Miller, deputy marshal of Marion, Warren, and Madison counties, Iowa, asking additional compensation for taking the Seventh Census.

By Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut: The petition of William S. Pomeroy and others, citizens of Bridgeport, for the extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. DOTY: The petition of C. Billingshurst, Clark Lawton, and 60 other citizens of Wisconsin, for a post route from Theresa, by Mayville, Horikon, Juneau, Oak Grove, and Lowell, to Columbus.

Also, the petition of Stephen Jones and other citizens of Lowell, for the same route.

By Mr. CHURCHWELL: The memorial from the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee to the Congress of the United States, praying for the establishment of a regular mail line on the Western rivers.

By Mr. HUNTER: The petition of John Russell and 69 other citizens of Ohio, in favor of the Wheeling Bridge.

Also, the petition of Gideon Davis and 112 other citizens of Ohio, in favor of the Wheeling Bridge.

Also, the petition of H. B. Rice and 112 other citizens of Ohio, in favor of the Wheeling Bridge.

Also, the petition of John T. Watson and 182 other citizens, in favor of the Wheeling Bridge.

By Mr. FULLER, of Maine: The remonstrance of Samuel W. Pope and others, of East Machias, against the renewal or further extension by Congress of the patent granted to Austin and Zebulon Parker for a reaction water-wheel.

By Mr. GAYLORD: Three petitions, signed by 122 citizens of Morgan county, Ohio, asking a grant of 100,000 acres of unsold public lands within said State, to aid in the construction of a certain plank or McAdams road.

By Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio: The petition of D. P. Egbert and E. Bailey, assistant marshals of Warren county, Ohio, asking additional compensation for services in taking the census.

Also, the petition of J. B. Thomas and others, assistant marshals of Clinton county, Ohio, for the same.

Also, the petition of A. D. Kurn and others, assistant marshals of Butler county, Ohio, for the same.

Also, the petition of H. Vauandall and 52 others, citizens of Preble county, Ohio, against an extension of the patent of the Woodworth planing machine.

Also, the petition of Damon Jones and 34 others, citizens of Warren county, Ohio, against an extension of the patent of the Woodworth planing machine.

Also, the petition of A. C. Tyler and 57 others, of Butler county, Ohio, asking Congress to adopt such measures as may tend to prevent wars, by securing provisions in treaties for the submission of the matters in dispute between nations to arbitration, &c.

By Mr. BARTLETT: The memorial of James M. Arthur and 51 others, citizens of Barnet, in the county of Caledonia, and State of Vermont, asking Congress to repeal the law authorizing the Postmaster General to contract for the transportation of the mail on the Sabbath.

By Mr. SMART: The remonstrance of John S. Caldwell and others, citizens of Belfast, Maine, against a renewal of Woodworth's patent.

Also, the remonstrance of Augustus Perry and others, citizens of Belfast, Maine, against the renewal of patent to Austin and Zebulon Parker for alleged improvements of reaction water-wheels.

By Mr. WELLS: The petition of 86 citizens of Schenectady, New York, praying that the bill giving further remedies to patentees may become a law.

By Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York: Six several petitions of citizens of the State of New York, praying that Whitehall be declared a port of entry.

Also, a remonstrance of citizens of Rensselaer county, against the extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. McNAIR: The petition of the assistant marshals of the eastern district of Pennsylvania, praying additional compensation for taking the Seventh Census.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, in favor of the improvements of the Delaware river.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, relative to Smith O'Brien and his associates in exile.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, in reference to the establishment of a navy-yard, depot, and dry-dock, on the lake frontier.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 26, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Postmaster General, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, copies of all contracts originally made, and at present existing, for the transportation of the mails by steam-ships between New York and California, and other information in relation thereto; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

SPECIAL ORDER.

On the motion of Mr. BADGER, the execution of the special order, setting apart Friday of each week for the consideration of private bills, was postponed until one o'clock.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of Mary Colcord, praying a pension in consideration of the services of her father, Bradstreet Wiggins, during the revolutionary war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

FLORIDA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to present a memorial of the Hon. John L. Crawford, a member of the Florida Legislature, upon the subject of the contested seat of a Senator from Florida. In this memorial, he recites the practice of the Florida Legislature, and the understanding on which the election was had. It is addressed to the President of the Senate, and I ask that it be referred to the special committee having the subject in charge. At the same time, I ask leave to present twenty other similar memorials on the same subject, which I ask may be referred to the special committee.

They were so referred.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill to incorporate the Sisters of Visitation in the District of Columbia, reported it back with an amendment.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which was referred the petition of John Moore White, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of the children and executrix of William Jones, praying compensation for the services of their father, during the revolutionary war, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of the heirs of James Bell, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill to amend an act, entitled, "An act for the relief of the heirs of James Bell, deceased," which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of the children and heirs of Uriah Jones, a soldier in the revolutionary war, praying a pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition of John Duff, jr., for himself and his late partner, Joseph Gonder, jr., submitted an adverse report.

On motion by Mr. BRODHEAD, it was Ordered, That it be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of William Davis, asking remuneration for loss of property, while in the naval service of the United States, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of Lydia Ann Mills, praying a pension, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of Z. F. Johnston, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. GWIN. When the resolution offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD] was under consideration the other day, I stated that a confidential letter had been written by Commodore

Jones to the Secretary of the Navy, and had been sent by the Secretary to the court-martial that tried Commodore Jones. I have since ascertained that such was not the state of the case. A confidential letter was placed in the hands of the judge-advocate, to assist him in making up the charges and specifications against Commodore Jones, but it was never used. It never went before the court-martial, nor was it known to any member of the court. Its publication originated in a resolution offered by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MASON], calling for the proceedings of the court-martial and the correspondence; otherwise it would never have been published.

SEEDS FOR THE PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. SOULE asked and obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution to provide for the production of seeds required for distribution at the Patent Office; which was read and passed to the second reading.

The resolution appropriates $1,000 for the object contemplated.

Mr. S. The Senate will perceive that there is a necessity for acting at once upon this resolution. The object of the appropriation is to enable the agricultural department to purchase and produce such seeds as may be necessary for the use of that department. Unless we now do it, it will be too late hereafter. I therefore throw myself upon the indulgence of the Senate, and ask that the resolution may have its second reading and be considered at once.

Mr. MASON. I regret very sincerely that I am compelled to differ from the Senator from Louisiana as to the propriety of passing this resolution; but I have no objection to putting it on its passage now, if it is desired by him. I shall, however, be obliged to vote against it.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator object to the second reading of the resolution?

Mr. MASON. I think, perhaps, we had better not pass it to-day, and therefore I object.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Louisiana, that perhaps it would be proper to have his resolution referred.

Mr. SOULE. Then I ask that it be read a second time now, for the purpose of being referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. ADAMS. I object.

The resolution therefore was not read a second time.

JUDGES OF DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. BRADBURY. There is upon the table a bill amendatory of the act entitled "An act to provide for holding the courts of the United States in case of the sickness or other disability of the judges of the district courts," which came from the House with an amendment. When it came from the House the other day, I desired that it should be laid over, for the purpose of preparing an amendment, extending similar relief to the judges of this district; but I understand that it is very important that the bill should be passed immediately, and that delay might be created by amending the bill. I will not, therefore, offer that amendment, but I hope that the bill will now be taken up, and the amendment of the House be concurred in.

The bill was taken up, and the amendment of the House, which was to add these words, "but no such district judge shall hear appeals from the district courts," was concurred in.

PRESIDENT'S CLERK.

Mr. BADGER. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the clerk to the President of the Senate be continued during the present Congress, and be paid the same per diem compensation as heretofore allowed him.

I will merely mention, in explanation, that the resolution under which the clerk was employed expired at the commencement of this session, and it is questionable whether the gentleman acting in this capacity is entitled to compensation for this session or not.

The resolution was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being offered, it was read a third time, and passed.

MESSENGERS, ETC., OF THE SENATE.

Mr. MANGUM submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be instructed to inquire into the number of messengers, pages, folders, and laborers necessary for the service of the Senate, and the compensation proper to be allowed to each; also, the number of horses and wagons, and the hire that ought to be allowed therefor; and that said committee report by resolution or otherwise.

"WASHINGTON CROSSING THE DELAWARE."

Mr. HALE. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings be instructed to inquire into the propriety of purchasing the great national painting of "Washington crossing the Delaware," and causing the same to be placed in the mansion of the President of the United States.

As the resolution is one of inquiry, I ask that it may be considered now.

Mr. RHETT. I object.

Mr. BADGER. I would suggest to the Senator from South Carolina, that the resolution is merely one of inquiry.

Mr. RHETT. Then I withdraw the objection, as I have no objection to the inquiry.

Mr. ADAMS. I object to a proposition leading to such a large expenditure of money.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN OHIO.

The engrossed bill to divide the State of Ohio into two judicial districts, and to provide for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States therein, was read a third time and passed.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi river.

PURLOINING OF GOVERNMENT PAPERS.

A message was received from the President of the United States by Mr. M. P. Fillmore, his Secretary which represents, that at the close of the commission to adjudicate upon the claims of citizens of the United States, under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the President directed a list to be made of papers which had been presented to that commission; and, pursuant to the act of Congress, approved 3d March, 1849, the papers themselves to be carefully arranged and deposited for safe keeping in the Department of State. He deemed all this necessary, as well for the interest of the claimants as to secure the Government against fraudulent claims which might be preferred hereafter. A few days since he was surprised to learn that some of these papers had been fraudulently abstracted by one of the claimants, and upon the case being made known to him by the Secretary of State, he referred it to the Attorney General, for the purpose of ascertaining what punishment could be inflicted upon the person who had been guilty of the offence. He now communicates to the two Houses of Congress the opinion of the Attorney General, and that of the attorney of the United States for this district, by which it will be perceived that it is doubtful whether there is any law for punishing the very grave offence of fraudulently abstracting or mutilating the papers and public documents in the several departments of this Government. It appears to the President that the protection of the public records and papers requires that such acts should be made penal, and a suitable punishment inflicted upon the offender; and he therefore brings the subject to the consideration of Congress, to enable it to act upon it, should Congress concur with him in this opinion.

On motion, the communication was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

VIRGINIA LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The hour of one has not yet arrived, and I wish to ask a favor of the Senate, to take up this morning and dispose of a bill which I reported very early in the session; which I regard in all its practical effects as a private bill. It proposes to compensate the holders of certain military lands who have lost their claims in the State of Kentucky, west of the Tennessee river, by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. The bill being private in its effect, although considered by the Chair as a public measure, cannot get a hearing unless it comes up on private-bill day; and I wish to ask the Senate to take it up now, and give me an opportunity of explaining it very briefly. It depends entirely on a legal question, and can be compressed within a nut-shell. I am sure that it will take but little of the time of the Senate; and we shall, perhaps, be able to get through with it within the fifteen minutes that are left before the hour of one o'clock arrives.

Mr. PRATT. If it is the understanding on the part of the Senator from Kentucky, that his bill is to be postponed, if not disposed of when the hour arrives at which private bills come up, I will interpose no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree to that understanding.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill to provide for the unpaid claims of the officers and soldiers of the Virginia State and Continental lines in the revolutionary army.

It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to appoint a commissioner, to ascertain and report to him the number of tracts of land, and the parts of tracts, and the quantities of acres, according to the original survey, and the names of the persons to whom patents stood in the State of Kentucky, below or on the west side of the Tennessee river, granted for military services in the revolutionary war, which have been covered by, or included within, paramount claims, founded upon Virginia treasury warrants. Upon the report of the commissioner, and upon the Secretary of the Interior being satisfied with its correctness, it provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall issue scrip in behalf of the owners and proprietors of the military tracts of land included within the paramount treasury warrants grants, at the rate of $1 25 per acre, for each acre of military tract covered by paramount treasury warrant grants; which scrip shall be receivable in payment for any lands subject to sale by private entry owned by the United States, and shall be assignable by indorsement, attested by two witnesses. Where there are more persons than one interested in the same scrip, the Secretary is authorized to issue to each scrip for his or her portion; and where infants or femmes covert shall be entitled to any scrip, the guardian of the infant, and the husband of the femme shall receive and dispose of the same.

The second section provides that the commissioner shall be paid at the rate of five dollars per day for his services, and shall be allowed a reasonable sum for chain-carriers; and that to reimburse the United States for the sums so expended, the parties receiving scrip shall pay twenty-five cents on each hundred acres of land.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the members of the Senate will be kind enough to hear me, I will state the historical facts of the case. In 1783 the Legislature of Virginia set apart the country west of the Tennessee river to satisfy the bounties promised to her officers and soldiers during the revolutionary war. In 1779, Virginia passed a law selling her vacant domain, with certain reservations, in which she stated that her object was to raise funds to carry on the American Revolution. In that act she reserved the country west and south of Green river, now in the State of Kentucky, to pay the bounties promised to her officers and soldiers. Subsequent to that time, in running the line between Carolina and Virginia, it was found that the line of Carolina run further north than was anticipated. And then, in 1783, as I have remarked, Virginia, reciting the fact that the Carolina line run further north than was anticipated, gave the country west of the Tennessee river to the officers and soldiers. In the act of 1779, selling her vacant domain to raise funds to carry on the Revolution, she said that no land claimed by the Cherokee Indians should be subject to appropriation under that law. I wish the Senate to recollect these facts, for they are the starting point; and after them the whole case is in a nut-shell.

After the passage of the law of 1783, the officers and soldiers, through certain superintending officers that were sent out to secure their lands by location, entered the country west of the Tennessee river to satisfy their bounties. Prior to that entry, which was made in 1784, George Rogers Clarke, and some other individuals owning bounties obtained under the act of 1779, called treasury warrants, located about one hundred thousand acres of land in the country west of the Tennessee river; and they said it was subject to appropriation by these warrants, because it was not Cherokee land, but was Choctaw land. They, therefore, satisfied their treasury warrant claims prior to 1784, by these lands. The country was purchased from the Indians in 1818, by General Jackson. After that, Kentucky allowed the surveys to be carried into grant; and when they were carried into grant, a controversy came up between the military claims and the treasury warrant claims. General Porterfield, of Virginia, brought a suit to recover from the heirs of George Rogers Clarke the city of Paducah, now worth $1,000,000 or $2,000,000—there is no telling the value of it. The controversy was continued for years, until at length the Supreme Court of the United States determined that this country west of the Tennessee river was not Cherokee country, and therefore was not saved from appropriation under the act of 1779, and decided the controversy against Porterfield's heirs, and in favor of the heirs of George Rogers Clarke. Thus, all the military lands located within the survey of George Rogers Clarke, amounting to some seventy or eighty thousand acres, were swept by the board, and the officers and soldiers lost everything under the decision rendered by the Supreme Court some five or six years ago. The controversy turned upon the question, whether the land was or was not Cherokee land. The officers and soldiers contended from the beginning that it was a Cherokee claim, and saved from appropriation by the act of 1779, because it was Cherokee land. The heirs of George Rogers Clarke proved that it was Choctaw land, and thereby gained the suit.

Now, the question is, whether when these individuals have lost their military warrants by this decision, depending upon a mistake made by them as to whether the land was Choctaw or Cherokee, as far back as 1783 or 1784, they shall bear the loss and receive no compensation; or whether Congress, holding the lands which Virginia has surrendered, will compensate those who, by the decision of the Supreme Court, have lost their lands? It is a controversy in which I have no interest, in behalf of my constituents, equal to the interest that is felt in the older States. Since I have been a member of Congress, a great many persons have made themselves known as claimants, living in Massachusetts. Virginia is much more deeply interested than Kentucky. I have received memorials from the heirs of many distinguished officers and soldiers. I would mention that the heirs of General Morgan, among others; the heirs of General Gibson, and of Mr. Pickering, of Massachusetts, claim a portion of these lands. These have all lost their titles, because there was a mistake made in regard to the Indian title to the country, as far back as 1783 or 1784. The question for Congress now to decide is, whether they will throw the loss on these individuals, because at that early period they were mistaken in point of fact in regard to the nature of an Indian claim?

It is historical with us in Kentucky, that the whole of the western part of the State was bought by Richard Henderson, at an early period, from the Cherokee Indians; and it was believed by us to be Cherokee land, from the time of that purchase by Henderson down to the time of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

This is the whole case; and I hope that I have explained it sufficiently to enable the bill to pass within the few minutes yet remaining before the hour for private bills arrives. I wish merely to add, that the committee which investigated the subject, were unanimous in regard to the bill now before the Senate. There were claims of the State of Virginia for land warrants outstanding, which had produced a great deal of discussion heretofore, both in committees and in Congress; but that subject is not included in the present bill.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Kentucky, whether he proposes to authorize these individuals to locate anew, or to pay them in money?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The bill is to allow them to take scrip, by which they enter lands of the United States subject to private entry. They only take as much scrip as will give them acre for acre.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

PRIVATE BILLS.

The bill for the relief of Thomas H. Leggett, and the bill for the relief of Ira Day, of Vermont, coming up in order for consideration, were passed over informally.

INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. MASON. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact, that on Friday last, in calling over the Calendar, the Chair passed over Senate bill 39, "A bill to authorize the payment of invalid pensions in certain cases," under the impression, I presume, that it was not of a private character. But it is a bill strictly of a private character. It was reported from the Committee on Pensions. I do not know whether the bill which has just been passed over is before it or behind it on the Calendar; but if it is after it, I would ask the Senate to go back to that bill, and take it up as one strictly of a private character. I, therefore, move that it be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT. If it is not a private bill, the Chair cannot, without unanimous consent, receive the motion.

Mr. MASON. I do not know what may be included precisely in the term "private bills," but this is a bill to pay pension claims, four or five in number. They constitute a class of claims in which each claimant has heretofore presented a petition; and the Committee on Pensions have here grouped the four or five together.

Mr. CLARKE. I would remark that that bill has once or twice passed the Senate since I have been here, and has always been considered to be a bill of a private nature altogether.

No objection being made, the bill was taken up for consideration, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole.

It was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, which is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a provision requiring the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the invalid pensioners, officers of the army of the Revolution, therein named, or if dead, to their widows, and if the widows be dead, to the children of said officers, the amount of their several invalid pensions which was deducted or withheld from said officers under the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain surviving officers and soldiers of the Revolution," approved May 15, 1828; namely, to Lieutenant Robert White, the amount of his invalid pension from March 3, 1826, to February 9, 1831; to Captain John Crute, the amount of his invalid pension from March 3, 1826, to May 31, 1830; to Surgeons Mate Mordecai Hale, from March 3, 1826, to December 9, 1832; to Lieutenant William Wallace, from March 3, 1826, to December 31, 1836; to Lieutenant Philip Stuart, from March 3, 1826, to August 14, 1830; to General William Barton, from March 3, 1826, to October 22, 1831; to Ensign Clement Sewell, from March 3, 1826, to January 7, 1829; to Lieutenant James Glentworth, from March 3, 1826, to May 31, 1830.

Mr. CLARKE. The reading of the report made by the committee will place the facts entirely before the Senate, without the necessity of a word being said.

The report was read, as follows:

That by the first section of the act of May 15, 1828, each surviving officer of the continental line of the army of the Revolution was to receive a pension, "to begin on the third day of March, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six, and to continue during his natural life." The second section provided, "that whenever any of said officers has received money of the United States, as a pensioner, since the third day of March, one thousand eight hundred, and twenty-six, aforesaid, the sum so received shall be deducted from what said officer would otherwise be entitled to under the first section of this act; and every pension to which said officer is now entitled shall cease after the passage of this act."

Previous to the passage of the act of May 15, 1828, several officers of the continental line had, in consequence of the wounds they had received in battle, been placed on the pension roll, as invalid pensioners; and having availed themselves of the provisions of that act, their pensions, as invalids, were deducted or withheld from the third day of March, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six.

On the 31st of May, 1831, an act was passed to "amend" that of the 15th of May, 1828, which provides that the latter "shall not be construed to embrace invalid pensioners, and that the pension of invalid soldiers shall not be deducted from the amount receivable by them under the said act."

Since the passage of the amendatory act of May 31, 1831, petitions have been presented to Congress from widows and heirs of officers whose invalid pensions had been deducted and withheld under the operation of the act of the 15th of May, 1828, praying for the payment to them of the amount so deducted or withheld; and the committee find that on the 15th of June, 1836, two acts were approved giving the relief asked; one for the relief of the widow of Samuel Gibbs, and one for the relief of the heirs of Richard Anderson. Another similar act, for the relief of the heirs of Moses White, was approved July 26, 1843; and another on the 5th of January, 1849, for the relief of the heirs of William Evans. The committee have not made a thorough examination, and know not but other acts of the kind may have been passed.

From the legislation in the cases alluded to, it would appear that the Commissioner of Pensions did not place the construction upon the act of May 31, 1831, that was intended, or that the terms of the act were so carelessly drawn that they warranted a construction not intended, and the effects of which it required subsequent legislation to correct. If it were intended by that act that the sums which had been deducted and withheld from invalid pensioners, in consequence of their receiving the benefit of the act of May 15, 1838, should be restored to them by the Commissioner of Pensions, the act was not, perhaps, sufficiently plain and explicit, for he has construed the act to have simply a prospective operation; and hence the subsequent legislation in the individual cases above mentioned.

As early as February 9, 1843, an attempt was made in the other House to enact a law which should embrace all the cases where invalid pensions were withheld under the act of May 15, 1838. A report was then made from the Committee on Invalid Pensions favorable to such a law; and accompanying the report was a statement exhibiting the names of the officers from whom amounts had been withheld, the sum withheld from each, &c. The statement then made contained the names of nine officers, and the total amount withheld is stated to be $9,829 12. Since that period, however, the heirs of two of said officers have obtained the amount withheld, by means of special acts. The chairman having requested a new and correct statement from the Commissioner of Pensions, that officer has furnished the following:

Names.	Rank.	Amount of pay per month.	From what time stopped.	If restored to the roll, from what period.	To what period payable.	Amount withheld.
Robert White.....	Lieutenant.	$15 11 1/2	March 3, 1836.	February 9, 1831.	February 9, 1831.	$624 53
John Critch.....	Captain.	14 73 3/4	do.	May 31, 1830.	May 31, 1830.	750 40
Norville Hale.....	Surgeon's mate.	10 60 1/2	do.	Not restored.	December 31, 1832.	832 60
William Wallace.....	Lieutenant.	9 06 1/2	do.	December 31, 1836.	December 31, 1836.	1,178 08
Philip Stuart.....	Lieutenant.	17 08	do.	Not restored.	August 14, 1830.	907 22
William Barton.....	General.	39 00	do.	Not restored.	October 22, 1831.	2,039 00
Cherment Sewell.....	Ensign.	16 40	do.	Not restored.	January 12, 1835.	354 96
James Glentworth.....	Lieutenant.	8 66 3/4	do.	May 31, 1830.	May 31, 1830.	441 40
						7,408 24

In the above statement the name of James Glentworth is added to the list furnished by the Commissioner of Pensions in 1843; while the names of Moses White and William Evans are omitted, being embraced in the special acts alluded to.

Being disposed to admit the correctness of the grounds which Congress has repeatedly assumed in passing the acts for relief in 1836, 1846, and 1849, the committee have agreed to report an amended bill, to embrace all the cases now unprovided for, as shown by the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. CLARKE. The whole amount, it will be perceived, provided for is $7,408 24, and that list includes all the claimants. The Senate will have perceived from the reading of the report that three private, or separate, acts have been already passed and approved, for the payment of three of the twelve that were left in this situation. This act is now intended to cover the remainder. It has twice passed the Senate; and I hope will now pass without objection.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was reported to the Senate; the amendment was concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

CARMELITE NUNNERY OF BALTIMORE.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of House bill for the relief of the Carmelite Nunnery of Baltimore, upon which the Committee on Finance had reported adversely.

It enacts that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to remit the duties upon a box (marked VI.) of church vestments imported into the port of New York; in January, 1852, in the steamer Franklin, and consigned to Messrs. Morgan & Iselin, the said vestments being a donation to the Carmelite Nunnery of Baltimore, for the use of its clergy as sacerdotal vestments.

Mr. MALLORY. I think that the Senate will become satisfied, upon investigation, that it is highly proper to grant the relief asked for; and if it be a proper motion, I will move that this bill be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. HUNTER. There is no necessity for that.

Mr. PRATT. I hope it will not be recommitted. I agree entirely with the Senator from Florida, that we ought to pass the bill.

Mr. MALLORY. I think we ought to pass the bill; and if we act upon it now, I have a word to say upon the subject. The articles referred to were imported expressly for the use of religious ceremonies. I understand that they are vestments of the priesthood principally; that their value is small; and that the amount of duty to be returned is a trifle in itself. The principle involved has induced the committee to report against it. They are religious vestments, as I understand, and do not come within the exemption in the tariff of ready-made clothing. A duty upon vestments, or articles of that kind, is indirectly a tax upon religion itself. They are imported expressly for a charitable institution—an institution devoted principally to female education. It is an institution also whose expenses fall heavily, as I understand, upon one individual lady. Each and every one of these views appeals strongly to the sympathies of the Senate.

But I place it upon a higher ground. Congress has from time to time granted relief of this kind in analogous cases. I refer to the act of March 31, 1832, vol. 6, of the Statutes at Large, p. 484; and vol. 8, p. 533, where duties were remitted on church furniture imported by a bishop for a church in Bardstown, Kentucky; and to vol. 6, of the Statutes at Large, p. 491; and vol. 8, p. 564, where duties were remitted on church furniture imported by the Rev. Mr. Hughes. On October 25, 1832, relief was granted to a Roman Catholic church; no duties were remitted, but land was given, which, I claim, was founded upon grounds analogous to the one put forth now. Lands were also given for the support of religion in Symmes & Ohio Company's purchase. On February 5, 1829, the lien of the United States on certain lands was released to a religious congregation. For a great variety of analogous cases, I refer the Senate to the Synoptical Index of the Laws of the United States from 1789 to 1851, p. 190, under the title "Church." April 24, 1800, the Government refunded duties on implements employed in the manufacture of snuff. I state these cases to show that Congress has from time to time remitted the duties which have accrued under existing tariffs for certain considerations. For the South Carolina Railroad Company, I find that iron was allowed to be imported free of duty; and such pipes and appliances as have been used for testing certain theories of atmospheric pressure were allowed to be imported, also, free of duty. We are in the habit frequently of remitting duties on goods destroyed by fire. Duties have also been remitted on swords which have been imported as presents from foreign Powers to our military officers.

Here are precedents in which Congress has remitted the duties upon articles of church furniture—articles which go, therefore, to the keeping up of religious ceremonies. These are religious vestments—the vestments of the priesthood. There can be no religion without ceremony; and there can be no ceremony without vestments. The assessment of the duties upon these articles will go directly in face of the precedents which I have quoted, and will bear with great hardship on the institution interested.

Mr. HUNTER. The Finance Committee instructed me to report adversely upon this bill, which came from the House of Representatives. The committee came, as I believe, unanimously to the conclusion to make this report for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the Senate upon the principle involved. I am free to say, that if we do remit duties in such cases—if we believe the principle to be a right one, the persons who ask this favor upon this occasion are as meritorious as any who have ever come before this or any other body. But it seemed to the committee that it involved a principle. It is proposed, not to give money, but to remit a debt to a religious community; and it involves the question how far the Government of the United States should take into consideration the objects and purposes of a benevolent or religious society, to see whether they are meritorious objects of such a benefit as this. It seemed to us that, although it was not a very large matter, yet that it might involve a principle. There is another case, similar to this, before the Committee on Finance, in relation to church furniture. There is also another case—that of a burial society, asking to have duties remitted upon marble which was imported for monumental purposes—which has been brought forward by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. Downs,] who will probably call it up very soon, and the decision upon it will depend somewhat upon the decision in this case. If we begin with these, and remit duties simply because the societies are benevolent, or religious and meritorious in their character, I do not know very well where we shall stop. If we remit duties upon ornaments for a building; if we remit them upon the materials of which it is composed; if we remit them from churches, we must remit them from benevolent societies; and it seems to me it would involve some difficulty. However, we propose nothing more than to take the sense of the Senate. If it be their opinion that duties ought to be remitted in such cases, we shall have no difficulty in reporting upon similar cases which are now before us. If the Senate decide that this is a proper case, we will report favorably in the other cases; otherwise we will not.

Mr. PRATT. I wish to offer as an amendment, an additional section, so that we may provide in this bill for similar cases in future, and avoid the necessity of special legislation in each particular case.

The amendment was then read, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That in all cases hereafter, where books, paintings, statuary, tombs, monuments, philosophical apparatus, bells, vestments, other habiliments or wearing apparel, or materials for the same, church furniture, and other articles, are imported into the United States in good faith, by or for the use of any school, seminary, college, bishop, clergyman, church, benevolent or religious community or society, of any denomination whatsoever, and not intended as merchandise, for sale or barter, all such articles shall be exempt from payment of duty: Provided, That it be made to appear to the satisfaction of the proper officers of the customs, or to the Secretary of the Treasury, by their affidavit, properly authenticated, of the bishop, clergyman, or principal persons, having the charge and control of either of the institutions enumerated, or such other testimony as may be satisfactory, that such articles are for the exclusive use and benefit of the same institution or church, describing it, and introduced for charitable, literary, or religious purposes, and not intended as merchandise for sale or barter.

Mr. MALLORY. I agree entirely with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] as to the impropriety of remitting such duties as a general rule, but this is a case which appeals to Congress with such peculiar force, that I think it cannot be made with propriety. I do not know of any case which we are likely to have before us which appeals to Congress so strongly as this. I do not think we are likely to be called upon to remit duties upon marble, or church furniture, or articles of a similar character, because we yield to the prayer of these petitioners in this case. Here is a remission of duties asked for, upon what? Upon the very vestments, upon the very robes, in which they daily, throughout the whole earth, offer up prayers for Congress. The sun never sets upon a day, throughout the habitable globe, in which the prayers of the Church are not offered up for Congress in these very vestments. Their claim upon Congress is, therefore, of a far higher character than any before us, and I cannot very well suppose that this case can be held up as a precedent for the remission of duties upon marble

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, MARCH 27, 1852.

NEW SERIES...No. 56.

or tomb-stones, or for the ordinary decorations of buildings.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that I understood the honorable Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLOY] in the remarks which he made when he was first upon the floor on this question. Possibly, I misunderstood him. If I did understand him, it was, that this relief should be given because there could be no religion without ceremony, and that there could be no ceremony without vestments; and that, therefore, one of the objects of the passage of this bill was, to help the cause of religion. If that is really so, I think we ought to pass it; but it is just possible that we may not all think exactly in that way. I wish to suggest to the honorable Senator from Maryland, that it seems to me that if his amendment is adopted, it will defeat the bill—that it will have an injurious effect upon it—because the amendment is of such a nature as would make this a public bill; and this being private-bill day, a public bill would have no chance—the Senate cannot consider it except by unanimous consent. As it is now, it is a private bill, and can be considered and acted upon; but if we adopt the amendment, it will become a public bill, and for that reason it will be ousted.

I think, Mr. President, that there is much force in what has been urged by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER.] If, as I understood the Senator from Florida to say, there can be no religion without ceremony, and no ceremony without vestments, I would suggest to that honorable Senator that there are some other things besides ceremony and vestments. In all religions, sir, it is a matter of fact, that the priests cannot live without food—a melancholy fact, sir—any more than they can perform their religious rites without their vestments; and I think we ought, therefore, to relieve from duties all articles of provisions intended to be eaten by the holy men; and, in this way, I think we shall do much more good to the cause of religion, than we shall do by simply legislating in regard to vestments. Indeed, Mr. President, I do not know but that our liberality should be carried still further than has been suggested by the Senator from Maryland; and that it should extend not merely to these vestments and provisions, but also that it should include all liquors intended for religious uses. I am not sure but that this ought to be done; and that the principle, if it be a principle, should be carried to its full extent in all its ramifications, and that it should not stop where it does. At present, however, and in order to give more time for mature deliberation on this very important question, unless some Senator wishes to make a speech on the subject, I will move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. PRATT. Will the Senator from New Hampshire withdraw that motion for a few moments?

Mr. HALE. Oh! certainly; I will withdraw it.

Mr. PRATT. I am seldom indebted to the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, either for advice or commiseration in the course which I may think proper to pursue. It has been suggested, indeed, by my friend from Michigan, [Mr. CASS,] that no advice which he can give will do me any good. It is suggested that the amendment which I have offered, will take from this bill its character as a private bill, and will make it a public one, and thus prevent its consideration to-day. The amendment I have proposed, does not refer to the Carmelite Nunnery at all. The private bill is "a bill for the relief of the Carmelite Nunnery." The amendment is to make a similar provision in all such cases that may hereafter occur coming within the provisions of this private act. It still remains a private act. Its public reference is altogether independent of that which relates to the Carmelite Nunnery.

I certainly do not see the force of the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire. If they are intended in pleasantry, I must certainly say that I do not think the subject is one in which pleasantry should be indulged. But in whatever point of view they were intended, I do not see their applicability to the subject before the Senate.

This, sir, is a religious institution of the city of Baltimore, formed by the association of a number of ladies, for religious purposes. They are sedulously engaged in educating the females of that city—probably the poorer class of them—who are sent to this nunnery for the purpose of education. One of the vows they have taken, is a vow of perpetual poverty. They have no money, and their vow is that they will have none. Their services for educating the poor are free from all charge. A chapel has been built near the nunnery, for the purpose of enabling them to attend worship without being subjected to the gaze of the public; and I think that the idea intended to be expressed by the Senator from Florida was entirely right, but not in the sense given to it by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE.]

These vestments, Mr. President, have been used from time immemorial—from the commencement of the Christian era down to the present day—by the Catholic clergy in the exercise of their religion. Now, as the Senator from New Hampshire says, we may differ with them in opinion as to the importance of these ceremonies; but that is their creed, and these ceremonies cannot be carried on without the vestments which this bill proposes to allow to be imported free of duty. The religion of the Catholic church is the religion of these ladies, who have devoted themselves to the benevolent purpose which I have specified; and the simple question is, in a class of cases like this, whether we should impose a duty on them or not. The Senator from Virginia, if he were on the other side, being a strict constructionist of the Constitution, might have produced that instrument for the purpose of showing that the remission of these duties would be contrary to its spirit; for we are prohibited by one of the articles of the Constitution from passing any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise of religion. But here are a number of ladies who have taken a vow of poverty, and who cannot pay the duty upon these vestments, which have been sent to them, to be used by the clergymen in the chapel in which they worship. According to the worship of their Church, the vestments are essential in the exercise of their religion. I therefore think that the Senator from Virginia, if he had been on the other side, would have brought this case within the constitutional prohibition.

But, sir, there are a number of precedents, besides those introduced by the Senator from Florida, bearing on this question. In the first place, it has been usual to remit the duties on articles imported into the country for the especial use of seminaries and places of education; and in one of the books I have before me, there is an act of 1826, to remit duties on marbles, capitals, bases, and so forth, imported for the use of the Universities of Virginia. So, also, I find many other acts of Congress remitting duties on articles imported for the use of seminaries. This establishment is a school, a seminary of learning; and it is a part of the creed of the persons there, that they should worship the Almighty in the manner that their church prescribes, and one part of that is the use of the vestments, the imposition of duties on which is asked to be remitted by this bill.

I think, therefore, that looking at it as a seminary of learning, the duties should be remitted. But looking at it as it really is, it refers to the importation, more particularly, of articles for the use of this religious institution.

There are a number of others which might be cited, besides those already referred to, but I doubt whether the Senator from Virginia, or any one else opposed to the bill, could lay his finger on a single case where application has been made to the Congress of the United States for relief, and it has not been granted. By an act, approved the 2d March, 1813, relief was granted to the Bible Society of Philadelphia, on an application made by that society for the remission of duty on books imported. And so, sir, by an act of April, 1816, the Bible Societies of Baltimore and Massachusetts were allowed to import bibles for the use of those societies free of duty. In addition to these, some twenty cases might be quoted precisely similar to that now before the Senate. I do hope, therefore, that as the case now appeals as much to the feelings of this body as any that could be presented, it will not make a distinction between these good ladies and every other class of people similarly situated, who have asked for relief. I hope the Senate will not make this the first case in which this relief will be refused.

Mr. CASS. The honorable Senator from Maryland [Mr. PRATT] has given a very ingenious turn to an expression of mine. I did not say, at least I did not mean to say, that the Senator from New Hampshire had never given the Senator from Maryland any good advice. I could not say that. What I did say was, that I never knew the Senator from Maryland to profit by it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BADGER. It is very unfortunate to have to say anything upon so grave a subject gravely, when the Senate is so much excited by the happy hit of my friend from Michigan.

I am entirely in favor of the passage of this bill to afford relief to this religious association of ladies; but I think that if the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PRATT] will give me his attention for a moment, he will see the propriety of withdrawing his amendment, for several reasons. In the first place, this being private bill day, and it not being in order to consider a public bill, I think the Senator ought not, as regulation advertises the Senate of the object of setting apart this day for the consideration of private bills, to ingraft upon a private bill, a general law for the remission of duties.

Mr. PRATT. Very well, sir; I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BADGER. I say, then, I am entirely in favor of the particular measure before the Senate. It is to release the duties upon certain clerical vestments, imported for clergymen engaged in officiating in a chapel, and next to this religious association, which is so benevolently and honorably engaged in purposes of religious education, sworn to poverty, without funds, and therefore dependent upon the contributions of others to discharge these duties, or the liberality of Congress to release them. It seems to me there is nothing dangerous in the precedent. It is confined to a case that appeals to every feeling that we have, and so far as I can see it leads to no abuses. It does not involve as a consequence that we are to release duties for clerical vestments or things of that kind for every religious society, and every church, because other religious societies may be rich, and able to pay the duties upon such articles, and therefore should be left to pay them. I think this case cannot possibly be drawn into one that will be dangerous as a precedent.

Mr. SEWARD. I was going to propose an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland, which I think would have removed all objection, so that that amendment might have been added to the original bill; but it is no longer necessary to pursue that object, since the amendment has been withdrawn. I find that this bill proposes nothing more than to remit duties upon a European donation to an American charity. The articles charged are the gift of Europeans for a benevolent and charitable purpose. I do not think it becomes the United States to tax the contributions of foreigners to our charities, and therefore I am free to say that I shall vote for this bill; and under similar circumstances, I should vote for any other and similar bill. We all recollect very well that a few years ago articles of great value were sent as a present to the United States. They became subject to duties; and, although these articles were of great cost and usefulness, they were actually sold under the hammer at the custom-house to pay the duties imposed upon them, and they went into the hands of strangers. I hope that we shall always be willing to remit the duties upon such donations. Such charities are not frequent and large enough to impoverish the Treasury.

Mr. BORLAND. I presume, from what has been done in cases before this, involving the same principle, that this bill will pass. For the same reasons, however, which has governed me in my votes on questions involving the same principle heretofore, I shall have to vote against this bill. The conviction, therefore, that it will pass, makes it the more proper, on my own account, to state the reasons of my vote.

As an appeal to my feelings, sir, the bill is very strong; and if I felt at liberty to consult my feelings alone, in appropriating the public money, I would not hesitate to vote for it. But I think this is a purpose for which we have not the power or authority to make an appropriation of money. The amount is small, it is true; but for that very reason, the propriety becomes the greater, and the duty the more imperative, to scrutinize closely the principle upon which the grant is to be made; for the history of all governments, and all other institutions, shows that abuses begin and first find a lodgment in the rules of action, by means of small things. By such means, plausibly used, and aided by appeals to feeling, the judgment is lulled to sleep, and the barriers of principle overleaped or broken down. Whereas, when the disregard or violation of principle presents itself in an enlarged form, and with strongly marked features, the attention is at once, and by force, arrested, and an investigation follows, which ascertains the truth in all its relations and bearings. As Franklin said of money, "take care of small amounts; large ones will take care of themselves." But, under the humble pretense of small things, we are often persuaded to commit ourselves to a principle, or rather a disregard of principle, which will rise up before us, and startle and amaze us, perhaps the very next day, as precedents which, with remorseless grasp, drag us to the support of measures, which, at the outset, would have driven us back in amazement and abhorrence; justifying us, too, upon a sophism to which the desire for consistency makes us but too willing to resort. The violation of principle, however, and the mischief we are thus led to commit, being none the less culpable, none the less enduring in its consequences because of the smaller or greater amount of money in its perpetration. The principle of action is the same, and the pernicious consequences are none the less to be deplored—although the more readily incurred—whether the actual amount of money, in the one case or the other, be one dollar or one million of dollars.

I would vote for a proposition, to-morrow, to repeal all laws levying duties upon imports; and adopting a new system for raising the money to pay the necessary expenses of this Government. One reason for doing so is, that such a system as could be adopted, would not operate unequally upon different sections or citizens of the country. This bill, small as it is, does, to its amount, contribute to the inequality of the present system, to which I now object, and from which I would gladly relieve the country; because it sets up a discrimination, by means of which one class is compelled to contribute to the advantage of another; or rather, in this instance, where all others are forced to pay tribute to one.

Now, I am no sectarian religionist. I am not a member of any religious society; I tolerate all, and respect all; but I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that if I vote for such a bill as this, I ally myself at once with a certain sect and denomination—a certain ecclesiastical organization, at the expense (no matter whether the amount be small or great) of every other sect or organization. We know that the several religious denominations of this country has each its different customs, as well in matters of ceremony and costume as in those of creed and doctrine. Some have customs which require parade and pageantry, and gorgeous vestments, while others reject and repudiate them, as not only unnecessary, but as positively wrong. The former get the advantages of all such measures as this; while the latter are necessarily excluded; and yet the latter are required, under the bill, to pay just what the former receive. For these reasons I shall vote against this bill.

Mr. DOWNS. I will vote for this bill very cheerfully, and for all other bills of a similar kind before the Senate. I have none of the scruples that some gentlemen appear to feel, nor do I consider it a gratuity or appropriation of money to this society or religious institution; but as a simple exercise of that power which this and all other Governments, have a right to exercise, and do exercise, of selecting such objects as they choose to tax, and such as they do not choose to tax.

We have pursued this course in all our history. In all our tariff laws, there are certain articles which have been exempted from duty.

I would have preferred that the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, involving the general principle, should have been adopted; but I understand that this bill, granting an exemption from duty in particular cases, amounts to nearly the same thing. I do not see that this bill proposes any grant, or any preference of one denomination over another. I should be unwilling to vote for it, if it did. But it is a mere exercise of the power that the Government has assumed twenty times, or more, in the cases already referred to. As may be seen by a reference to the statute-books, these articles ought to be, and are, exempt from taxation; and all that we mean to say now is, that these religious institutions, seminaries of learning, benevolent societies, and other similar establishments, ought to be permitted by the Government, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to import articles of the kind referred to, free of taxation. I hope, therefore, Mr. President, that the bill will pass, and all bills involving the same principle.

I am very glad that it has been brought before the Senate, as there are several bills of a similar nature, which have been reported on adversely by the Committee on Finance.

I cannot see the distinction made by the Senator from Arkansas, which induces him to say that this bill gives a preference to one religious denomination over another. It does not appear so to me. I do not confine it to any particular religious denomination. I am willing to extend the principle equally to all. They may not all have their vestments, but they may have their monuments, their statuary, their bibles, their religious books, and twenty other things, as well as the Catholics; I think, therefore, that it was a very far stretched idea to say that the bill gives a preference to the Catholic religion.

I would not only vote for the principle as applicable to religious societies of all denominations, but also as applicable to seminaries of learning.

The whole question is, whether it is a matter of public expediency and propriety that the Government should exact import duties on these particular articles. The Government has decided heretofore that it was not; and I do not see why, at this time, when the Treasury is overflowing with money to the amount of nearly $50,000,000, we should adopt a different rule from that which was acted upon when the necessities of the country and the Government were much greater.

Mr. BORLAND. I have another word to say. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Downs] suggested as one reason why we should hesitate the less to make grants such as this bill provides, that we have an overflowing Treasury. If that be the doctrine, sir; if because we have $50,000,000 of the people's money, drawn from them by taxation, and yielded by them for no other purpose than to pay the necessary expenses of this Government, we may amuse our fancy, or gratify our feelings, by making grants of liberality, and donations of gratitude, I think the Government is, indeed, far on the way, and in full career to ruin. Such a condition of the Treasury makes to my mind a far different, indeed the very opposite suggestion. An overflowing Treasury is, in my judgment, an overwhelming evil, which cannot, for a moment longer than may be indispensable, be permitted to continue without injustice to the people, and danger to the Government. But, sir, gratuitous donations, liberal grants without authority of the Constitution, are not the remedies which can be rightfully or safely applied to the cure of so great an evil. On the contrary, I would strike the evil at the root, that is, I would reduce the taxes; aye, sir, reduce them so low that no surplus over and above the necessary wants of a truly economical administration of the Government. There should be no surplus to make gratuities of, or to be liberal with. And thus would I not only relieve the tax-paying people of a burden, but keep far away from their representatives here, all inducement which an overflowing Treasury so temptingly furnishes to engage in expenditures alike unlawful in themselves, subversive of good principles, and pernicious to the country. And this I hold to be the true Democratic doctrine. It is at least the doctrine which governs me.

Mr. DOWNS. Viewing this subject as the Senator from Arkansas does, his argument may be a very good one; but in my opinion, as I view the question, it does not apply at all. I do not view it as a gratuity, but simply the exercise of the power which we have to say upon what articles a tax shall not be paid. When we have a full treasury that is some reason why we should not add new taxes, and why we should reduce taxation. The object of taxation is to raise funds for the purpose of carrying on the Government; and, if we have ample means to do this, I think it a very good reason why some few articles should be exempted from taxation, especially when the application is made by those who are so much in need of it?

Mr. DAWSON. Will the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance be good enough to inform me what is the amount of duties which it is proposed to remit by this bill?

Mr. HUNTER. It is very small. There is no estimate accompanying the bill.

Mr. DAWSON. Some ten or fifteen dollars, I suppose?

The PRESIDENT. It is forty-five dollars.

Mr. DAWSON. The sum is so small, it is not worth while to debate about it. If I could, I would move the previous question.

Mr. MASON. With all respect to the opinion of the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Dawson,] I do not think the amount enters into the question of the propriety of the remission of the duty, in any manner whatever. I do not intend to say anything with regard to the last suggestion, however. But I will remark, that if there be any duty incumbent upon this Government, more than another, it is to keep itself entirely free from, and disconnected with any of the sects or religious denominations in this country. It is not to enable one sect of any particular kind or description, to ask aid or contributions, in any form or shape. I hold that the Government should be kept perfectly free from the religion of the country.

Now, what is this? It is a direct grant; a direct contribution of money, as much so as if it were taken out of the Treasury. It is said that it ought to be extended to all alike. These are vestments of the priesthood, which, I suppose, are so expensive in their character, that the duties upon them are greater than this institution chooses to pay. There are other institutions, which have none of these vestments. And in that respect, there are some who plume themselves, and I think justly, upon their exceeding plainness. They therefore are not in a condition to come here, and ask for such aid. And if we give to one sect which does ask it, while others will not ask it, we show a preference; and even if the amount granted were but a dollar, it would be a preference, involving an important principle.

Mr. HALE. I had such poor luck in the suggestion made to the Senator from Maryland, that I had almost determined not to say another word upon the subject; but it has now assumed a different position, to which I mean to address myself for a few moments. This is a proposition involving nothing more nor less than a donation from the public Treasury to an association for a specified purpose. The purpose may be good. That is a question I do not inquire into; nor will I doubt it. I do not doubt either that it will agree with the religious convictions of those who ask it; but we should bear in mind that there are different individuals entertaining very different convictions, who are looking to the promotion of the grand ends of morality and religion by different channels, by different means, and by different operations; and these individuals hold the different channels, and different means, and different operations which they employ just as sacred as do those persons who are asking this donation. Now, if those other persons should come to us, asking for like charities, and like relief from taxation, what shall we say to them? How are we to discriminate? Let me put a case, and let me put it to the Senator from Florida, who is so prompt to make this donation from the Government. There are, Mr. President, associations of females—pious females—poor females—not bound by a vow to be poor, but poor in opposition to their efforts to make themselves a little better off—poor females in some sections of the country that are laboring earnestly to bring about a reform which they consider is quite as much a religious duty to be brought about as others may think it religious to wear certain vestments—I mean the abolition of our system of slavery—I say that there are poor and honest females who are bound together in efforts of that sort, and they receive contributions from abroad. They appeal to the benevolence of the world; and pious individuals on the other side of the water send donations to these poor, pious females, and yet you levy taxes on their contributions; you tax their benevolence; you infringe on their rights of conscience just as much as if they were laboring in any other vocation, to bring about a different result.

Again, sir, there are religious associations in this country—associations which are composed of both poor and rich, who think that the success and spread of the doctrines of the Catholic church are full of evil, instead of their tending to produce any good. They might come here and ask the aid of the Government in enabling them to extend the influence and carry out the objects of these associations. And if they should do so, why should they not be aided?

Again, sir, there are other associations which are engaged in building costly church edifices. They are in the habit of importing from abroad materials with which to decorate these churches, and they may come here with the same good reason and ask the aid of the Government to relieve them from burdens which the revenue laws impose upon them. How then will you discriminate? They may not be so popular, so numerous, or so influential as other churches whose representatives come here and ask your aid, but their claims are certainly equal. I think, therefore, that your only way is to say to all these associations, "Stand ye all alike; we tolerate you all; we favor none; our laws are equal; they operate alike upon those who are bound by a vow to be poor, and those who are bound to be rich; they operate alike upon the Protestant and the Catholic—upon all associations, all classes, all creeds; and from the operation of these general laws to favor a particular class, it is neither the right nor the policy of this Government to depart."

It seems to me, sir, that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Downs] makes a mistake when he says that this bill is a mere proposition to select a certain class of articles on which the Government will not levy duties. It is not so; it is selecting a certain class of individuals on which to confer favors—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is leaving the general law.

Mr. HALE. And, as is suggested by my friend from Kentucky, it is leaving the general law; that while the general law is in force, as it is, levying duties everywhere by a fixed and definite standard, it is picking out a certain association and saying to them, There are certain articles which you want for carrying out your purposes, on which we will not levy duties, because we think it is a good, holy, wise, benevolent, excellent, charitable, and worthy purpose. Sir, there are other associations, whose purposes are good, holy, wise, benevolent, excellent, charitable, and worthy, who may find it necessary to import articles on which duties are levied; and if you set this precedent in this case, they will be very likely to come knocking at your door, and you must give them relief if you wish to treat all with equality.

I think the Senate should deliberate upon the suggestions of the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. Downs,] when he says he is glad that this bill has come up, because there is another bill similar in character, upon which the Committee on Finance have reported unfavorably, which is waiting the decision of the Senate upon this bill. That is a fact which gives increased importance to the principle which is to be established. I am not going to make any professions of impartiality toward all religious associations, because I think it is ridiculous to charge upon any one that he is not impartial in all these matters. I do not suppose there is one Senator in this Chamber who feels the least partiality or prejudice to any single religious corporation, association, or sect, in the country. But if you set this precedent, and say that associations for certain purposes shall come here and obtain the boon of relief, which they ask, from the operation of general laws, you are opening a very wide door, and one wider than has ever been opened. This does not compare with those general acts of relief granted to those who have imported books of science and scientific instruments, which do not belong to any particular class or religious persuasion. But here is a direct appeal on behalf of one religious order for relief from the operation of general laws, and for a boon from the Treasury, which other individuals and societies must pay. If you do it for one, you must do it for all. I am not willing to set this precedent, and therefore I must vote against the bill.

Mr. SOULE. I am surprised at the earnestness displayed by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, who has just taken his seat, and by those who coincide with him in opposition to the measure now before the Senate. I agree with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. Mason,] that the amount of money involved in the bill is not a consideration which should influence the action of the Senate. Principle should be the ground-work of our action. But I would like to inquire, what principles would be violated by awarding of the gratuity provided for in this bill? I call it by that name, because it has been so styled by the opponents of the bill.

If I understand the objections which are raised against this measure, they rest upon two or three grounds. In the first place, it is said that the measure would create a distinction highly odious to the spirit of our institutions—benefiting one religious creed in preference to others equally entitled to the favors of the Government. That objection is answered at once by the proposition tendered by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. Pratt,] to extend the measure to all other religious communions indistinctly; for I have not the least doubt but that the friends of this measure would most willingly vote for such a proposition, and are now ready to give it their sanction.

The next objection is, that certain Democratic exigencies, not well defined, should urge us to cut down, as much as possible, the expenses of this Government, which have grown to be so extravagant as to endanger the State, and seriously affect those principles of economy which should prevail in the administration of a Democratic and republican Government. I agree with the Senator who expressed such views; but how is it that he was not struck with the fact that this was an incipient step towards effecting the very object he has so much at heart to attain, and would reduce, by so much, the tax levied upon the people, and proportionally restrain the extravagance he so loudly complains of?

Then, again, another objection has been started, upon the ground that while we are asking an exoneration from duty for these ornaments necessary to the performance of the service of the Catholic church, we would not extend the same exemption to the Protestant communions, who needed no such vestments, and therefore could not share in the gratuity, though it were so generalized as to embrace them all. It might be well, perhaps, to state, in answer to such an objection, that the ground or the merits of the measure do not look to its applicability in specified cases, but to the equality of its action upon all. When I consider that the granting of the release provided for in this bill infringes no principle, creates no precedent injurious to any interest that might claim our indulgence under similar circumstances, I cannot but suppose that those scruples, sincere I have no doubt, which have induced some Senators to oppose the bill, will give way to a better second thought, and leave those who for a moment entertained them free to join us in the vote that will secure its passage.

Mr. BORLAND. What the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Soule] has said seems calculated, unless corrected, to give a direction to one of my remarks which it does not fairly take, and which certainly was not intended. What I said of the large amount we now had in the Treasury, was not suggested as an objection to this particular bill; but altogether in response to the suggestion made of the other Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. Downs,] that our overflowing Treasury was a reason why we should be liberal in such cases as this. I alluded to it for the purpose of saying that, so far from its being an inducement to liberality, it should remind us of the propriety of modifying a system which raised more money than was necessary for the economical administration of the Government. I did not make the remark as an objection to this particular bill, but merely in response to that suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. SOULE. I am glad to see that the Senator from Arkansas did not direct his observations against the passage of the bill; and, from the explanation which he has just made before the Senate, of course the hope which I have expressed, that his vote will be recorded with my own in its favor, will not be disappointed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not think the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Soule] has any right to draw the inference from my remarks that I will vote for the bill. I call for the yeas and nays on the question of ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. As I cannot vote for this bill, I will state, as succinctly as I can, without taking up much of the time of the Senate, the reasons for that determination. The honorable Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Soule] admits what I understood his colleague [Mr. Downs] to deny; that is, that this is a gratuity to a particular religious society. My objection to this bill, then, is not answered by his argument.

Mr. SOULE. I wish to correct a misapprehension under which the Senator seems to labor. I did not admit that this was a gratuity; but I assumed that as a matter of argument.

Mr. BAYARD. The argument, then, was based on the assumption that this was a gratuity, and if it is not admitted to be a gratuity I think the inference is irresistible that it is a gratuity. If, in this case, the bill proposed to exempt the article, without reference to the particular institution or individual who might make use of it, no matter by whom imported, or whether imported for charity or for profit, then it would be no gratuity, but would be a subject of general legislation. However, when we grant an exemption from a duty which would otherwise apply to a particular article, because it is to be used for the purposes of a religious society, then clearly it is a gratuity to that society. And if this be so, my objection to it is not that this is a gratuity to a Roman Catholic society, or to any other particular association; it is not on the ground that it makes a distinction between religious associations, but it is on this principle: By the acknowledged principles of your Government, as I understand them, whether State or national, the support of the principles of religion, and of religious institutions, is a matter which is referred to the popular will—to the voluntary support of the individuals constituting the society, and in no case is governmental support to religious institutions to be accorded. That is the principle of my own objection to this bill. You may disguise it as you please, but it is a governmental vote in support of religious institutions. I ask you if it is not one of the broad distinctions between the institutions of this country and of England, that this Government, in no case, in no mode, and for no purpose, gives governmental support to religious institutions? It leaves religion, as regards individuals, entirely to the voluntary support of the community in which it exists. It is believed that the vital principles of religion are better promoted—that religion is better qualified, in every respect, for the advancement of its true principles and the purity of its professors—by leaving it untrammelled and uncorrupted by any attempt, in any mode, for the Government to aid in its advancement.

That is the principle which I do not understand the argument of the honorable Senator from Louisiana touches at all. His answer applied to the objection arising out of its being a grant to one particular society in preference to another; that it might create jealousies arising out of the divisions of sects. Not so; my objection applies to the general principles; to the ground that governmental support to any species of religious institutions is foreign to the Constitution, and is the broad distinction between our course of policy and that of the Government of England.

Mr. PRATT. The Senator from Delaware speaks sensibly, as he always does; but the objection which he urges to the bill is, that it is an attempt to apply the funds of this Government to the support of religion, whereas, according to my judgment, the very reverse is the fact. The Government, by a general law, has imposed a tax upon this religious sect, and the effort now is to prevent the Government imposing a tax upon religion. It is not an advance of money, as the Senator contends, for the purposes of religion, but the object of the bill is to prevent the Government taxing religion; so that the reverse of the proposition of the Senator from Delaware, according to my construction of the bill, is right.

But I would ask the Senator—I would ask all the Senators who will do me the favor to hear me—whether we are not making a distinction in this particular case, if we refuse to pass the bill now before us? I have pointed out twenty cases of a variety of religious denominations, in which the Government has heretofore uniformly remitted the duties when it has been asked to do so. Therefore, if you commence now to refuse to remit in this particular case, will not the impression be that you make a distinction against this particular religion? I assert that no Senator can point to a single case in which an application has been made by any religious society for a similar purpose, where it has not been granted. I have pointed out some fifteen or twenty cases where Congress has uniformly granted relief; would it not therefore be making a distinction against this particular Church, if, according to the views expressed by Senators, we now refuse to grant them the relief which we have uniformly heretofore granted to other and similar religious institutions?

Mr. BAYARD. The latter part of the argument of the Senator from Maryland, it seems to me, is easily answered. It may be true that various special bills have been passed remitting duties in reference to one religious society or another, or to one institution or another. I have no doubt that the facts stated by that Senator, and by the Senator from Florida, are true. But though I cannot exactly agree with the distinguished Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] that precedents are entitled to no weight, I should be sorry to believe myself bound by precedents of special laws. It would be the most dangerous species of legislation imaginable, to be guided by all special laws that may be passed. Because you get one claim passed, from the fact of the defective principle attached to it not being contested, or because you get fifty claims passed as special laws, where there is no special examination, or recognition of a general principle, and where that general principle has not been the subject-matter of discussion, to say you are to be bound in future to carry out the same principle, is, in my judgment, not true. As regards special laws, I hold that they should not form a precedent on which the decision of the Senate should be based. General principles and general laws, settled by the decision of the Senate, of course make an entirely different question. But I admit no authority arising from the application of a special decision on a particular case by special legislation, as governing my action subsequently, when a subsequent case comes up. A strong illustration of the effect of it will be found in the fact, that the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Maryland was withdrawn; and I presume if that amendment was now before the Senate—carrying out as a general principle what this bill carries out in a particular case—there would be no difficulty.

As regards the other part of the argument of the Senator from Maryland, in answer to mine, which is, that this is the case of a tax imposed by the Government on this religious society, I think that is a misstatement of my view, and of the argument which I made. The tax is not imposed on the particular society. The tax is imposed on all articles of that particular classification; and whether they or any other association, or any other individual consume the article, they must pay the tax, as part of the price. If they are to be exempted particularly on the ground of their individual character, then it clearly is a gratuity to them.

Mr. SOULE. It strikes me that the honorable Senator who has just resumed his seat, takes a wrong view of the tendency, and certainly of the bearing, of this measure. Does he mean to assert that it implies any direct or indirect protection to any specific religious creed? If so, he is clearly right in his opposition to the bill; and if I could be convinced that he misapprehends not the question, I would at once side with him, and vote against the bill. But as there is clearly no such attempt, as he cannot seriously urge that there is any, his argument falls to the ground.

There is a plain, common-sense view of this question, which divests it of all difficulty, and brings its merits to a fair test. The question should not be, whether or not we shall exonerate a peculiar society from the obligation of paying into the United States Treasury a certain amount of duties—$45 or $50; but whether we shall subtract, from a donation made to a religious association, what would render it a burden, without easing our Treasury otherwise than by the recovery of a few dollars. The economy attempted to be effected, is hardly worth the time we have been spending in discussing it.

Now, let us apply principles as they clearly are exemplified by the practice and rule prevailing in matters of similar kind. If we land from a foreign port to any port in the United States, we are permitted to enter, free from duties, all articles comprising our baggage. Even articles of furniture, if used any time in our service, are admitted to the benefit of the exemption. Upon what consideration is predicated this discrimination? Might it not be asked why it is that a traveler under such circumstances is exempt from all charge, when those who may choose to remain at home would be charged with dues, and be compelled to pay them into the Treasury? Yet if the principle be correct in one case, why should it not in the other? The pretended gratuity made in this case may strictly be beyond the rule, but certainly is not beyond the spirit of that principle. For, suppose that these very persons for whom the exemption is asked, had brought these vestments with them from any foreign port, would you deny them the right of introducing them without paying duties to the Government? If the exemption would apply to such a case, tell me why and how it should not to this?

I understand that the power to create the exemption is not contested. The case presented is a peculiar one—one into the merits of which we look, which we can fairly appreciate; and if it does not violate any principle, if it is strictly within the spirit of the prevailing law, surely I cannot see the strength of the arguments which have been urged to exclude it from the favor of this House.

Mr. BAYARD. I still think the Senator from Louisiana misunderstands my view of the case. I feel so the more strongly, than previously, from the illustration which he gave in his last remarks. My objection is not founded on the fact that this is discriminating between particular religions; for if this bill proposed to remit to all the churches of the United States, of every denomination, duties on any vestments or furniture imported for those churches, I should vote against it. On my principles, it would make no difference to what religion it applied, or whether it applied to all. Now, the illustration given by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana is this: he likens it to the case of travelers, whose luggage you choose to exempt from duty by general laws. That is so; but the answer is, that a parallel case would be to suppose the attempt were made to say, that because a man was a clergyman, therefore his luggage should be exempt from taxation, or the payment of duty, while every other citizen of the community was liable to that payment. I say they would violate this principle in the same manner precisely as this violates the principle of our laws. My objection is to the attempt to give governmental support to any class or religious denomination. On that ground I oppose the bill.

Mr. BRADBURY. The honorable Senator from Louisiana, in the remarks he last submitted, based the claim on the ground that it was a remission of duties upon a donation. The ground upon which the bill was originally presented by the honorable Senator from Maryland, was, that the articles imported were for benevolent objects, or for the use of a religious society, and the discussion has turned upon the ground that we ought to remit the duties because the articles are designed for the use of a religious community, or for a benevolent purpose. Such was the course of the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Soule] when he first addressed the Senate, as I understood him.

Now, it is said that no discrimination is made by remitting the duties in this case in favor of this denomination. I will suppose that there is another denomination who have need of similar articles, but who chose to encourage domestic industry, of the protection of which we sometimes hear a great deal, and who purchase the articles at the same cost which they would come to, if imported and sold, with the addition to the price of the duties, would not that denomination then have a claim to come before Congress and ask for a donation, saying: "You remitted the duties on certain articles, because they were to be used for a religious purpose; we use similar articles of domestic manufacture, costing the same amount, with the addition of the duties, and we ask you therefore to refund the duties to us?" Their demand would be on the same principle. If the application is to remit the duties on account of the use that is to be made of the articles imported, it is a donation; and every denomination would have a right to come and make an application for money from the Treasury on the same principle.

It is said the amount in this case is small. I infer from that circumstance, that the bill is presented rather with the view of settling the principle—because any gentleman would take from his pocket and pay the amount of the duties in this case most cheerfully—if he were interested in the society—whether we will or will not, in a case of this kind, change the general law in consequence of the use to which the articles are to be applied. I think that in this case it is a donation. Although I think that in this case the appeal is as strong as it can be in any case, yet the discussion has assumed such a ground as will place it beyond my power to regard the bill as the remission of duties upon a donation, and therefore I shall be constrained to vote against it.

Mr. DAWSON. I do not intend to argue this question; but, as I propose to vote for the passage of the bill, perhaps it would be proper for me to give one or two reasons why I do so, as it is made such an important question.

The first ground of objection to this bill is, that Congress has not the constitutional power to interpose. If that be true, of course, I should vote against the passage of the bill. It is alleged that there is a general law taxing all importations of this kind; and, permit me to say, it is immaterial whether an article is imported for the benefit of a church, or an individual—the principle is precisely the same. Now, have we ever remitted duties upon importations made for individuals? We have. How many times I cannot tell you, but in innumerable instances. Have we not remitted duties upon railroad iron imported into the country? Nobody denies it. Have we not changed the general law by extending the time for the payment of duties, required by the general law to be paid in cash? Certainly we have. Have we not permitted the colleges of this country to import articles which were taxed, and have we not remitted the duties upon them? Have we not permitted books to be imported into this country under the general law, which were taxed, and then remitted the duty upon them? But gentlemen say, all that has no connection with religion. If you remit a duty upon an article imported into this country by a man who is religious, or by a combination of persons professing to be religious, does it thereby become unconstitutional? I trust that argument will be sustained by nobody on this floor, after mature examination; and, if it be, let me now refer to a few cases directly in point; one in the State of Louisiana, one in the State of Kentucky, and one in the State of New York.

I find that as early as the year 1816, the duties on bibles, for certain churches, subject to duty, were remitted. Then again, I find an act for the relief of Benedict Joseph Flaget, Bishop of Bardstown, in the State of Kentucky, approved the 20th of May, 1826, which enacts—

"That duties due and payable on certain vestments, furniture, and paintings, imported into the United States by Benedict Joseph Flaget, Bishop of Bardstown, in the State of Kentucky, for the use of the church over which he presides, and recently entered at the custom-house in the city of New Orleans, be and the same are hereby remitted."

Was that unconstitutional? In that day of excitement about nullification and strict construction, when the brightest lights of the country were upon this floor, did any one rise here, and, going for a strict construction of the Constitution, deny the exercise of this power? Why, they knew very well, that if we had the power to create a tax, we had a right to repeal or remit it, and if we can do it in whole, we can do it in part. There were exceptions to the general statute, but there was no question of unconstitutionality raised against them.

I next find that in 1832 the duties were remitted upon certain articles for the use of the church, imported in the brig Union into the port of New Orleans. Then I find that again, in the year 1832, this act was passed:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury refund to the Rev. John Hughes, of Philadelphia, the sum of $363, being the amount of duties on one case of church vestments and ornaments imported into the port of New York in 1831 in the ship Tully."

There are the precedents. I think after this no man can deny the constitutionality of this measure. It then becomes a question of the expediency of the mere remission of duties.

What is this application? That forty-five dollars be remitted upon a donation—a gift. Suppose, sir, that some kind friend of yours, for services rendered your country, or for a friendship which may have been created in a foreign land, should transmit to you some personal gift—a snuff-box, or a watch—as a memento of his friendship, or on account of some great service that you may have rendered, either civil or military, if it were imported into the country, it would be liable to taxation. And suppose some one of your friends—numerous as they are—on this floor should rise and present a bill to remit the duty upon that gift, whatever it might be, as a compliment to you, where is the strict constructionist here who would get up and pronounce it unconstitutional?

The question of expediency is always a matter of judgment and discretion. If a measure is unconstitutional, it will not be binding, because the Supreme Court will decide against it. Well, what is the difference between you as a citizen, and the individuals composing a church? None. A church is nothing more than a combination of individuals.

I would refer you now to the case of Commodore McDonough, where a sword was sent to him from abroad. There was a tax imposed upon the importation of all swords; yet the tax on that was remitted. Was that unconstitutional? Where, then, is the unconstitutionality of this bill? Is it because the word "religion" applies to persons here? In relation to importations, all parties are upon an equality. The law makes no discrimination between a church and an individual. It is the article imported upon which the law operates, and not upon the individual to whom the article is consigned. Why, then, distinguish this from the case of the sword sent to Commodore McDonough? Why distinguish it from the case of the vestments imported for use in the State of Kentucky?

There is another case precisely like those to which I have referred, where vestments which were sent as a donation, were imported into the city of New York, on which the duties were remitted. Now, is it not extraordinary, that when these females, whose whole object is benevolence and the increase of knowledge, morality, and all the virtues of life, are operating in a little church, or in a nunnery, and find some kind friend beyond the waters sending over to them vestments for the purpose of carrying on their organization, we should so strenuously demand forty-five dollars, after all these precedents, and cry out "unconstitutionality" and "inexpediency?"

I did not intend to say so much; but I thought that it was due to the question to cite the precedents which I have cited. I agree with the Senator from Delaware, that precedents in special cases should never operate as controlling influences. Each case must stand on its own footing. This case stands upon it better, clearer, fairer, and more just than any one I ever knew to come before Congress.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, the gentleman from Georgia has informed the Senate that the remission asked for by this religious community presents precisely the same case as if an individual has asked for the remission; and then he states that nobody would deny that it would be right in such a case. That is what a lawyer would call a non sequitur. I do not think an individual would be entitled to any such remission, nor would an individual ask such a remission. There are many persons, no doubt, who use articles of foreign manufacture upon which high duties are imposed, who would be glad to have such duties remitted, but the policy of the law is, to impose duties upon them.

I cannot agree with the honorable Senator from Maryland, that there are no precedents upon the other side. I know very well that if you take up the statutes you will find no precedents on the other side, because those cases which are rejected are not carried into the statute book; but if you take up the journals, you will find that there are cases in which payments of this kind have been asked for, and have been denied. Nobody denies the constitutional power of Congress to remit such duties. The Senator from Delaware did not contend for any such principle as that, but he contended that, as the amount of the duty was in the Treasury, or at least, if not already paid, was due to the Treasury, it was wrong by special legislation to withdraw it. I would be very glad to see these ladies successful, and to see the interests of their institution advanced in every way; but they must be subject to the same laws that other citizens and other individuals are. I therefore feel obliged to vote against the remission of the duties.

Mr. BORLAND. I am very sorry that the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. DAWSON,] in the conclusion of his remarks, seemed to insist upon a view of the question which does great injustice to those who oppose this bill. He laid great stress upon the amount of money which is proposed to be released—forty-five dollars. Sir, every Senator who has said one word in opposition to the bill, has expressly disclaimed any consideration of the amount of money. It has nothing at all to do with the merits of the case as presented.

Mr. DAWSON. I am somewhat surprised at the remark of the Senator. I laid no stress on the amount. I put it upon the principle said to be involved. I did not argue that because the amount was only forty-five dollars, therefore it ought to be refunded. I trust my friend will not so represent me.

Mr. BORLAND. I did not intend to do the Senator injustice, but surely he will recollect that he did emphasize the "amount" very strongly, for what purpose, I could not conceive, unless to give that complexion to the opposition to the bill. If I had considered the pecuniary amount and that kind of economy, I certainly should not have contributed to protract a discussion, every hour, perhaps every half hour, of which costs the Government more than the whole amount proposed to be remitted.

It is no escape from the principle that it is proper to pay this, because it is a small amount; and the opponents of this bill ought not to be put before the country as basing their opposition upon any amount whatever.

But in the course of this discussion, something was said on both sides about discriminations between religious sects.

Sir, I object to the discrimination, not merely because it is between religious denominations, but because it is between classes, whether they be religious, moral, scientific, literary, or anything else. But to make an illustration of my view of this discrimination, I will suppose a case. We know that other religious denominations do not use vestments of this kind. Take the Methodist denomination, for instance, which is spread all over this country. Their ministers wear plain clothes. Their discipline requires it. Each minister, perhaps, who is able to buy it, wears his black coat made of cloth, which has been imported, and upon which duties have been paid. Suppose a Methodist Conference in one of the States should come before Congress, at its next session, and memorialize us to pay back to each one of those individual preachers the amount of the duty, that is, the increased price which he had to pay for his coat, because of the duty levied on the cloth when it was imported? I apprehend there is not a Senator here who would not laugh it out of the Chamber; yet, there is no difference in principle. If it be proper and lawful to remit duties on vestments, which the priests of one denomination may wear, and which they consider proper in the performance of their clerical functions, it surely must be equally proper and equally lawful to pay back to the priests of every other denomination, duties on the vestments which they hold to be proper in the performance of their clerical functions. I can see no difference; and I give this case to mark my view of the discrimination.

Mr. MANGUM. Mr. President, this is a vastly important question. This is a President-making session, and I understand that this question is to operate powerfully on the success of one of the parties. [Laughter.] It has already acted very powerfully upon private individuals, claimants upon the public Treasury, and also upon the funds paid by this body for these interesting discussions. If I were full of money, I would pay this tax myself, rather than see this debate continued. But that being rather a scarce article with me, [laughter,] I will not propose to do so. I do hope that we will not continue at this game of "push-pin" any longer.

I do not see why we should feel so much repugnance to having an allusion made to religion. To be sure, it is not a Senatorial virtue, but still we should not be so appalled at it. I shall vote for this bill, if I can get a chance to vote for it, with a good deal of pleasure; and I hope we shall come to a vote after my very sensible remarks on the subject. [Laughter.]

The question being taken by yeas and nays, on ordering the bill to a third reading, resulted—yeas 21, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Brooke, Cass, Chase, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mangum, Pratt, Seward, Shields, Soule, Sumner, and Wade—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Borland, Bradbury, Brodhead, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Gwin, Hale, Hamlin, Hunter, King, Mason, Morton, Norris, Sebastian, Smith, Spruance, Underwood, Upham, and Weller—22.

So the bill was rejected.

The Senate then adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 26, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I hope to get through this deficiency bill to-day.

The question was then taken, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. STUART in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The business before the committee is House bill No. 207, to supply deficiencies in appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1852, the following clause of the bill being under consideration:

"For this sum, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to satisfy the claims of the Creek Indians for mills stipulated to be furnished under the fifth article of the treaty of the 14th of February, 1833, $4,000."

Mr. FITCH. I have an amendment to offer, to come in at the end of the clause under consideration.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not know what the amendment is which the gentleman proposes to offer; but I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer an amendment to come in after that clause.

Mr. FITCH. My amendment is to insert at the end of the clause the following:

For expenses of removal and subsistence of the Pottawatomie of Indiana, $22,500.

Mr. F. I think it is very probable that it is the same amendment which the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means was about to offer. That committee improperly struck that appropriation out, or omitted it in the bill they have reported; and I prefer that the amendment should now come from the Committee on Indian Affairs. It was, however, I believe, struck out—and I must say it in justice to the Committee of Ways and Means—under a misunderstanding between themselves and the Indian bureau. The amendment is to carry out a treaty provision found in the third article of the treaty of February 11, 1837, with the Pottawatomie Indians. The deficiency arises from the fact that the number of Indians to be removed was estimated at four hundred, whereas they were found, when assembled, to number some six hundred, or more; and of course the expense was greater than was estimated, and hence this deficiency. They have been removed, the last removal of them from their old country to the West; and I presume there is no disposition on the part of the Committee of Ways and Means, or of the House, to prevent a treaty stipulation, as plain as that is, from being carried into effect.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FITCH] having the credit of this amendment.

Mr. FITCH. It is the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and not mine individually.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee on Indian Affairs were notified that this amendment was ordered by the Committee of Ways and Means to be offered; but I am perfectly willing to give the Committee on Indian Affairs the credit of it. I deem it due to the Committee of Ways and Means to say, that when these Indian estimates were under examination by that committee, we called for information upon this very item. We had the chief clerk of the Indian bureau before us, and we asked him for the information. He was unable to give it to us; and when he left the committee, he carried with him a written memorandum from a member thereof, calling upon him to furnish this information to the committee. He did not furnish it at the time desired, and we could not, therefore, put the item into the bill; and we reported the bill without it. But on the 30th of March he did furnish the information. Then it was that the committee ordered that the amendment should be offered to the bill. These are the facts; and I state them, merely to put the Committee of Ways and Means in a right position before this committee.

Mr. FITCH. I presume it was a blunder of the Ways and Means.

Mr. HOUSTON. It was not a blunder.

Mr. FITCH. This is the first I have heard of the Committee on Indian Affairs having been notified by the Ways and Means of their intention to introduce the amendment. I presume no such notice was given. It was perfectly proper for the chief clerk to decline giving the information, without the direction of his chief. He could not properly do so. It should have been sought at the Indian bureau.

Mr. HOUSTON. That was a fact. Two members of the Committee of Ways and Means went to the bureau of Indian Affairs for this very information; and why that committee gave no notice to the Committee on Indian Affairs—otherwise than that I had the pleasure to give my friend from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] that the Committee of Ways and Means had instructed me to offer this amendment—was not because this information had not been sought by the Committee of Ways and Means, but on account of remissness in the Indian bureau.

The question was then taken on the amendment offered by Mr. FITCH, and it was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, moved the following amendment, to come in after the amendment just adopted, viz:

For expenses of removal and subsistence of Choctaws, $50,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. That amendment is offered in obedience to a treaty under date of September 15, 1830, and in obedience to the sixteenth article of that treaty which provides for the removal of the Choctaws from the east to the west of the Mississippi river. Those who have hitherto examined into that matter will recollect that the Government had great difficulty to get those Indians to remove, and there are now a thousand of them still remaining scattered throughout the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means have rejected this item for their removal. It cannot be that they have any objection to it, because it is not a deficiency, since we find this same item for this same service in the preceding deficiency bills of the last Congress. And the only objection I know of that can be offered is to be found in the allegation—and to that I wish to address my remarks, if I can have time—that they have been provided for once, by a donation of lands, and that now, when they remove, it must be at their own expense.

Mr. HOUSTON, (interrupting.) Allow me to make an explanation.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman can have another opportunity to offer his explanation, as I want to occupy my five minutes. I say this amendment is for the removal of these Indians, in obedience to a treaty of this Government, which we all acknowledge, and which has been in existence for a long time, and is not a disputed fact. These Indians are there, and want to be removed to the territory west of the Mississippi, where the remainder of the tribe now are. The treaty contained alternative provisions, and the Indians were left to accept either of them. The one was, that they might remain, and retain a certain amount of lands, and after a specified time have the title of the lands made perfect to them. The other was, that if they chose to remove west, their expenses in removal should be paid by the Government. The Government, it is found, have disregarded the terms of this treaty, and sold the lands promised to be reserved to them, so that the Indians could not afterwards get a title. The Government, finding the injustice they had done these Indians, prepared to make amends to them, and in 1842 passed an act by which they gave scrip to the Indians, to the amount of the land which the Government had disposed of, and which ought to have gone to those Indians. One half of that scrip subsequently becoming lost to the Indians by the operation of speculators, the Government, for the purpose of saving the remainder, funded it, and agreed to pay to the Indians the interest upon it, in the shape of annuity. That is the condition in which the Indians stand at the present time. Now, gentlemen, the Committee of Ways and Means contend that this Government is not bound to remove them. Sir, the Indians themselves are forced to resort to the other alternative in that treaty. They first resorted to the alternative of the treaty allowing them to take the lands. The Government sold the land, and thus deprived them of the power to take it, and they are consequently compelled to remove. The Government gave them something in lieu of the land, but the Government never contended that they had for one moment deprived them of the alternative of being removed, under the sixteenth section of this treaty, to wit, removal at the expense of the Government itself. The Government never contended for it, and these gentlemen of the Committee of Ways and Means are the first men that I have ever heard assert such a thing, or draw any such conclusion. The Government, from the very beginning of their injustice in depriving those Indians of the land which they were entitled to under the reservations of the treaty, have admitted and judged that they were entitled to be removed, under the other section of the treaty, and have gone on constantly, to this hour, to remove them, and pay the expenses of it. Now, the Committee of Ways and Means sagely allege that these Indians have to remove themselves at their own expense, if I am correctly informed. Sir, to the enlightened judgment of that committee we are indebted, for the first time, for a decision which confirms a previous act of injustice upon the part of this Government towards that tribe, in violation of treaty stipulations, and to reject their rights, giving a construction which no past Administration of this Government, from the year 1842, when the injustice was first acknowledged by this Government, had given to it. I defy them to produce such a construction as would deprive those Indians of the right to be removed by this Government at its expense, in obedience of the sixteenth article of the treaty.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. As one member of the Committee of Ways and Means, I must tender my thanks to my friend from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] for the information which he gives of the reasons why the committee rejected this estimate for the removal of the Choctaws. It is new to me, sir, that the Committee of Ways and Means rejected it on the ground that the Choctaws should remove themselves. I certainly never had any such idea that the Choctaws should remove themselves. If my recollections are right about this item for the removal of the Choctaws, it is, that when we took it up for examination, we looked back to the deficiency bill of the last session of Congress. In that bill there was appropriated $20,000 for the removal of the Choctaws west of the Mississippi. When we looked at the regular appropriation bills for the Indian affairs, we found no appropriation whatever, and no estimate submitted for the current year, for the removal of the Choctaws. We did not incorporate this provision into the bill, because we had no information as to what had become of the amount asked for in the deficiency bill of the last session, and which, we might reasonably and naturally conclude, would be sufficient to complete the removal of the Indians, from the fact that no appropriation was asked for for the new current year which these deficiencies are intended to supply. If, sir, we had had this information as to what they had done with the last appropriation asked for, and which was granted, and what amount would be required to perfect and complete the removal of these Indians, I doubt not that the committee would have given it to them. If the treaty requires them to be removed, of course this Government must do it.

But it is said—I do not know with how much truth—that some of the Indians who were removed west have come back; and perhaps sometimes some of the contractors may be assenting to it, for the purpose of removing them again. Now, sir, I should be glad—not that I know anything upon this subject—if gentlemen would incorporate a proviso in this bill, that the Indian agent shall determine whether any of the Indians now upon this side of the Mississippi have been removed west; and if so, that they shall not be removed again at the expense of the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I am glad to answer the gentleman. There have been instances of that sort; and the Indian department, in the performance of their executive duty, have come to the solemn decision, that they will not again pay the expense of the removal of a single Indian that has ever been removed; and the superintendents of the removal of these Indians to the west shall now keep a close watch for every case of that sort, and refuse payment of removal in such cases.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Now, I would like to know—for I have not received that information from the Indian bureau—if the amount now asked for will complete the removal of all the Choctaws to their new homes west of the Mississippi?

Mr. JOHNSON. It is estimated by the department, after minute inquiry in regard to the matter, that it will.

Mr. JONES. I am glad to hear it; and the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] and the Committee on Indian Affairs, had information—upon which they ask this appropriation—which the Committee of Ways and Means did not have at the time they declined to incorporate the item into the deficiency bill.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. JOHNSON; and it was agreed to.

The following clause in the bill was then read: "For this sum to cover arrearages for and on account of contingencies of the Indian Department, $12,000."

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move to amend this clause, by striking out "$12,000," and inserting "$22,500."

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I refer, Mr. Chairman, to the estimates furnished by the department, and I find, "For this sum, to cover arrearages for and on account of the Indian department, $22,500." The Committee of Ways and Means, sir, in examining this article, and determining upon what they would report, have struck out of that amount the sum of $10,000; thus reducing the item to $12,500. I move to strike it out, in accordance with the recommendations contained in those estimates. I will state now, sir, what, perhaps, those gentlemen did not consider sufficiently; or what, perhaps, they may not have known. If they did not know it, it accounts for the fact of their reducing this sum. This deficiency, sir, is one, as we are aware, for which it is impossible that any department, on exact data, could make any estimate; and I will give you such data, as may be possible. There are now but $50 on hand in the bureau. Already, sir, that bureau, having no question in the world of the willingness of Congress to carry on the operations of the bureau, have gone on, in the absence of sufficient contingency, and incurred expenditures in fulfilling treaty stipulations, &c.—$5,000 for the St. Louis superintendence, and $5,000 for the Northwestern superintendence, and a demand of $5,000 more for the superintendence for the Indians who live between Arkansas, Texas, and New Mexico; thus making an immediate necessity for a sum of $15,000. Here is one necessity; but the Ways and Means committee propose to give us only $12,500. Thus, if you were to give $15,000, you would have left in the department but $50, to pay the expenses necessarily incurred to comply with our treaties with the Indians—to convey to them clothing, and the various articles which it was agreed should be furnished them.

Therefore, I say, sir, that upon full examination of the matter, the amount of $12,500 is much too small. If you appropriate $12,500, a large part of those expenses, actually incurred under an actual and imperious necessity, must be left unpaid; these debts will have to stand there, and if they are not paid, the department will have to arrest its movements. They are bound from this time to do so. Whenever they incur debts on the part of the Government, without an appropriation already being made, as we have seen, they must incur the severe censure of a disregard of absolute law. Now, sir, to transport this clothing for the Indians, and all things stipulated for them by the treaty, they must wait until the general appropriation bill has passed. And when will that be? Why, sir, in July, August, or September; and it will be again this year, as it occurred once or twice before, that they will not be able to convey the articles, annuities, &c., stipulated for by the treaty, and agreed to be paid, until the spring has closed and the cold weather has set in, so that the Indians will not be able to collect together without great expense, and vast personal suffering.

Mr. DUNHAM. It will be recollected, sir, that in the annual appropriation bill we appropriated money for every regular expenditure of the Indian service placed under the control of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. We also gave him a large sum, as contingencies, if I am not mistaken, for I have not the bill before me, of about $36,000. He now, sir, comes in, and for this same year, after having expended that amount, asks us to place at his unrestricted discretion $22,500 more, as contingencies. We thought this was an enormous contingency, after having the former appropriation of $36,000, besides the specific appropriations for every branch of the service, and we requested the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to give us some idea of what use he made of this money. He sent us back an answer that he wanted it for this thing and that thing and the other thing; but that he could not give us any particular information about it. In other words, the substance of his answer was, We want this money to use as we think proper, and we want you to give it us. Now, it is for the committee to say whether they are willing, upon this information, to give it to him.

Now, sir, I think if the gentlemen who were so anxious about the quartermaster's department, would inquire into this matter, they would find something much worse here; for the Indian bureau, after having expended this sum of $36,000 without any knowledge on our part as to how it has been expended, comes here, and asks to have this further appropriation placed at their discretion. If the committee dispose of this money—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FITCH. I move to amend, by increasing the appropriation $500. The appropriation of last year for the contingent fund of the Indian department was $36,000. The year previous it was about the same sum; but in one year (1849) there was no contingent appropriation at all. About that time, the duties of the office of the Indian bureau became considerably extended, in consequence of a large acquisition of territory. Thousands of Indians were brought under its supervision, with whom before we had nothing to do, and it was compelled to engage in treaties, and subject itself to expense, which, prior to that time, it was not expected would be incurred. At the time the contingent fund of the last year was appropriated, it had been in a great measure already anticipated. It having been satisfactorily explained by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that this sum of $22,000 is absolutely necessary to supply a real deficiency, not a prospective one—a deficiency growing out of the great extension of our territory over an immense Indian country—I trust that it will be granted. I am not among those, of course, who defend the immense appropriations asked for by the departments to supply deficiencies, or minister to their extravagance; and will say now, for it may be as well stated here as at any other time, that I desire to add this appropriation to this bill for the benefit of the Indian bureau, because I think it just and proper; but I am opposed to some of the appropriations made for the quartermaster's department, and may vote against the entire bill unless they are struck out. The necessity for the contingent fund for which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs asks, has been explained, as before remarked, fully, and to the satisfaction, probably, of every member of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The omission in one year to supply an adequate contingent fund, embarrassed the department—an embarrassment, from which they have not yet recovered. It is a deficiency to provide for the payment of debts already contracted, and money expended, the contingent fund appropriated last year having been mostly anticipated and paid out for arrearages of the year previous. I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas will be adopted. My own is unimportant.

Mr. HOUSTON. From the arguments of the two gentlemen advocating this amendment, I think the committee should be satisfied that it ought not to be agreed to. I am going to attack it alone upon their arguments. I will, however, in the first place, again appeal to my friend from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] if it is entirely agreeable to him, to make his arguments upon the amendments proposed, and not to use remarks, the effect of which, it will be seen, is to bring the Committee of Ways and Means into disrepute in the House.

Mr. JOHNSON. If I have cast any reflection upon that committee in any unkindly spirit, I will withdraw it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was going to remark upon the argument of the gentleman from Arkansas in favor of this amendment; and I trust he will give me, for a moment, his attention. I understood him to say that the Committee of Ways and Means had proposed $12,000 under this contingency head, when, in truth, several thousand dollars had already been expended.

Mr. JOHNSON. Ten thousand dollars.

Mr. HOUSTON. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs says there is $10,000 expended already of the appropriation here asked. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FITCH] added to that argument, by showing when you gave them the contingent appropriation in the last Congress, that it had been expended—anticipated. Now, if these remarks are correct—and I have no doubt that they are—does it not, then, admonish us that this committee should draw up the reins there? We must all know, that the most troublesome fund—the most difficult appropriation we have under our control, as a branch of the Congress of the United States—is the contingent fund made to the various departments. Those are appropriations which necessarily exclude almost everything like a restraint or limit. They are dangerous appropriations. Although at first small in amount, this contingency of the Indian bureau has grown, within the last year, to the sum of $36,500. Now it is proposed to add $22,500 to that; so that you may judge what the contingent fund for the mere Indian service soon will be hereafter, if you give what they now ask.

Now, the Committee of Ways and Means endeavored to investigate into all of these contingent appropriations; not only for the Indian bureau, but that of every department in the public service; and in every case where they have not been furnished with information in detail, which the department should furnish, they have rejected it. I do not understand by what authority of law the Indian department expends $36,000 in advance of appropriation. I do not understand by what authority of law the Indian bureau expends $10,000 in advance of the deficiency appropriation bill in addition to $36,500 which was appropriated during this fiscal year. I trust that this committee will not sanction such a practice. If gentlemen who have the charge of the subject of the Indians, are not disposed to cut loose from all restraint which Congress ought to hold over these appropriations, and say they shall expend the appropriation, not for legitimate objects, not for objects known to the law, but contingent objects about which we know nothing—objects about which we cannot know anything until they report the mode and manner of expenditure—then I say that this appropriation should be made. In the first place, it comes in a very questionable shape. It is an appropriation, I believe, that ought never to be made, could we avoid it. In some cases we are obliged to make appropriations for contingencies. In this case it is necessary to have something for contingency. We have already appropriated $36,500 for the last year. They ask $22,500 more. I can see no reason for it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. FITCH. I move, pro forma, to increase the appropriation $250, for the purpose of explaining again how the deficiency occurred. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means thinks this amendment is somewhat accountable, and he charges that the Indian bureau—I do not understand that he charges a violation of law—ought not to have anticipated their contingencies by the expenditure of money then to come in, and ask the House to supply the deficiency. It was an unavoidable act. You voted a contingent fund two years since, as I have already remarked, of $36,500. When that contingency was voted, it had already been, to a great extent, anticipated by operations of the department in remote parts of the country. Cast your eye over the immense territory subject to the jurisdiction of the Indian department, and members will not fail to see they could not at that time know that such a deficiency existed; but as the returns came in from one and the other portion of our Indian country, they found a contingent expense had already been incurred, which swallowed up the contingent fund for that year. They were, then, compelled to pay arrearages of that year out of the contingent fund of the last year, and it is now asked that an appropriation shall be made to supply the deficiency thus created in last year's fund. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means does not understand how this contingent fund can be applied. I will state two cases which will strike the mind of every member who has any knowledge of Indian business—two items in which these contingencies arise. You provide for the payment, at a certain point, of a given sum of money by treaty to Indians. That money must be paid there, and being remote from any of your depositories, you are compelled to transport it to that point. They cannot estimate what the cost of transportation will be, and it comes under the head of contingencies.

Again: you contract with the Indians to deliver to them, at a certain place, a given amount of goods. You cannot tell, in advance, what will be the cost of the transportation of those goods. There is no estimate made for that purpose, but it is paid out of the contingent fund; and thousands of dollars are needed for those two items. Besides, unexpected treaties, which the bureau is called upon, by circumstances, to make with the Indians, require expenditures of money, which are defrayed out of the contingent fund. It was not my intention to consume my five minutes. I shall say no more.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It may be some satisfaction to the committee, to give a short history of this contingent fund. Trace back, if you please, the appropriation bills for many years, and you will find that, previous to our immense acquisitions of territory, by the annexation of Texas, and the conquering of California and New Mexico, the contingent fund was about $36,500. Then, knowing these facts; the largely-increased number of treaties made; the increased obligations which have been thrown upon us; the largely-increased expenditures, which this Government has been compelled to make for subsistence furnished the Indians; the increase of agencies, and the traveling expenses of agents; the expense consequent upon the transportation of goods, of food, and of the increased annuities to Indians, we cannot but conclude, that the contingent fund should be made larger. We know the fact, that before our jurisdiction was extended over the immense country now belonging to us, that the Indian contingent fund was limited to about $36,000. We have recently appropriated but the same amount, although we have acquired Utah, New Mexico, and California, with the jurisdiction over the numerous tribes of Indians within their borders. I do not say Oregon, for the simple reason that her contingency fund is provided for by an independent provision.

There has been no special provision for Utah, New Mexico, or California. The sum I have mentioned was appropriated when our territory was confined within the limits of the original thirteen States, and although we have extended our Indian relations immensely, the bureau has put in its estimates for no more than $36,500. It was settled upon in the hope that they would be enabled to curtail this class of expenditures, although they knew that the Indian relations were immensely increased and the area over which they had to act greatly extended. It was put in for that amount with the hope that the expenses of the department could be cut down to $36,500. Now, that will be enough to show, if there was no other reason, that this appropriation should be made. There is another reason still. During one year there was no contingent fund appropriated. That was in 1848. The consequence was, there was a deficiency which has kept on from that time to the present. I trust that this appropriation may be granted by the committee, as it is right and just.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. What is the amount of arrearage?

Mr. JOHNSON. The precise amount of arrearage is not known.

Mr. DUNHAM made an inquiry which was entirely inaudible to the reporter.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will answer the gentleman. There was still a surplus for 1848-'9 under previous appropriations, and that surplus was not the amount of appropriation by any means; and at the same time it was not sufficient for the service of the year 1849.

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania, demanded tellers, which were ordered; and Messrs. EDGERTON and CLINGMAN were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 40.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next clause was then read as follows:

"For office-rent, fuel, stationery, &c., for the Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Oregon, $1,000."

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer the following amendment, the effect of which will be to make the above clause read as follows, viz:

For clerk-hire, fuel, stationery, &c., for the Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Oregon, $2,400.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will state to the committee that the estimate submitted to the Committee of Ways and Means was $3,000 for clerk-hire, office-rent, fuel, stationery, &c., for the superintendent in Oregon. The committee reduced those items to $1,000. After the Superintendent of Indian Affairs arrived here from Oregon, he came before the Committee of Ways and Means, and gave the committee what he said was the lowest amount for which this service and these articles could be obtained. The committee then determined to give him for office-rent what he asked. The items for fuel and stationery seemed to be moderate and reasonable. The estimate for clerk hire the committee have stricken out. They became satisfied, after that interview, that a clerk was necessary for the superintendent there, and they have, therefore, reinstated the item. The object of the amendment now before the committee, is to reinstate the item for clerk hire, with a salary reduced a few hundred dollars below what the Superintendent of Indian Affairs asked. That is the amendment.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I would like to know of the gentleman, whether there was not an appropriation in the regular appropriation bill of last year for the office of Superintendent of Indian Affairs?

Mr. HOUSTON. Not for this year, as I understand it.

Mr. MARSHALL. For the fiscal year ending in 1852? That is what I say.

Mr. HOUSTON. As I understand, there was not. The law is before me, and I presume we can very soon tell.

Mr. MARSHALL. My impression is, that they struck out the stationery only.

Mr. FITCH. It was not for the last year.

Mr. HOUSTON. It was the understanding of the committee, that there was no such appropriation for this year. But the item is absolutely necessary, and for that reason the committee purpose to increase the amount.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded tellers on the amendment; which were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCORKLE. I propose the following amendment:

For paying the drafts of the Indian Commissioner of California, drawn upon the Department of the Interior for supplies furnished, and expenses incurred in the negotiation of treaties with the various Indian tribes of California, the sum of $320,000.

Mr. McC. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to say a word in explanation, and in favor of this amendment. The amount of money asked to be appropriated by this amendment, is due various citizens of California, for beef and other supplies furnished to the Indian commissioners, who were appointed by the President, and sent out to California with full powers to negotiate treaties with the various Indian tribes inhabiting that State. The commissioners, whether with or without the approbation of the President, I shall not stop to inquire, adopted the policy that it was better to clothe and feed the Indians, than to fight them. "To clothe the naked, and feed the hungry," being an injunction of the bible, had peculiar force with these innocent and immaculate commissioners, and they set about clothing these savages who had never known before the luxury of a shirt, and feeding them beef, where, for generations, they had subsisted on roots and acorns. To effect such benevolent and peaceful objects, the commissioners, being the duly and legally authorized agents of the Administration, entered into contracts with various citizens of California to furnish the supplies of clothing and provisions necessary to carry out their peculiar and novel policy of reducing, and conciliating the hostile Indians. Under these contracts, relying upon the ability and faith of the Government, the citizens of California undertook and did furnish clothing, beef, and other supplies to the amount asked for in the amendment which I have just offered. The money is justly due and owing to them under these contracts, and drafts drawn by the Indian commissioners upon the Department of the Interior have been presented and protested. I hold that it is a matter of simple justice, to those citizens of California, who have furnished these supplies, that they should be paid, every article being furnished at a fair and reasonable price. The commissioners have made the contracts, and this Administration is justly bound to pay the money. It is no bar to the demand of these claimants that the commissioners acted without instructions. They were sent out to California with full powers to make treaties with the Indians, and this Administration is responsible for their acts, and third parties and innocent persons should not suffer on account of the incompetency or dishonesty of Government agents.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to make a brief explanation. So far as I have any information on this subject, no such estimate has been submitted to the Committee of Ways and Means. I take it for granted that the Committee on Indian Affairs will be more familiar with this subject than I can be. The gentleman from California states, however, that this money is to pay for provisions for Indians that have been, and probably are now, being fed in California, under treaties that were made by some agents or commissioners.

Mr. McCORKLE. By the Indian commissioners.

Mr. HOUSTON. By the Indian commissioners, who transcended their authority, as must be evident to the committee, by agreeing to execute treaties before they were ratified by the Senate. I understand, though not authentically, that the commissioners have been removed—that their authority has been revoked, because of the fact that they transcended it, and not only made treaties, but agreed to execute those treaties, and are now in the execution of them, without regard to the action of the Government here, either in approval or disapproval of what they had done. I am informed by the gentleman from California that the drafts drawn upon the Government by these commissioners, in the execution of those treaties, before the Government has acted on them at all, amount to nearly half a million of dollars. No estimate for this item was submitted to the Committee of Ways and Means, and therefore we did not put it in the bill. The information which I have given to the House may not be, in all particulars, correct, but I presume that it is substantially so.

Mr. McCORKLE. I desire to make a brief explanation.

Mr. HOUSTON. My time is not out, and I will yield the balance of it to the gentleman from California.

Mr. McCORKLE. It is true, as the honorable gentleman from Alabama has said, that a portion of the supplies were furnished to these Indians under contracts in carrying out the stipulations of treaties which were formed with the Indians; but a large portion of the money—I am not able to say how much—is for contracts for beef furnished to the Indians before the treaties were formed.

The Indian commissioners, in order to get the wild savages in to treat with them, were obliged to hold out some inducement to them, and they found the most alluring bait they could hold out to them was roast beef. This they offered in abundance, and the Indians came in and did make treaties; and in order to obtain the consent of the Indians to the treaties, and their observance of the treaty stipulations, the commissioners contracted to continue feeding them, and those treaties will be observed just so long as you continue to feed them, and no longer.

But the point of the case is this. Citizens of California, disinterested third parties, relying on the faith of the Government, placed in the hands of the commissioners, made contracts and furnished beef—which will command cash in any part of the State—to the Government, and are now laying out their money on it. It is therefore a just and proper claim, and one which should be paid without hesitation. There is no question about the justice of the claim; for the contracts have been made, and the papers are all on record in the proper department, and many drafts have been sent on here that have been protested.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, moved to amend the amendment by reducing the amount to $20,000.

Mr. J. said: I offer that amendment for the purpose of making a very short statement. The honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means refers to myself, or to the committee of which I am a member, and says that we should know something about this matter.

Mr. HOUSTON. I said it was probable you did.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well, sir. Now the subject-matter of this item has never been before our committee, officially, for examination. It has never received any examination at our hands; and all that I know in regard to it is what I have learned in conversation with the chief clerk of the bureau, and from the legislation that has taken place heretofore. During the last Congress the Commissioner of Indian Affairs asked for the sum of $75,000 to be appropriated towards the object in the carrying out of which these immense debts have been created. Congress refused to vote $75,000, but gave $25,000; and I understand that directions were sent from the bureau that when the $25,000 thus appropriated was expended, the authority of these agents of the Government to make these treaties should cease, so far as regarded any further expenditure. That is the way in which I understand the matter, and that is all the explanation I can give to the House in response to the call which has been made upon me by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. GENTRY. I am always ready to vote any sums that may appear to me necessary to carry on the operations of the Government, and proper in themselves. But the facts presented to this committee now are not of such a character as I think ought to induce the House to vote this appropriation. If these commissioners have proceeded to California to make expenditures, and treaties, and contracts not authorized by their instructions from the Government here, and for which no appropriation had been made by Congress, they have been proceeding there, to say the least of it, with a very high hand, and if the legislative branch of the Government shall give its sanction to such proceedings, our agents in those remote Territories—in California, Oregon, and New Mexico, will very speedily bankrupt this Government. I believe that this Congress ought to set its face sternly against all attempts of this character. I concur in what has been said in this debate, that the executive officers everywhere ought to be rigidly confined within the limits prescribed by law, especially with respect to appropriations.

Mr. HIBBARD. I wish to speak out the gentleman's time. Here is an item of appropriation of $520,000, which the committee are called to vote upon, and the history of which is this: No item for this purpose was included in the estimates sent to the House by the department, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. The Government, whose business it is to know what ought to be appropriated, have not known that this item was of that description. They have made no estimate for this purpose. It has not been brought in any way before the Ways and Means, nor is it recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs, who have taken under their consideration, most minutely and zealously, these appropriations for the Indian service, and whose course here has shown that they are by no means disposed to omit anything that they think ought to be allowed. They have considered this matter, but they have not directed their chairman to report an appropriation for this purpose. The statement of the chairman indicates his own opinion that it ought not to be allowed. The committee are now called upon, on the mere statement of the gentleman from California, to appropriate this item of more than $500,000. The facts are, that an appropriation—not of $75,000, but, I believe, of $100,000, as appears from the general appropriation bill, was granted, for the purpose of entering into negotiations with these Indians.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It was only $25,000.

Mr. HIBBARD. The gentleman is right; it was an appropriation for another purpose which I had in my mind. The amount is different, but the principle is the same. Twenty-five thousand dollars was all that was deemed necessary for this purpose; and the commissioners had this authority, and this alone—for the appropriation was all their warrant. There was no statute authorizing these negotiations, except the appropriation for that purpose. The beginning and the end, the fountain of their whole power to act, was that appropriation of $25,000; yet the commissioners have gone on, and expended over $500,000. That is the astounding fact brought up here to the knowledge of the committee; and the committee is asked to sanction it, by granting this appropriation. I do not know but that they will do it—but that Congress will indorse, and the President approve it. But, if it is done, I wish the fact to go out to the country, that it is done without any investigation, or examination, or approval, by any Department, or by any committee of either branch of Congress, and solely upon the facts just now disclosed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I move to amend the amendment, by reducing the amount to five dollars. I have a word or two to say upon this subject. The question, as it seems to me, involves the public faith. The way to enforce responsibility is to punish the agents signally, but to regard the contracts of our recognized agents.

Mr. GENTRY. I ask my friend, does it appear that these men had a right to pledge the faith of the Government?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; they were sent out there to treat with the Indians.

Mr. GENTRY. But not with unlimited powers.

Mr. HIBBARD. I ask the gentleman, if it be a legal principle that if the agent exceeds his authority, you are bound to ratify his contracts?

Mr. WALSH. I say that, in regard to private agencies, if you appoint a general agent, and he exceeds his particular authority, as a point of law, you are bound by his acts. But I say that the principle is entirely different in regard to Governments. A gentleman, the other day, referred to the practice of the English Government in these cases. Sir, the English Government would never dishonor the draft of an agent abroad. They would punish him, if necessary, but when they send a man out indorsed as a public agent, the uniform practice of that Government is to accept his drafts. Now, what are the facts in this case? It is not only the people of California who are interested in this matter. These drafts are negotiable instruments put out by the agent of the Government in California, and they have got into the hands of innocent parties here on the Atlantic coast; and we are now told that an appropriation, of which nobody knew, is to limit the amount that these persons are to be paid. Why, these agents were authorized to collect the Indians together—

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, (interrupting.) I should like to ask the gentleman if that agent did not resign immediately after he drew the drafts?

Mr. WALSH. I know nothing about the fact whether he resigned or not. I know nothing of the circumstances of his fraud; but, in order to affect the rights of third parties, the fraud of the agent must be brought home to them. No defense can be made by the Government on the ground that their agent committed fraud, unless you can make the creditors, who relied on the faith of that agent, partake and approve of the fraud.

Mr. GENTRY. If he has contracted to the amount of $5,000,000 or $10,000,000, are we bound?

Mr. WALSH. That would only be evidence of his fraud, and you could hold it up to show that these parties in California were guilty also. But does the gentleman mean to insinuate that the people of California have colluded with the agent? There is no such pretense in this case. Does he mean to say that the holders of the drafts on the Atlantic coast have been guilty of such collusion? There is not a particle of any such pretense. The agent went there to carry out the policy of the Government. He gave the Indians beef and clothing, and the policy of the Government—for that is in question—has always been to make these people approach what is usual in civilized life. But he contracted these debts. People in California, on the faith of his character as an agent of the Government, furnished him with these necessities. He was authorized to draw the drafts in question, which are negotiable instruments, and they have been taken, on the faith of his public character, by innocent parties here, on the Atlantic sea-board. And can it be pretended, in a case of that description, where you sent a man out as commissioner, with general authority to treat, and with no limit to his agency brought home to the knowledge of those who contracted with him, that you can repudiate his acts of agency because he exceeded his authority? I say, without detaining the committee longer, that on the principle which the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] suggests, you cannot set up such a defense in a case referring to a private individual who has created a general agent, unless you can show the limitation by which you seek to control that agent, and unless you can also show that the parties who contracted with him knew of the limitation which you had put upon him. And I say further, that whether he be a general agent or not, the principle is universal as applicable to Governments—to the British Government, and to every other Government.

Mr. STANLY. Is this amount the appropriation of half a million of dollars asked for by the gentleman from California, [Mr. McCORMACK?]

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. STANLY. This claim may be right and just, as the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WALSH] says it is, but what evidence have we that it is? Has the Department sanctioned it? Has it been investigated by any committee of this House? I am somewhat surprised that this proposition should come from and be advocated by the other side of the House—by the economical side of the House, who talk so loudly of the enormous expenditures of the Government.

Mr. HOUSTON. Why, it has been advocated on your side of the House.

Mr. STANLY. But a majority of the other side have acquiesced in it, as I understand.

Now, if there is any evidence that the faith of this Government is pledged in this matter, if it be $5,000,000 instead of $500,000, I will vote for it. But I say it is not right to admit it, under the existing state of things—to pass this amendment without further investigation into the matter. I do not think it right to put this half a million dollars in the deficiency bill, and I hope the committee will vote it down.

Mr. FITCH. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the facts in this case, and not to consume any of its time by any argument. An appropriation of $100,000 was asked for at the other end of this Capitol, at first. But $25,000 was allowed, however. Afterwards $25,000 more was allowed. The authorities then sent to this agent, or commissioner, or superintendent, or whatever he was, instructions that he should enter into no arrangement by which he should exceed that amount. He did exceed it, however, and now comes here and asks this Government to pay the debt which was contracted in violation of law. These are the facts. I trust the amendment will be voted down.

The question was then put, and the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move to amend the amendment, by striking it down to one dollar.

It has been urged by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. WALSH,] that the Government was bound to pay the debt, because it had established a general agency—because, he said, this agent was invested with general powers. Why, sir, there was no general power given to this agent. He was sent out for a purpose specified in this appropriation. He was a special agent appointed for a special purpose, and with limited powers. The agency was created by no law, other than the clause in the bill making the appropriation, a manner of authorizing new undertakings improper in my judgment, but often practicable here. He was specially instructed and restrained in relation to the sum of money he was to expend. He was limited to $25,000. I repeat, that this appropriation is for a matter in which this Government is not justly bound. The agent had no authority by law, except that I have alluded to, by which he was restricted to the sum of $25,000. He was authorized to go there and negotiate with these Indians to that extent, and not beyond it. The limitation is as plain as words can make it, and there is no principle in law, equity or common sense, that could hold an individual responsible in such a case, or that can hold a Government responsible. The debt was contracted, not by authority of law, but in direct disobedience to a specific law. Then, instead of being called upon to make this appropriation by which you would justify and cover up this transaction, let the first step be taken at the first proper time to call those offenders to the tribunal of the Legislature, and of the people of the country, for this gross and palpable violation of their public duty, in thus going on, when $25,000 were appropriated, and when they were instructed to limit their expenditures to that amount to expend over half a million of dollars. I will not undertake to say, what is the proper name of the act of which they are guilty, nor what punishment is due for such a violation of duty.

The gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY,] spoke of this amendment being supported by this side of the House. Why, sir, the only legal argument in its justification has come from the gentleman's side of the House, and was made by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. WALSH.]

Mr. WALSH. One word in reply to the gentleman from New Hampshire. The gentleman says this agent was limited in the amount he was to expend in the public service, and that he had no authority to contract beyond that amount. There was no such limit put upon him. Am I to be told that when you send a man abroad to purchase goods, and give him secret instructions that he is not to make any contract by which he shall pledge your credit to the amount of more than $25,000, yet that agent, in violation of your secret instructions, does pledge your credit to more than that amount, that you are not to be bound by that contract, and that it cannot be enforced against you? Why, sir, if that question were to come up before any court of justice in the country, it would have been scouted at. The limitation in this case is upon the amount, not upon the authority.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Is not every man, who contracts with a Government agent, bound by law to know his authority to make that contract?

Mr. WALSH. No, sir; he is not. When you send an agent into a country like California, the people of that section of country cannot possibly know upon what precise authority he comes, or what are the precise powers with which he is vested. Your laws, relating to this case were scarcely known there at all when this agent arrived for the purpose of negotiating with that people in relation to these Indians. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] denies this principle. Sir, I state it, without fear of successful contradiction. He may search the records of the British Government, from the time of its organization, and you cannot find a solitary instance in which they have protested the draft of a recognized agent. How are the people of a distant country to know the authority of your agent? A regard for public faith, as well as national character, should be preserved, no matter at what cost in dollars and cents.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maryland a question. The gentleman says the British Government never protests its drafts.

Mr. WALSH. No; not when they are by one of its recognized agents.

Mr. STANTON. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I ask if it is in the power of that Government to pay a cent which is not appropriated by Parliament?

Mr. WALSH. The British Government have uniformly paid its drafts when they come under the authority of its recognized agents. It has been paid them because the faith of the Government was pledged. It is true, Parliament inquires into such cases. It institutes precisely such inquiries as you have often done here to ascertain whether the parties ought to be trusted; and if they find they have been guilty of fraud, they will not pay until the parties present themselves in person before the public counsels.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will state a fact which will present this matter in a peculiar phase. I understand, when this $25,000 was appropriated, it was sent out with special instructions to the agent that he should make no contract by which this amount should be transcended. Then I understand—and the gentleman from California [Mr. McCORKLE] can state whether it be true—that when this amount had been expended, the agent declined to go on any further with the negotiations, by which he should make himself responsible. That he told them that if they went on to make any further contract involving a larger expenditure with him, they must look to the Government for their pay, for he had no authority.

Mr. WALSH. If that fact appears, of course it makes an end to my argument. I am stating legal principles, and if that fact which the gentleman has stated, be made to appear, why, upon that ground, it shows a want of bona fides upon the part of those contractors, who have contracted in the absence of all agency upon the part of the Government. If this fact is made to appear, there is an end of the argument; and these Government drafts are placed in a very different light.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then put, and the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move to amend the amendment by reducing the appropriation two dollars.

I think the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WALSH] is mistaken in some of the points in his argument, in reference to the legal principles which he lays down. It is very clear, as a principle of law, that a party contracting with an agent is bound to look to the authority upon which that agent acts, and not to purchase a draft upon the Government, except in exact pursuance of that authority. It is equally true, as contended by a gentleman upon this side of the House, that the laws of the land ought to be known, and that it is incumbent upon every one who deals with a public agent to know the exact law upon which he acts.

But I can imagine a case in which, if the agent have authority to draw a draft upon the Government for any particular amount, might impose upon an innocent purchaser of that draft. For instance, suppose you give him authority to draw drafts to the amount of $25,000; he might sell a draft to that amount to one person, and he might sell another draft to the same amount to another; and so he might sell a dozen drafts to that amount to as many different persons without any one of them knowing that the others had purchased the draft for the same money; or that the agent had exceeded his authority to that extent. But, sir, I apprehend the Government would not pay those drafts except upon the clear showing that these parties had been thus imposed on. It would present a question, then, for the Government to determine, whether these were actually innocent purchasers who had been imposed on by the agent, and that without the possibility of his knowing by the exercise of due diligence, that such a fraud had been perpetrated. It would present a doubtful case, upon which Congress might hesitate to determine, whether the drafts should be paid or not. Now, it may be possible, upon an investigation of the facts, that this money has been properly expended. It may be the duty of the Government, upon a full investigation of the facts connected with the matter, to pay those drafts. After such an investigation had been gone into, perhaps Congress might be disposed to appropriate the money. It may appear that although the agent has exceeded his authority, yet the money may have been expended in a manner advantageous to the Government; and upon which consideration it may be proper for the Government to pay it. But no such investigation has been made of the facts connected with this case. They are not before the House; and I do not see how we can properly vote this appropriation. If the gentleman from California [Mr. McCORKLE] has evidence that the money has been properly and advantageously expended, or that the parties purchasing the drafts have been innocently imposed on by the agent of the Government, let these facts be shown, and I for one will be willing to vote for the amount named in the amendment, or a much larger one if necessary. But at this time and in this mode, without the facts being brought clearly before the House, I think it would be wrong for us to vote it.

Mr. McCORKLE. I do not wish to be understood as indorsing in whole or in part the policy adopted by the Indian commissioners in California—no, sir, not one single official act of theirs, since they have been in that State; and I believe the Californians will unanimously concur with me in this wholesale condemnation of their whole course. It was not expected by any one conversant with affairs in California, that these commissioners, who were entirely ignorant of the character and habits of our Indians, would accomplish more than they have done—fooled the Indians, and plunged the Government in debt over half a million of dollars. The reservations of land, which they have set apart for different tribes of Indians, comprise, in some cases, the most valuable agricultural and mineral lands in the State—reservations which will not only not benefit the Indian, but will not be respected by the people of any State. But while I condemn the policy of the commissioners, I still maintain, that this Administration is responsible for the acts of these men, and this Government for the debts they have contracted. They were the regularly appointed and duly authorized agents of the Government for a specific purpose, and their powers not limited by the act appropriating $25,000. The object of the commission was to make treaties and secure peace with the Indians; they had full powers, and absolute instructions on this point; but only $25,000 was appropriated to enable them to carry out the purpose of their mission. If the agents of the Government in this case were limited and restricted in their operations, by the appropriation, how is it, that in other cases of a similar character, where the appropriation has fallen short, you are voting money to make up the deficiency? Your commissioners adopted a novel and peculiar policy, but specific. They had full power and authority to do so. In order to carry out that policy, and support it, they found it, as they supposed, necessary to feed and clothe the enemy, the hostile Indians. The citizens of California furnished the necessary supplies, and expect and have a right to demand payment.

Now, whether these commissioners had the power or authority to make the contracts under which the supplies were furnished to the Government by the citizens of California, I will not stop now to discuss. The powers of an agent, and the responsibility of the principle are well settled in "the books;" but I do not apprehend that this Government will take advantage of a technicality or a quibble to defraud innocent citizens of their just demands. The facts are clear, the contracts were made, the supplies furnished, and the simple question is, "Shall these persons be defrauded by the Government out of a certain amount of property, supplied to aid your commissioners in carrying out their own and the policy of the Administration in regard to the Indians of California?"

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from California, whether these drafts have been drawn and the supplies furnished, in order to comply with the treaty made by this agent, or to defray the expenses in making that treaty?

Mr. McCORKLE. I will answer the gentleman from Kentucky as well as I am able, from the facts in my knowledge. The drafts were drawn by the commissioners of supplies actually furnished. A certain portion of these supplies, as I have stated before, were used by the Indian commissioners, in order to obtain the consent and presence of the "root-diggers" to make treaties; the balance for the purpose of inducing the Indians to conform to and comply with the treaty stipulations—a compliance which will exist just so long as your beef holds out. I will read from the report of one of these Indian commissioners a passage which will give an idea of the policy adopted by them in their treaties with the Indians. He says:

"We have found, by experience, that the best way to keep these Indians quiet and peaceable, is to give them plenty of food, with beef occasionally, and a little flour to mix with the pulverized acorn, making their favorite panoli, nothing can induce them to quarrel with the whites. If ever the secret history of the late Indian disturbances is written, we have no doubt that nineteen out of twenty will be found to have their origin in direct aggression upon the part of unprincipled white men, or failure on their part to supply the Indians with beef and flour as the promised reward of their labor. We have, therefore, been under the necessity of making pretty liberal provisions under the head of 'subsistence,' and now advertise you that this course will have to be pursued throughout the whole State. The cost of beef in this part of the country varies from eight to fifteen cents per pound; in the southern part of the State, where the large ranchos are mostly situated, it can be bought much lower; say from three to five cents per pound. For present pressing demands we have to do the best we can, fully satisfied that our policy is correct, and that in the end, it is cheaper to feed the whole flock for a year than to fight them for a week."

There is the policy marked out by those Indian Commissioners, and in carrying out that policy these supplies have been furnished. It is for this House to say whether they will pay the debts incurred by these contracts or not.

As to the instructions given by the President to the commissioners, limiting them in their expenditures in treating with the Indians to the appropriation of $25,000, which was made at the last Congress, I have only to say, that a question is raised between the department and the commissioners—the former insisting that they sent out such instructions, and the latter averring that they did not receive them until after the contracts were made and the debt incurred. This is as I understand the matter, and as I have been informed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STANTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether we ought not to have the real facts before us before we are called upon to vote this money?

Mr. McCORKLE. I should be glad to furnish more facts, but they have not been called for by resolution, nor have they been furnished by the department. I am willing the matter should be postponed for the present if it is the wish of the committee.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. McCORKLE, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line two hundred and seventeen on page ten.

The amendment was then read, as follows:

"For expenses of continuing negotiations with the Indian tribes of Oregon lying west of the Cascade mountains, $12,000."

Mr. J. I will read a note in explanation of this amendment, and will then make a few remarks. The extract which I read is contained in a letter accompanying the estimates. It is this:

"The Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Oregon, on the subject of these items, remarks in reference to the first, that the amount is based upon the cost of treaties already made."

That is all that is said as to the item which I have offered as an amendment. The $12,000 is based upon the cost of the treaties already made, of which there are some nineteen or twenty. Those treaties, from what I can learn, have been made at very little cost comparatively to this Government; but what the nature of those treaties are, or under what circumstances they were made, does not appear, but that the superintendent of Indian affairs has acted with any disregard to the interests of the United States, so far as the treaties which have been already made are concerned, I do not know. As to the nature of the treaties already made, I am not able to state, nor the actual necessity for additional treaties, except in general terms. There is still a large number of tribes lying west of the Cascade mountains, with whom no treaties have been formed, and the Government deem it necessary to go on and make treaties with them. The department, then, make their estimates the amount of $12,000 as necessary for the purpose of continuing these negotiations. We know nothing, sir, in regard to the nature or circumstances of a part of those treaties which have already been made, more than that they are now in the Senate, and we heard nothing of their ratification thus far. My friend, the Delegate from Oregon, [Mr. LANE,] may be able to state the necessity of these treaties better than I feel myself able to do.

Mr. LANE. The amount offered by my friend from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] is to cover the exact amount recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and that amount, I think, is necessary to be appropriated for that purpose. There is in Oregon a state of things which has not existed in this country before. The history of the settlement of Oregon, and of its condition, is different from that of any other section of the Union. The white people have settled the country, without extinguishing the Indians' rights to any part of the territory. They have settled all over it. This Congress has made a donation of lands to the settlers in Oregon. It is necessary that the Indian rights should be extinguished. Negotiations for that purpose, under two sets of commissioners, have been carried on in Oregon. First, the Governor, and two other commissioners, entered into negotiations with the Indians for their possessory right to the soil. The plan of operation was changed, and a superintendent was appointed to treat with the Indians, and to purchase their right to the lands. When the second commissioner commenced operations, it was supposed that there was a balance of an appropriation that had been previously made on hand, sufficient to justify him to go on, and make treaties with the Indians. He had been induced to believe that there was some $6,000 yet in the hands of the first board. He proceeded to make his treaties, and to borrow money upon the faith of there being that amount of money in the hands of the first board. The money has been borrowed, and properly used, to the amount of $6,000; and as much more will be necessary, at least, to carry out the treaties. It is a small sum, and I have no doubt that it has been properly applied, and that the Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Oregon has, so far as I know, in all things studied economy. There is no evidence of extravagance there. This sum is the same precisely as that recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

[A message was here received from the President of the United States, by the hands of Millard P. Fillmore, his Private Secretary.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to say to the committee briefly, that the Committee of Ways and Means refused to allow this item, for two or three reasons, which we considered to be good. In the first place, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] is right in reading the explanation given to the item by the Indian bureau; but there is a mistake in point of fact. The very item for itself says, "For continuing the negotiation with the Indian tribes west of the Cascade mountains." Now, it is a mistake that the money has been already expended, and that it is for the purpose of continuing negotiations with these tribes west of the Cascade mountains.

Mr. LANE, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman allow me to explain?

Mr. HOUSTON. Five minutes do not allow of much explanation.

Mr. LANE. Six thousand dollars of that $12,000 has been already expended. It was expended in carrying out Indian treaties.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I am, at least, half right. And this shows that this appropriation ought not to be allowed, unless there are some controlling reasons why it should be. The Committee of Ways and Means, upon an examination of this subject, and upon a full conference with the superintendent of Indian Affairs, who is here, concerning the treaties which have been made in Oregon—some eighteen or twenty of them—brought out some very important facts in connection with these treaties and their merits. The Committee of Ways and Means believe that those facts disclose a state of things which rendered it necessary for them to withhold additional appropriations, until the Senate shall pass its judgment upon those treaties. I may be permitted to say—and if I am out of order in doing so, I do not intend it, for it is important that the committee should know the operation of these treaties—that one of these treaties, for instance, has been negotiated with a tribe which consisted of two men and five women; another with a tribe numbering two men and seven women; and other treaties of that character, so far as we have been able to obtain information from the Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Oregon. Now, sir, I believe that this presents a case that should induce this House to withhold additional appropriations, until we see what the Senate intends to do.

Another item connected with these treaties which I wish to speak of is this: I understand that all of these eighteen or twenty treaties, without exception, provide that the Indians shall remain upon, and keep the possession of their lands, and of their fishing places, and of everything else, until the expiration of ten years, and then they are expected to go away. Now, it occurred to me, and also to the Committee of Ways and Means, and I presume it will occur to this House, that this a most singular mode of making treaties with those Indian tribes. What guarantee, what security, have we that they will go away at the expiration of ten years? They are permitted to retain their property, permitted to remain upon their lands, and occupy them without any additional restraint, except that thrown over them by the presence of the white people. After paying them an annuity for ten years, we are to rely upon their willingness to leave the country. The Committee of Ways and Means concluded that that class of treaties had best be left until ratified in the Senate, before we appropriate more money to enable the agents to go on and complete other treaties of like character, which in all human probability, may, and will be rejected by the Senate.

Mr. LANE. I propose to add one hundred dollars, as an amendment to the amendment. I have not, Mr. Chairman, seen any one of the treaties made by the commissioners with the Indians in Oregon; nor do I know with how many tribes treaties have been made, nor the amount of money they have promised to pay to the tribes with whom they have treated, for the lands purchased of them. I know the Indians of that country, and all the tribes that live in the settled portions of Oregon Territory and west of the Cascade mountains. I know that the peace, prosperity, and success of the settlements in Oregon require that the right and title of the Indians to the land should be extinguished. I know that the Indians are broken up into small bands, and that every band maintains its nationality. No one connects itself with any other band or tribe, and if they have but three people in their tribe or band, they claim the country which their fathers claimed, and where they lived, and where their fathers are buried. And to extinguish their title it is necessary to treat with them, be they one or more. I do not know whether the policy has been wise in granting reservations to the Indians for a certain number of years. I think it has not been wise. I would have said to these Indians: "You must sell your entire right, and leave the settled portions of the country, and go to a section of country designated by the commissioner, outside of the settlements and out of the way of the white people, so that the whites should have the right to the land." I am inclined to think that some of these treaties make reservations covering many claims made by white men, who went out and settled there eight or ten years ago. But let that be as it may, I am satisfied that the Superintendent of Indian Affairs who made these treaties, for which he has used $6,000 in advance of an appropriation, acted in good faith, and that he has practiced as strict economy as he could. And I am satisfied, further, that when he commenced these negotiations he was induced to believe that the old board had the sum of $6,000 unexpended, and that upon the faith of that belief he borrowed money, and used it for the proper purpose, and I do not know that he has made any reservations of the character I speak of.

This amendment now asks for $12,000; $6,000 have already been expended in the purchase of the Indian rights to lands in the settled portions of the territory near the mouth of the Columbia river. The treaties, save the ratification, have been completed, and entirely so, as far as the superintendent of the board is concerned. Whether the Senate will ratify them or not, I am not prepared to say. I am inclined to think that there can be no objection to making this amendment, appropriating $12,000 to negotiate treaties with the Indians living west of the Cascade mountains, with whom treaties have not yet been made, and whose lands are in possession of the whites; who have made farms upon them, and who cannot have peace with the Indians except by having their rights extinguished. They are willing that the whites should have their lands, but they want some small compensation for them. If you give them that, they will be satisfied, and you will have peace with them.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was instructed by the committee on Indian Affairs to report this item to cover expenditures in treaties which have been made. I had not, nor had the committee at the time we acted upon this subject, any information as to the difficulties, irregularity, or strange condition of the treaties already made in Oregon, and now rumored about here, but not known. The money appropriated had been expended, and a small debt incurred. This is on the representation of the department, and the amount asked is but a reasonable sum. The bureau deem it for the best interests of the country that negotiations should continue with those Indians. The item was adopted by the committee; which instructed me to submit it to the House.

Mr. HIBBARD. If the gentleman will allow me to ask him one question, which is this: Inasmuch as these treaties are now before the Senate; as their nature is not well understood by gentlemen of the committee; and as the Indian general appropriation bill will soon be reported, will it not be sufficiently in season, for all necessary purposes, and better to postpone this appropriation to the time when action shall be had upon the general Indian bill?

Mr. JOHNSON. Already $6,000 have been expended; and $6,000 is recommended to us as necessary to continue negotiations. I am inclined to believe, notwithstanding the suspicion which has been thrown upon the character of these treaties, from statements which have been furnished me, since I have been sitting here—(I had not before an explanation of the difficulties presented by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, accompanying those treaties)—that we will act wisely, to appropriate the amount, the $6,000 already expended, and $6,000 more. I was not inclined to press this appropriation at the moment I first offered it. The Committee will recollect that I did not press it, leaving that to the Delegate from Oregon, [Mr. LANE,] who I believed would be better able to make its explanation. Since the Committee on Indian Affairs adopted the item, I began to hesitate and doubt, as to whether or not it was proper, from rumors that reached me. In regard to the suspicions raised by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, it was but proper that they should be presented here. Treaties have been made with small tribes, consisting of few in number—five in one case, and seven in another. I now understand that large tracts of country were owned by them. They were the only solitary members left in the world of once considerable and formidable tribes. They have but a few fishing huts, located along the fishing borders of that territory. By these treaties they are permitted to remain there for a short time, but we are in fact and in truth in the possession of the whole of their territory. They are only secured peaceably in possession of their huts and a limited tract of land to live upon. They are, it is shown, truly the owners of the land, the title of which they have surrendered to the United States, and a treaty was the only way in which we could extinguish their title, unless we—they being few in number—took it forcibly from them. There has been expended a very moderate amount of money by the agents of the Government, in connection with these particular Indian treaties. These negotiations have been among the most economical operations the Government has ever known. It is but just and right, that we should give full credit to those who have acted as the agents of the Government in this case, when we see in other States so much disregard of the principles of economy, in conducting our public affairs. I believe the appropriation is right, and ought to be passed.

Mr. DUNHAM. In the estimates, I find that this sum is asked, not to pay the expenses already made, but to continue in the making of these treaties, and the estimates for the future are based upon the expense heretofore made.

Mr. JOHNSON. With the consent of the committee, I will reply to the gentleman. At the time I presented this amendment, I had but little information with respect to it; but I now find it stated upon this floor that a portion of this appropriation has already been expended. I think the gentleman from Oregon made the statement. In my first remarks you will find that I did not say a word about a portion being expended.

Mr. LANE. I have it, Mr. Chairman, from the Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Oregon, who is now present, that $6,000 of this money has been expended in negotiating with the Indians residing in that section of country near the mouth of the Columbia river. That much money, I have no doubt, has been expended, and is now due.

Mr. L. then, with the unanimous consent of the committee, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move, sir, to strike out $12,000 and insert $6,000. It seems to me, if this item passes at all, that the committee will see the propriety of such a course as that indicated by my amendment, taking it for granted, as I stated before, that $6,000 of this money has been actually expended. If it be true that that amount has been expended, we should make an appropriation to cancel the debt thus incurred. I must say, however, that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in sending in his estimates, did not deal fairly by us, because he has sent in the estimates for continuing appropriations which he has stated expressly to be based upon treaties already made. Supposing $6,000 has been expended, I submit to the committee whether we should appropriate $6,000 more to go on with these treaties until we know whether they are to be ratified and confirmed by the Senate? It is known to all that these treaties are objectionable; and it must strike every one as being extraordinary that the Department should ask for appropriations for expenditure in making treaties with six, seven, or eight persons. It seems to me that we ought to wait until these treaties have been understood and acted upon by the other branch of Congress, before we appropriate money to make others of similar character. I, therefore, trust that this amendment will be adopted. I offer it in good faith, and because I think it ought to be adopted. We ought to appropriate for the expenses already incurred, but we should wait to see the propriety of going on to appropriate more.

Mr. STANLY. I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is to reduce the amendment of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means from $12,000 to $6,000. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will not be adopted. The Committee of Ways and Means, although so much fault has been found with them by gentlemen upon the other side of this House, have deserved the credit, at least, of being warm advocates of economy. They cut down this appropriation beyond what the department wanted. The gentleman from Oregon, if I understand him, says that $12,000 is necessary. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs says that it is; and he asks the House that it should be increased to that amount; and I think the House will do so, as gentlemen in their positions are supposed to possess more knowledge about it than the rest of us. Let us make that appropriation of $12,000. I hope my friend and colleague upon the committee from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] will not vote against it, although it is advocated by gentlemen upon this side of the House. I regret, sir, that a little while ago my friend from Maryland [Mr. WALSH] thought fit to advocate another appropriation, because it gave my friend from New Hampshire the chance of saying, The other (Whig) side advocates it. His idea is, sir, that if any one Whig makes a speech out of order, like that of my friend from Florida, [Mr. CABELL,] at the first part of this session, on the presidential election, it justified fifty Democrats in doing the same thing. Now, they have a large majority over us; and if my friend, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, will keep his disorderly folks, his uncontrollable men, under control, we shall get along with the public business, and finish the deficiency bill sometime before the end of October. [Laughter.] But if we go on, with amendment after amendment, cutting down appropriations five dollars upon which to hang five minute speeches—and there are twenty speeches made on the other side of the House to one of ours—we will not get through the bill until the month of August. I hope the amendment will not be cut down.

Mr. LANE. I imagine the committee are willing to adopt this amendment. If I thought it were so, I would not say another word. I move to add twenty dollars to the appropriation. I will not occupy five minutes. I wish merely to state that I desire the committee shall understand everything in relation to Oregon, and I hope we never will have a state of things there which will make it necessary to conceal anything. The Indian title to the lands west of the Cascade mountains has not been extinguished. Six thousand dollars of this appropriation has been expended already in purchasing Indian rights to a portion of that country. I want to say to this committee, that of the country north of the Columbia river, and west of the Cascade mountains, upon which thousands of white men are living, and twenty thousand Indians, not a foot has been purchased—the right of the Indians has not been extinguished to a single foot. Towns and cities are being laid off upon Indian lands; but the owners and proprietors cannot sell their town lots, giving any kind of conveyance, until the Indian right is extinguished. There are many good reasons why these negotiations should progress without delay, that that country may have the advantage of the extinguishment of the title of the Indians to their lands, especially to that portion of country within the settlements. I have said enough to satisfy the committee that this appropriation ought to pass.

Mr. L., with unanimous consent, then withdrew his amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. JOHNSON's amendment.

Mr. HIBBARD. I have a word to say, and it may as well be said in reply to the gentleman's amendment. I object to the withdrawal of the amendment. I hope it will not be adopted, and also that the appropriation as it now stands will not be agreed to by the Committee. It will be borne in mind, as has already been stated, that these treaties are pending before the Senate. They are questionable in their character. There may be involved grave questions touching their adoption.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman this question: He and the gentleman from Indiana seem to assume that because a treaty has not been ratified by the Senate, therefore the expenses of that treaty ought not to be paid. Do I understand that to be their objection?

Mr. HIBBARD. I do not make that assertion. It may or may not follow. The course to be taken by that committee, and the House, in making appropriations, may be essentially modified by the facts developed in the examination of the treaties before the Senate. Facts may appear which would make it proper for the Government to refuse to pay anything, or to withhold a part, or to pay all. I do not wish to say what those results will prove to be, because I do not know what the facts are. I have heard rumors of the same things alluded to by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and other reports. I have heard them about the House, and I do not know that they are correct. I do not wish to broach them, because they may be wrong; but of one thing I am certain. No one who knows the gentleman from Oregon, [Mr. LANE,] will, for a moment, believe or suspect that he will ask for an appropriation for anything which he supposes to be tainted by fraud, or anything dishonorable. I know that he would spurn from him aught of that kind, if he knew of it. It is, asserted, however, that there is something rotten in this Denmark. I know not how it may be, and I will wait to see. The general Indian appropriation bill is before the Committee of Ways and Means. It will be ere long before the House. It has been reported from the Committee of Ways and Means; and, when it is taken up to be acted upon, there will be ample time to consider this whole measure. We will then have light. Now, a word to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY,] who seems to have the political aspect of all questions in his especial view and keeping. He misunderstood me, in supposing me to think that because they did wrong upon that side of the House, that it would justify us in doing so here. Far from that, sir; we would then be justified in sin, and that continually. I will give the gentlemen their proper due. For the much good precept, but little of good practice, which has come from the other side of the House, I am heartily thankful. I am obliged to the gentleman from North Carolina for his preaching, and, for aught I know, he has practiced it on this occasion; but it comes with a bad grace from that quarter. For one, I call the committee to witness, that it has been notorious in our action upon these amendments to the deficiency bill—these enormous humps added to the camel's back, strained almost to breaking already, that nearly the whole body of the gentleman's political associates upon this floor have voted for every one of them. By a sort of instinct, that, I dare say, they came honestly by—for it is natural to the party, whenever there is proposed any grabbing or filching from the Treasury—they go for it. There have been honorable exceptions to this rule; but it is the rule, as everybody here is aware, and as the record shows. And so far as the gentleman from North Carolina has been an exception, and to the extent he has been so, I congratulate him and the country. Precept is good, but practice is better. His preaching has been good. The effect upon his political friends is as I have stated; and I wish to state it as a fact, and let it go out with the discussion to the country. These extraordinary, and, in my judgment, improper additions, have been made to this bill mainly by the votes of its Whig friends. The last feather that may break the camel's back, may have already been put upon it. I hope the committee will put on no more, and I will respond a hearty amen to the exhortation of my friend from North Carolina.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I wish to make an amendment, adding one hundred dollars to the amount of appropriation, for the purpose of saying a few words in reply to the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. HIBBARD.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that that amendment cannot be discussed, it having been withdrawn.

Mr. STANTON. I propose, then, to add a thousand. The state of the case in dispute is simply this, as I understand, that treaties have been made with the Indians—made by the treaty-making power, under the laws of the land. It is true, that the making of these treaties by the Executive does not make it imperative upon the Senate to adopt them. They are not treaties until they are ratified by the Senate; but the expenses have legally and properly incurred, and the obligation of the Government to pay them, is undoubted, in my judgment, and is a part of the deficiency. If these facts are true, I cannot see how the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] can talk about breaking the camel's back, which I suppose means breaking the Treasury of the United States, by imposing $12,000 for expenses that have been incurred by the legitimate operations of this Government. Six thousand dollars, I understand, to be asked for to pay debts already legitimately incurred by the treaty-making power of this Government. There is no charge of extravagance or impropriety of conduct, unless it is an impropriety in negotiating with the remnant of the tribe.

Mr. HIBBARD. The gentleman misunderstood me. My camel was the bill, which, I am afraid, my friends upon the other side would kill by loading it down with excessive kindness.

Mr. STANTON. I think remarks of that kind are altogether improper. The question is, ought this amount to be paid? Is it legitimate—is it proper? And if it be so, how can you break the back of this bill? How can you render it unpopular? Is there any man, who is disposed to repudiate the debts of the Government acknowledged to be legitimate? Does the gentleman ask simply that this appropriation shall be postponed until another bill comes up? When it is admitted to be correct in every item, why should it be postponed? The debt is already incurred, and the deficiency clear and unequivocal. Now, I say to my Democratic friend [Mr. HIBBARD] upon the other side of the House, that he is doing injustice to his own party, by making objections of this kind, and placing them upon party grounds. If this is a correct appropriation, it ought to be passed. It ought to be passed here in this bill, and I, for one, am disposed to vote for it; and I think that the party to which the gentleman belongs, and to which I claim to belong, can well bear the odium of voting the appropriation of $6,000 for liabilities incurred by the Government in pursuance of its legitimate operations. Where treaties have been made by the Executive, which have been rejected by the Senate, we cannot repudiate the legitimate expenses incurred.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will state, in regard to the discrepancy which has been referred to, that it occurs in the most natural manner in the world. The time which it takes to bring communications here from Oregon is very great. The estimates made here for these $12,000 were made sometime last May or June. They were transmitted, and reached here about the time Congress met. They were furnished then with the commentaries which accompany the estimates. After the meeting of Congress, the superintendent reached here, bringing up the record of the facts that occurred since the time of making out his estimates. Since that time the sum of $6,000 had been expended. Then, to give him, the superintendent, proper credit, I state that, in connection with the $6,000 itself, the cost of the whole of the nineteen treaties made in Oregon has been only $26,000—the six thousand now asked for being included.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not rise so much for the purpose of discussing this proposition, for I said before, what I wished to say. I now repeat that which I said in reference to the provisions of these Indian treaties, which was communicated to the Committee of Ways and Means by the superintendent of Indian Affairs himself, and which was no doubt correct. I said precisely what he communicated upon the interrogatories of that committee. It has been spoken of by one or two gentlemen as if reflections may have been cast upon the commissioners who negotiated the treaties; but I did not intend anything of the sort, and nothing of the kind escaped me. I attempted to show to the committee present, and I desire now to repeat it, that the question presented is, are you willing to continue this kind of negotiation? Are you willing to keep up negotiations for the purpose of forming treaties like this until the Senate shall pass upon them? Now, I feel it due to the Committee of Ways and Means, to state this additional fact.

The distinct, clear, and unequivocal impression left upon my mind, and I have no doubt upon the minds of all the Committee of Ways and Means, was, that none of this $12,000 had been expended. I may have misunderstood the superintendent, but that was the impression under which we labored, and the committee will remember it when they refer to the fact, that we had originated another item for the superintendent's house, which I am required to offer as an amendment.

I do not profess to control the vote of any member of this committee. I do not profess to keep in control any members of the committee. God knows, it is enough for me to do, to keep myself in proper order. [Laughter.] I try to do it. I appeal to this committee, and every member of it, to know whether I have been instrumental in prolonging the debate or investigation of this bill. I have offered no amendments except those which I was instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer. I have not offered amendments that would give me an opportunity of speaking, even. When I did speak, I desired to speak to the point in issue before the committee at the time. For the reason that I was not going either to set or follow a bad example, I was determined I would forego any explanation which I might think I could offer rather than set the example of offering amendments merely for the purpose of making a speech. Every member of the committee knows that I have abstained from it. Every member of the committee knows that I have endeavored to prosecute the investigation here, day in and day out, for weeks together. I have endeavored to get the committee to sit out this bill to-day, and I hope they will do it, and for the purpose of getting along as speedily as possible, I will close before my five minutes are out.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

The question then recurring on Mr. JOHNSON'S amendment, it was taken, and decided in the affirmative.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer the following amendment:

For the completion of the buildings for the house of the superintendent and the Indian agents in Oregon, $3,000.

The reason that was not in the bill was because the committee did not possess the information to enable them to know whether it was properly located, and they supposed that it was for the purpose of building an agency which was not commenced. From the information, however, received by the committee, the house is completed and the amount is due the workmen.

Mr. STANLY. I hope that whatever amendments the honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means may offer will be adopted, because I am sure he offers nothing here that is not consistent with the most rigid economy—nothing that his sense of duty does not compel him to offer. In any remarks I may have made about the conduct of gentlemen on the other side of the House, I thought I had distinctly excepted the conduct of the chairman of the Ways and Means.

Mr. HOUSTON. I did not take any exception to it.

Mr. STANLY. I think he leans a little too rigidly to the economy side. I know he will not take that unkindly. But when I spoke of his course here, I spoke of him as the representative of the majority who have the control of this body. He must keep his friends in order, and make them stand up to him, or place the responsibility upon them. We must look to him for the finishing of this bill. His party must hear the sound of his voice, and come when he says so, or there can be no party organization on his side of the House. That is all I have to say upon that point.

The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] says that these appropriations come from this side of the House. I take issue with him, and I call for the proof. I most respectfully deny the fact. As far as my recollection of this debate goes, all the amendments increasing the appropriations have come from the other side. I mention it not reproachfully, but to the honor of the gentlemen who have offered them. I think I have voted for most of the amendments relating to Indian affairs. What induced gentlemen to offer these amendments? I hope a sense of duty. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] knows what the people of Oregon require. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs knows what is required for that branch of the service, and these are the particular friends of the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. HIBBARD. To save the gentleman further trouble, I will say that he wholly misunderstood me. I said that the amendments were voted for chiefly by gentlemen on the Whig side of the House.

Mr. STANLY. I deny that fact, and call for the proof.

Mr. HIBBARD. We will call the yeas and nays when we get into the House and prove it.

Mr. STANLY. When the yeas and nays are called, the Whigs will come up and face the music. I have no doubt the gentleman from New Hampshire would vote for half a dozen things here in committee, which he would not stand up to in the House. That is an old game of New Hampshire politicians—begging my friend's pardon. [Laughter.] But with respect to the votes for these amendments, I take issue with the gentleman, and respectfully deny the fact.

Mr. HIBBARD. I have voted against all these amendments.

Mr. STANLY. That may be, but you patted somebody else on the back, and said the appropriations were necessary. [Laughter.] I know the gentleman's mode of doing business. He is a shrewd, clever Yankee. The gentleman would vote an appropriation for Portsmouth navy-yard, New Hampshire, and would beg fifty other Democrats to vote for it, and pass it through the committee, and then he would vote against the whole bill, if he thought it was sure to pass; but if it was to fail by his vote, he would turn a somerset from the rotunda to the Clerk's desk to be in time to move a reconsideration. [Laughter.] That is the policy of the gentleman from New Hampshire. He talks about our "grabbing and gouging the Treasury." How are we "gouging?" Gentlemen on this side of the House—and I say it to their credit—only want to gouge from the Treasury when the necessities of the Government require it.

Now, as to my preaching: I am very much obliged to the gentleman for saying that he listens to my preaching. I am afraid it is the only good preaching he has heard this session, and if he would only conform to the preaching he hears on this side of the House, he would become a better Whig or a better union Democrat.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. POLK moved to amend the amendment by decreasing the amount one dollar.

Mr. P. said: The gentleman from North Carolina upon every occasion that he has taken the floor during the last ten days—indeed, ever since his bloody conflict with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GIMBINS], which consumed none of the time of the House, has been upbraiding this side of the House with obstructing the public business. Sir, I undertake to tell that gentleman that he may turn to the Congressional Globe, and look through the debates of this House, and he will find that as much, if not more, of the public time has been consumed by gentlemen belonging to his party, as by gentlemen on this side of the House, and more by the gentleman from North Carolina than by any given man. But we, because we are in a majority, are to be held responsible.

Sir, was there ever in the history of Congress, a deficiency bill involving so much interest, that had so rapid a progress as this has had? No, never. Then, why this talk? It has even gone into the Republic this morning. The gentleman from North Carolina heralds it here, and the Republic spreads it throughout the land, that we are obstructing the public business, while the gentlemen opposite are consuming time in the discussion of the abolition question. The debate between the gentlemen from Massachusetts, the one between the two gentlemen from Ohio, that between the gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from Ohio, and other debates of that character, which have originated on the other side of the House, have consumed—I hazard nothing in saying—more time than any of the unpleasant debates which have originated on this side of the House. Refer to the Congressional Globe, and mark the progress of the debates, and I believe the fact will be established.

Mr. STANLY. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. POLK] speaks of "the bloody conflict" that I had with the gentleman from Ohio. Now, sir, I beg once for all to say to that gentleman and to the committee, that of that conflict I am very much ashamed. [Laughter.]

Mr. POLK. I have no doubt the gentleman is, and I will withdraw the reference I made to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. STANLY; (bowing to Mr. Polk.) I see that the gentleman is not such a violent Democrat that he has not got some little shame left in him. I congratulate him upon it.

Mr. POLK. I am ashamed for you, sir.

Mr. STANLY. I thank him. I was about to say that as to this "bloody conflict," I promise the House and the country, to use the remark of an editor in New York, who scolded me very much about it, that during my stay in this House I will "get upon all fours no more to fight a dog." [Laughter.] I should not have referred to that matter, but for the scolding of the gentleman upon the other side.

The gentleman from Tennessee is altogether mistaken upon a point of fact. If he will do me the favor to refer to the Congressional Globe, he will see by the position I have occupied, that he is altogether mistaken. But, if the gentleman is disposed to raise an issue between himself and myself, I can show that he has had more to do out of this House, if I understand his peregrinations, than any other ten gentlemen in it.

Mr. POLK. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. STANLY. The gentleman from Tennessee is very often out of this House, engaged in more pleasant occupation than listening to the manly, hoarse voices that mingle in the debates here. There are sweeter sounds that lure him from this Hall. He likes "to tread the primrose path of dalliance." He likes to see fine dancing, and to hear pleasant singing, better than to listen to the hoarse "croakings"—as he calls them—of men's voices here. The gentleman from Tennessee has been too often absent to keep strict and watchful account of my doings here. Let the gentleman refer to the Congressional Globe, and he will find that there have been ten speeches on the other side of the House for every speech that has been made on this side. Since the gentleman has raised the issue between us, I refer the House and the country to the columns of the "Globe;" and I say that he is more responsible for the time which has been consumed here than I am, or shall be this session. I have endeavored to get this bill through. Nobody has tried harder to do it than I have. I have uniformly supported the chairman of Ways and Means in his efforts. I have never talked but to the purpose. Only once have I consumed the whole of my five minutes' time, and I shall not do it now.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. POLK. I move to amend the amendment by increasing the appropriation two dollars. I did not anticipate, when I made the remarks which I did, that the gentleman from North Carolina would go into an investigation of the time that I have been in the House, and the time that I have been absent from it. I did not go into that sort of an investigation of his conduct, and I should condemn myself if I undertook to investigate, even in general terms, the conduct of my fellow-members upon this floor in that respect. But I can say to the gentleman from North Carolina, that I will refer to the journal, and I shall be found as regular in attendance as he has been. I will say to him that I have been in as constant attendance, and that I have paid as strict attention to the public business as he has. And I will say to him further, that when he reflects upon having cast such a reflection upon a member as that of not attending to his public duties, constituting himself the judge, he should be ashamed of it, as he was of his conflict with the Abolitionist from Ohio. It is a thing that I would not do. It is a thing that I would not herald to the country to affect any member before his constituents. Unless I could produce facts, I would not hazard my reputation by stating a thing which was not correct, according to the records of the House.

Mr. STANLEY. I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. The gentleman says he did not anticipate an investigation into his conduct when he commenced this discussion. I have no doubt of it. If he had he would not have cast the first stone about my consuming the public time. The gentleman began it. Was it not as fair for me to say that he consumed time out of the House, as for him to say that I did it in the House? The gentleman commenced it. I made no allusion to him. I was discussing matters regularly and legitimately. There is nobody in this House who has more to fear from an investigation as to inattention to business, than the gentleman from Tennessee.

He says he would have been ashamed if he had done as I have done. I am much obliged to the gentleman. I do not design to indulge in personalities. I can only say that if he continues to talk in that way, I fear I shall have other conflicts to be ashamed of besides that with the member from Ohio.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. LANE. I move to amend the clause providing for the traveling expenses of the superintendent of Indian affairs in Oregon, by striking out "$2,000" and inserting "$4,000."

I think that is just the sum which is required to pay the traveling expenses of this superintendent. It is the amount asked for in the estimates of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and, as I said, I believe it is little enough. I hope, therefore, the committee will agree to adopt the amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. As there seems to be a disposition to get along with this bill, I will not go into a full explanation of the facts in the case. I will merely say, that the Committee of Ways and Means, upon a full investigation of the case, and upon a full conversation with the superintendent himself, came to the conclusion that $2,000 was all that was necessary, and therefore they put that amount into the bill.

Mr. LANE. I ask the gentleman if he understood from the superintendent of Indian affairs that $2,000 was sufficient?

Mr. HOUSTON. I did not. But from his conversation, and from the investigation made by the Committee of Ways and Means, we came to that conclusion ourselves, and therefore we adopted that sum.

The question was then put, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MEADE moved a pro forma amendment to the clause providing for the balance due the Ottawa and the Chippewa Indians, under the fifth article of the treaty of 1836.

He said, I desire that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will explain this section of the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is for an appropriation of $624 22, for the fulfillment of our treaty with those Indians, and is ultimately carried to the surplus fund of the Indian bureau. I learn that the practice of that bureau is, that they do not feel themselves bound to carry to the surplus fund money, according to the general construction of the law requiring it to be done, but they keep those sums of money until the objects for which they were appropriated have passed by. In this case, they supposed it would not become necessary; but it really has become necessary that the sum should be appropriated to meet the demands upon the bureau by our treaty stipulations.

Mr. MEADE then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. LANE. I move to amend by adding the following, as an independent clause:

For the erection of a warehouse in which to store goods designed for issue to Indians, $5,000.

[Cries of "Vote it down."]

Mr. LANE. Before the Committee vote down the amendment, I think it would be well to call their attention to some facts connected with it. I understand that when the commissioner made out his report upon the facts presented to him, he asked for $5,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a point of order. The amendment is clearly out of order. It is for a new work, and is not a deficiency at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. LANE. I would like to give some reasons why it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

[In consequence of a storm about three o'clock p. m., which had suddenly arisen, the Hall had become so dark, as to render it almost impracticable to proceed with business.]

Mr. ORR. It is so dark that we cannot go on with business; I move that the committee do now rise.

[Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

The question was put, and on a division thirty-four rose in the affirmative.

The CHAIRMAN. There is evidently a majority in the negative.

Mr. ORR. It is so dark, the Chair could not tell how many voted. I ask that the other side be counted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided that the noes have it.

Mr. ORR. I ask that the other side be counted, and I have the right to demand it.

The noes were then counted, and the committee refused to rise—ayes 33, noes 82.

The following clause to the bill was then read:

"For the contingent expenses of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Minnesota, viz: "

"For printing and publishing the Revised Statutes, making an index thereto, and superintending their publication, $4,500.

"For binding the Revised Statutes, $300."

Mr. SIBLEY. I move to strike out the clause providing for binding the revised statutes, and to insert the following:—

For necessary extra clerks during the latter part of the sessions of the Legislative Assembly, binding the Revised Statutes, and other necessary incidental expenses, $2,000.

I do not propose to take up the time of this committee by any remarks upon this amendment. I will merely state the fact that it is in accordance with the estimates of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, indorsed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and sent to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIBLEY submitted the following amendment, which was agreed to, viz:

For payment of Messrs. Babcock, Wilkinson & Holcombe, for revising the laws of Minnesota, each $500.

The following clause was then read, viz:

"For outfits of Chargés d'Affaires to Denmark and Bolivia, $9,000."

Mr. GOODENOW. I wish to amend that clause by adding the following:

And for additional compensation to a commissioner to the Sandwich Islands, $3,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. I think that amendment is not in order. It provides for a new salary, and is not a deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment not in order.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to offer the following amendment:

To supply the deficiency in the appropriations for the relief of the American citizens lately imprisoned and pardoned by the Queen of Spain, $3,000.

I received this morning, from the acting Secretary of State, written under the direction of the President of the United States, a letter, requesting the additional appropriation to be made. There was accompanying the letter from the Secretary, a communication from Mr. Whittlesey, the First Comptroller of the Treasury, containing the actual amount which had been expended for the relief of these prisoners. There is a deficiency of $2,016 55, and there are other accounts which have not yet come in. Under the original law providing for the relief of those persons it is provided that the relief shall be restricted to the expenditure of so much as may be necessary to pay the expenses incurred. If this appropriation should be found too large by a few dollars, therefore no injury will ensue. A part of these expenses have been actually paid by the Department, and it is a case which demands immediate action.

Mr. HOUSTON. It seems, by the shape in which the gentleman from Virginia now offers this amendment, that he is to settle our accounts in that quarter in advance. Now, if he was satisfied as to the true amount, and could tell this committee what it would be, it would be a different matter. But he tells us there are still outstanding accounts which have not come in. He asks for a certain amount now; but we cannot tell but we yet have to make still another appropriation afterwards.

Mr. BAYLY. If the gentleman will allow me I will say that the Comptroller, Mr. Whittlesey, is as rigid an economist as can be found in this country, and it is obvious that if we should appropriate a few dollars too much, nothing would be lost. I will read the letter of the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, }

WASHINGTON, March 25, 1852.

SIR: By the President's direction I have the honor to transmit, herewith inclosed, a letter addressed to this Department by the First Comptroller of the Treasury, containing a statement of the expenses already incurred in relieving the necessities of those citizens of the United States, members of the late Lopez expedition against Cuba, who were taken to Spain and have been pardoned and released by the Queen of that country. You will notice that the Comptroller reports a deficiency in the amount appropriated by the act of Congress of the 10th ultimo, and suggests a further appropriation of $3,000. To this suggestion the President directs me to invite your particular attention.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. HUNTER, Acting Secretary.

Hon. THOMAS H. BAYLY,
Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives.

The communication of the Comptroller is the following:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, }

COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, March 24, 1852.

SIR: By an act approved on the 10th of February, 1852, there was appropriated the sum of $6,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary, for the relief of American citizens lately imprisoned and pardoned by the Queen of Spain, and who were without the limits of the United States, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States.

You were pleased, under the authority of the President, to commit the settlement of the expense of said persons, to the Fifth Auditor and First Comptroller.

Joel D. Hughes and Fenton B. Hough, two of said American citizens, were conveyed from Vigo to Gibraltar, and Horatio S. Sprague, consul at Gibraltar, shipped them from thence to Boston, as American distressed seamen, in the brig Oak, at a compensation of $10 for the passage of each.

They were allowed for working their passage at the rate of $15 a month each, amounting to..... $52 00

Captain Jacob T. Woodbury, master of the American ship Prentice, has been paid for conveying from Vigo to New York, ninety-five of said persons, at $40 each, the sum of..... 3,800 00

G. H. M. Donald, one of said American citizens, being at Southampton, England, Joseph Rodney Crosby, American consul, provided for him and paid his passage to the United States. The bill and draft were approved by Mr. Lawrence, at London, and paid..... 30 50

$3,882 50

Mr. Barringer, American Minister in Spain, on the 13th of January, 1852, authorized Don Manuel Barceno, vice-consul of the United States at Vigo, to contract with Captain Jacob Woodbury, of the American ship Prentice, to convey ninety-five of said persons from Vigo to the United States, at $40 each person. Such contract was made in writing, and signed, sealed, and delivered in due form.

The persons were delivered in New York according to the contract, of which Mr. Maxwell, the collector, furnished proof; and the said sum of $3,800 was paid to Captain Woodbury.

Amount of appropriation.....$6,000 00
Drawn and paid.....3,882 50
This sum undrawn.....$2,117 50

A draft was drawn by Mr. Barceno, on 23d of February last, in favor of Frederick Huth & Co., of London, upon the Department of State, at fifteen days' sight for...$4,134 05
The above sum undrawn.....2,117 50

This sum deficient to cover expenses.....$2,016 55

Accounts accompany this draft or bill, for board, clothing, and medicines, to an amount equal to the draft or bill, which are stated with great minuteness; and I have no doubt they embrace such expenses as Congress intended to pay. It is not improbable that other bills to a small amount may be presented. It is necessary to have an additional appropriation to pay the draft last mentioned.

I think an estimate of $3,000 would be sufficient to cover all the expenses that may be presented.

Most sincerely and respectfully yours,

ELISHA WHITTLESEY.

Hon. DANIEL WEBSTER, Secretary of State.

Mr. B. Now, it is obvious that nothing can be lost by making this appropriation. There is already an actual deficiency of $2,016 55.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, let it go. Let it go.

The following clause was then read:

"For compiling, printing, and binding the Biennial Register for 1851, in addition to the amount appropriated per act of 3d March, 1851, $3,200."

Mr. HOUSTON. I propose, sir, to offer an amendment, under the instructions of the Ways and Means Committee, reducing that amount of $3,200 to $1,800. It is done, sir, in pursuance of a request from the Ways and Means Committee and the Secretary of State, who wish this amount to be reduced to $1,800.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. There are other amendments, sir, which I have been instructed to offer by the Committee of Ways and Means, two or three of which are very essential, I suppose. I propose the following:

For the trial and maintenance of the light at Waugasham, Michigan, $1,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is for the purpose of testing this light-house before it is passed over from one department to the control of another.

Mr. FITCH. I do not see how that light-house comes into this deficiency bill. We have a light-house system, and I think a deficiency bill is not a proper place for it.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is true. But in the remaining portion of the fiscal year it is desired by the Government to test the sufficiency of this light-house and its various apparatus, for the purpose of seeing whether it comes up to the contract under which it was built.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have another amendment to offer under the instructions of the Committee of Ways and Means. It is as follows:

For expenses incurred in laying down gas pipes, fixtures, and so forth, into and around the northeast Executive building, $400.

A MEMBER. What is that "so forth" for?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will strike out the "so forth" if you please.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. Here is an amendment which I suppose will explain itself, which is submitted under the direction of the Committee of Ways and Means.

For purchasing, walling, and ditching a piece of land near the city of Mexico, for a cemetery or burial-ground, for such of the officers and soldiers of this army in our late war with Mexico as fell in battle, or died, in and about said city, and for the interment of American citizens who have died or may die in said city, $1,480 34.

Mr. HOUSTON. That was the balance found to be due after the purchase and erection of all the works they have there.

Mr. EVANS. Ten thousand dollars were appropriated last year.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Secretary of State writes and says that this much is due after the settlement of the accounts.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. Here is another amendment, which the House will understand, for it has been before the House already. I submit it under the direction of the Committee of Ways and Means:

And be it further enacted, That there be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in sums sufficient to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for printing four hundred and fifty copies of the estimates of appropriations for the service of the fiscal year 1853, at the rate paid by him for the printing of the Treasury Department by contract, under the provisions of the seventeenth section of the act of the 26th of August, 1842.

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee desire, in reference to this matter, to offer an explanation, which is this: That this printing bill, which was before this House at an early stage of this session, was referred, as you will remember, to the Committee on Printing, who returned it again, and it was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, to make this appropriation. The bill, as charged by the public printer, is about $1,000. The Committee of Ways and Means not being possessed of data sufficient to say whether it was correct or not, proposed that the Secretary of the Treasury should pay it, if it did not exceed the rate he was paying under his contract price.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. WOODWARD. I rise to propose the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That no part of the appropriations herein made, or hereafter to be made, for the benefit of any tribe, or part of a tribe of Indians, shall be paid to any attorney or agent of such tribe, or part of a tribe, but it shall, in every case, be paid directly to the Indians themselves, and "per capita," unless the imperious interests of the Indians shall require the payment to be made collectively, nor shall the Executive branch of the Government hereafter recognize any contract between any tribe, or part of a tribe, and any attorney or agent, for the prosecution of any claim against the Government."

Mr. STANLY. I rise to a point of order. Is that amendment in order upon this bill? There is no deficiency there, sir. I should like to understand this.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of order is not debatable.

Mr. JOHNSON. It controls and directs the disposition of the appropriations therein contained, and establishes a general law which cuts off those agencies and corruptions complained of so much.

Mr. GENTRY. Payments will cease after we cut off the agents.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment, so far as it proposes a general law, is not in order.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I submit whether it is not in order, for the purpose of directing the mode of the payment of the money appropriated by this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair states that, if the amendment purported to confine itself to the manner in which payments of money appropriated in this bill should be paid, it would be in order.

Mr. GENTRY. It is much in the nature of a proviso to an appropriation.

Mr. HALL. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The Chair has decided that that part of the amendment is in order which regulates and directs the course of payments of the appropriations in this bill for Indian affairs. I rise to ask the Chair whether or not both parts of the amendment are not so intimately connected that they cannot be separated?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state, that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WOODWARD] may withdraw his amendment, and modify it to suit his pleasure.

Mr. JOHNSON. He cannot withdraw it. It is the best thing for the Government that has been offered for the last three weeks. We will never have an opportunity again to offer it.

Mr. DUNHAM. I submit to the Chair whether, under the rules of the House, he has a right to withdraw it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman may withdraw his amendment after a question of order is raised, and the Chair has decided the amendment out of order.

Mr. DUNHAM. But we can take an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that an appeal cannot affect it.

Mr. DUNHAM. I submit how can that decision be made under the express rules of the House?

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask for the reading of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. WOODWARD.] Any one who hears it will say it is right.

The amendment was accordingly read, as above inserted.

Mr. STANLY. What does the Chair decide? The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides, that inasmuch as this amendment purports to create a general law in relation to the Indian department, it is not in order as amendment to this bill.

Mr. EVANS. I would suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. WOODWARD,] that he should strike out the words "or hereafter to be made."

Mr. WOODWARD. I am willing to strike out those words, but they tell me it is not in order for me now to do it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope that we shall have a decision upon the appeal.

Mr. FOWLER. Upon the question of appeal I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. DUNHAM and ROBBINS were appointed; and the question being taken, the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 50.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. WOODWARD. I will modify the amendment by striking out the words "or hereafter to be made."

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a question of order. It is, that the amendment is not in order as an amendment to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The Chair would suggest that the amendment be again read as amended, and then the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] can state his point of order.

The amendment was then read, as modified by Mr. WOODWARD, by striking out the words indicated above.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I should have no objection to the first branch of the amendment, and I presume that it would be in order as applicable to the provisions of this bill; but the latter portion provides for contracts generally, and not the particular cases in the bill; it provides that the Executive shall not recognize any contracts made hereafter. I presume, therefore, that the objection originally taken will still apply to the amendment as it now stands.

Mr. CLEVELAND. As I understand that amendment, as modified by the mover of it, it confines the action of the Executive to the very matter about which the first part of this bill relates, and it is, therefore, clearly in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the true construction of the last part of this amendment is to give it a future operation. If the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WOODWARD] does not intend that, and will introduce a word or two, to prevent such a construction, the Chair thinks it will be in order.

Mr. WOODWARD. My object was to make a general provision. That being ruled to be out of order, my object now is to make the provision special, and whatever alteration will make it so I will accept.

Mr. STANLY. Does not the amendment refer to contracts already made? I think it does. Now, I submit the point of order whether it is right in adopting this provision, to run the risk of altering existing laws, and embarrassing the departments, without at least giving it the consideration of some Committee? If it had come from the Committee on Indian Affairs, or the Committee on Military Affairs, I would not have made any objection to it.

Mr. WOODWARD. I understand the provision to apply to the appropriations made under this bill.

Mr. STANLY. If it is so worded, I will make no objection. It applies, as I understand, to all contracts heretofore made.

The CHAIRMAN. It only applies to such as shall arise in the payment of the money appropriated by this bill.

Mr. STANLY. How is the money to be paid—under treaties now in force? Does it contract that it shall be paid under existing laws?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that may be a reason for not adopting the amendment, but it is not for that reason out of order.

Mr. STANLY. I thought there was a rule which forbids the alteration of a law in an appropriation bill.

Mr. WOODWARD. Let it be understood that my intention was to apply this amendment to the appropriations made by this bill, and not to contracts heretofore or hereafter to be made.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. So far as the amendment applies to appropriations for paying Indian tribes money belonging to the whole tribe, it is, as I conceive, correct; but in reference to a portion of these moneys, which, as the committee will recollect, are to be paid to individuals, as in the case of the Senecas, of New York, where moneys had been deposited by individuals—specific sums—in the hand of a defaulting agent, it is provided by this amendment that all moneys to be paid to Indians under this act shall be paid per capita, I submit to the committee whether that would not be the construction put upon the amendment under consideration—that it would be paid to the tribe per capita, instead of the individuals to whom it was due?

Mr. WOODWARD. That amendment is not intended that others than those entitled shall receive the moneys appropriated by this bill.

Mr. SACKETT. If the gentleman will allow me, I will ask the question, whether there is not certain appropriations in this bill to comply with the conditions of certain existing treaties?

Mr. WOODWARD. I believe that there are.

Mr. SACKETT. Those treaties uniformly point out the manner in which the moneys shall be paid. We have no power, if that be so, to change existing treaties which have been made between this and other nations. You cannot change them.

Mr. WOODWARD. I do not mean that the amendment shall have a reference to our agents, but those appointed by the Indians. Our agents will be competent to act as heretofore under the bill.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I was going on to say that where, by treaty stipulations, moneys were provided to be paid to tribes; annuities, for instance, which are provided in this bill to particular tribes, it would be best to prescribe that the moneys shall be paid per capita. But take the case of the two individuals who are jointly interested in this large sum of money which was squandered by the Indian agent in the State of New York, their own private funds, which had been deposited with him, this amendment would provide for the distribution of that private fund per capita amongst the tribe. I move, therefore, if the amendment is susceptible of amendment, to insert after the words "to the Indians themselves," the words, "to whom it shall be due or to the tribe or part of the tribe per capita."

Mr. WARD. I feel a sense of duty requires that I shall oppose the amendment. All our transactions with the Indian tribes are based upon the supposition that they are, to a certain extent, independent nations. This proposes to revolutionize that whole system—to destroy the nationality of the Indians, so far as regards our action towards them, and recognize the existence of individuals—a thing which cannot be done while they are recognized as nations. While they are recognized as individuals, they have a right to prescribe their own rules of action, and they have a right to appoint their own agent. We are stepping forward, and by a declaration of Congress, so far as that may go, denationalizing them—saying that they shall not appoint their agents. In addition to all that, the thing is impracticable. How are the agents of the Government to hunt up each and every individual who may constitute a member of the tribe? Is he to hunt through morasses to find them, not regarding them as a nation, but treating and acting towards them as individuals—destroying their national character, which it ought to be the pride of this Government to retain? We can act with them only through their national organs as a nation. Here we are attempting, in a bill like this, to revolutionize the whole system, that has worked so well for the last fifty or sixty years. I hope the House will not attempt such a thing without due reflection upon the subject.

Mr. HAVEN. I would like to say, for the information of such members of the House as have not looked at the matter, that, by a general law, these moneys that are payable to the Indians may be directed to be paid by the Secretary of the Interior, or by the Executive Department, to the heads of families, instead of being paid to the tribe in the aggregate. This is nothing more than simply carrying out that general doctrine as applicable to these appropriations, making it the duty of the Government to pay the money. Instead of leaving it optional with them to have it so paid, it takes away the discretion, and orders it to be paid in a way in which they have a discretion to direct it or not, as they shall choose.

Mr. WOODWARD. I rise to make an explanation, as I have misunderstood the matter. The section excepts cases from the per capita rule, where the interests of the Indians demanded it. Minors would not receive this money directly, because they are not competent legally to receive it all, and in such a case the guardian will receive it. Children will not receive it, because they are not competent to receive it. These would be exceptions to the rule. I will say further, when I speak of the contracts of agents, I do not mean the public commissioners appointed regularly by the Indian tribes. I did not mean that, nor do I think that my words would receive any such construction. The commissioners of Indian Affairs, regularly commissioned, would not come in under the designation of attorneys or agents. I allude to these agents, the hawks and buzzards who swarm about this Hall, and swallow up the means of these unfortunate individuals, taking, in many instances, one half for collecting the whole, when there is manifestly no difficulty in the matter. These agents persuade the Indians that some friend must be necessary here—that Government is going to cheat them, that the officers of the department are corrupt, and will not pay them. Under this delusion these poor ignorant Indians are induced, in many instances, to pay one half or one third of the money to collect a debt which would be paid promptly, if presented to the proper department.

Mr. WALSH. I do not desire to propose an amendment, and if the House would hear what I have to say, I will be obliged to them. First, these cases of fraud are to be ascertained.

Now, I have heard of an old story where a person, to save individual grace, blessed a barrel of beef [laughter] in the lump. And here we find gentlemen denouncing a whole class of men. This thing is not to be done in the general, in the first instance, and then to be individualized in the second. It was well said by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Woodward] that there are treaty provisions as to how this money should be paid. Why not leave it to general law? Is your Executive Government so impotent that they cannot tell whether a power of attorney is fraudulent or not—that they cannot institute an examination? We all know the case of the Cherokees, about which so much has been said, where the power of attorney was assailed, and where it came out, in the course of the investigation, that it was coupled with an interest for service rendered. The Attorney General gave it as his opinion that the money should be paid, after a full investigation. Now, whether it was wrong or not, I cannot enter into an inquiry here; but you see there is a tribunal competent to enforce right, and apply their powers of investigation to all cases which arise. If a man is proved to be a cormorant, let him be condemned; and if he has practiced frauds upon the Indians, by which he has obtained his power of attorney, let him be punished.

Mr. HAVEN. I ask for the reading of the third section of the law to which I just alluded.

The Clerk then read the third section, as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the eleventh section of the act to provide for the better organization of the department of Indian Affairs, approved June 30, 1834, be, and the same is hereby so amended as to provide that all annuities or other moneys, and all goods stipulated by treaty to be paid or furnished to any Indian tribe, shall, at the discretion of the President or Secretary of War, instead of being paid over to the chiefs, or to such persons as they shall designate, be divided and paid over to heads of families and other individuals entitled to participate therein, or, with the consent of the tribe, be applied to such purposes as will best promote the happiness and prosperity of the members thereof, under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War, not inconsistent with existing treaty stipulations. And no such annuities, or moneys, or goods shall be paid or distributed to the Indians while they are under the influence of any description of intoxicating liquor, nor while there are good and sufficient reasons for the officers and agents, whose duty it may be to make such payments or distribution, for believing that there is any species of intoxicating liquor within convenient reach of the Indians, nor until the chiefs and head-men of the tribe shall have pledged themselves to use all their influence and to make all proper exertions to prevent the introduction and sale of such liquor in their country, and all executory contracts made and entered into by any Indian for the payment of money or goods shall be deemed and held to be null and void, and of no binding effect whatever.

Mr. VENABLE said: Mr. Chairman, I have no amendment to propose, and the debate on that under consideration being closed, I cannot proceed unless by the unanimous consent of the House.

[Cries of "Leave!" "Leave!" from all parts of the House.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can proceed only by unanimous consent of the committee. If there is no objection, the gentleman will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. VENABLE. I acknowledge my obligations to the committee for the courtesy extended to me on this occasion. There are some facts which ought to be brought to the knowledge of the committee and the country. Our constituents ought to know the fact that the Government here is to all practical purposes, in the hands of the claim-agents, the letter-writers, and the common plunderers. The penalty which any representative of the people has to pay for independent resistance to the plunder of the Treasury, or the protection of such unlucky claimants as may succeed in prosecuting a just demand upon the Government from the exactions of those who profess to be their agents, is to be slandered and assailed by all the hiring scribblers who are under pay to form public opinion, as letter-writers; to find himself denounced and black-balled in the penny press, and held up to the public as a just subject of opprobrium and reproach. I am not thin-skinned enough to feel such assaults, but take this occasion to express my contempt for them and their employers, whether it be claim-agents or the print-daubers of a venal press.

Unless the Government is rescued from such an unholy dominion, it must dissolve in its own corruption and imbecility. The poor Indian, after a prosecution of a just claim for a quarter of a century, with his papers withheld, and every obstruction placed in the way of its recognition, finds himself at last, when tardy justice is done, subjected to the demands of those harpies, who gather around the bureau which is to direct the payment, with caveats for services which have never been rendered, and a claim for half the amount, to be delivered to them. I speak by the card, and know what I say. It is insufferable that such practices should be tolerated. Who made the Departments of this Government the arbiters of such claims for compensation? How disgraceful is it to the country, that the just, the wronged claimant should be subjected to such exactions by the action of the Government itself. Sir, this is indeed filling the cup of bitterness to the brim. It is heaping outrage upon injury on the poor, the oppressed denizen of a country once his own. Can there be any reason why a claim, now allowed after twenty years' denial by the Government which owed it, should be curtailed by half, under the judgment of the Departments of the Government itself? The evil is a crying one; it has become an acknowledged truth, that a small, honest claim stands no chance of a hearing. The seaman's, or the soldier's widow may, for years, knock in vain at the doors of the Treasury. Their claims are too small to admit of large fees, or expensive entertainments. The poor Indian, unused to those appliances, must surrender half of his right, or he cannot be heard. But large and annual spoliation, magnificent assaults upon the Treasury for steam lines, and other splendid schemes, find willing auditors and active agents, who surround the lobbies of this House like the vultures who fly in the rear of an army, always present, always importunate, and ever ready to plunge their beaks into their prey. There was, as I am informed, a bill passed by Congress not many years since, granting $112,000 to a tribe of Indians, as due by treaty, and these agents pocketed $56,000 of the amount. The whole scheme of plunder is reduced to a system, and those high in office are the efficient friends of the claimants for such exorbitant exactions. I have felt it my duty to speak plainly upon this subject. I am grateful for the courtesy of the committee, which allowed me the opportunity. I felt that it was the duty of some representative of the people to expose a system of organized operation, by which those who had just claims upon

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, MARCH 30, 1852.

NEW SERIES...No. 57.

this Government, were to be the subjects of unjust exaction—by which the authors of those exactions were to be aided by the authority of the Government, and by which the representatives of the people were to be restrained from the denunciation of such abominations, under the terrors of a band of hireling calumniators. The people, sir, will put this matter to rights. All that is wanting is, that they should know the facts; and, knowing them, as I do, I would be unfaithful to withhold them from the country.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HALL moved to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following:

Except in such case as the President of the United States may otherwise direct.

Mr. H. read an extract from the report of the Superintendent of Indian Affairs at St. Louis, made to the last Congress, which was not furnished to the reporters.

He then said: Mr. Chairman, every gentleman who understands the character of the Indians must know their utter incompetency to make contracts generally. We have therefore passed laws regulating the intercourse between Indians and whites, and we will not, as a general thing, permit them to trade with the whites at all. Yet, when we propose to exercise the same control over the contracts which the Indians make with their agents in prosecuting claims here in Washington, we find a majority of this House opposed to it. I ask gentlemen if it is right, or treating the Indians properly, to say they are incompetent to trade with white people generally, and yet are competent to make these contracts with claim-agents—the most difficult to manage of any? If they are competent to trade with these agents here, they are certainly competent to trade in all cases whatever.

I hold that it is the duty of this Government, as the late Secretary of War (Mr. Marcy) decided, whenever an Indian makes a contract with an agent, to scrutinize that contract, examine it, and see whether it is fair and right, because this Government is the guardian of the Indians; and if, upon a full and fair investigation of the contract, the Government are satisfied that it is unfair and unjust, it ought not to be enforced against the Indians. If we are the guardians of the Indians, let us act as guardians and take care of them; and especially let us protect them against this class of claims, which presses upon them more grievously than any others.

Why, it was only last year that a claim of $112,000 was allowed to a tribe of Indians, $56,000 of which was taken by the agent who prosecuted it. How many other claims of that kind have been prosecuted I do not know. But it does appear to me, that if we intend faithfully to discharge our duty as the guardians of the Indians, we will protect them against this sort of claim—we will not let our departments consider that these contracts with claims-agents are absolutely binding on the Indians, and pay over whatever amount may be due to those agents under their contracts. Why not let it be understood by general law now and forever, that whenever an agent makes a contract with an Indian, he must rely on the individual honesty of the Indian to carry out the promise contained in the contract? When, only a few years ago, we introduced the practice of paying all the annuities over to the Indians per capita, the traders among them found no difficulty in collecting all their debts. Merchants still sell them goods, and those persons find no difficulty whatever in collecting their honest debts against the Indians.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WALSH. I wish to make a few remarks in reply to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. VENABLE.] I repeat that denunciation is a very convenient thing, and always saves a world of trouble. Nobody denies that there is corruption, and that there are impositions. Nobody denies that the press may be, in some instances, as corrupt as the gentleman from North Carolina alleges. But that is not the inquiry here. I surrender to no man my claim to have equal sympathy with him, for the aborigines of the country, although I have no such amount of eloquence to expend upon it, as the gentleman from North Carolina has. But the inquiry here is, whether the whole argument, when you come to sift it, is not this: that the present tribunals of the country are inadequate to afford justice to these people? The fact that there is a defect in the Executive Department—that the court is not able to do justice, is no reason for taking away the power of the court and vesting it in the Legislature. There is no such principle known in any law governing any part of Christendom, as that the legislative power, on the ground of fraud on the part of individuals, can annul every contract.

The gentleman from Missouri may be right as to the proclamation of the general law, that you will allow no contract to be made between Indians and white men, on the ground of the general incapacity of the Indians to contract, and their liability to imposition. But how many transactions are there now, which have been legalized? How many vested interests? How many powers coupled with interests?

Let me say here that, so far as I am concerned, I do not know one of these agents—I do not know a newspaper writer. I have no sort of connection with them. When a contract comes up for examination, the question is, whether it is bona fide and valid, or whether it is voidable because of the imposition that has been practiced on the Indians. Let the proper tribunals decide that question. If the Departments of the Government are corrupt and inefficient, establish tribunals that will be more powerful to sustain the right and do justice. That is what you ought to do; and not, by a general law, strike down every agency that the Indians have created—every power of attorney they may have executed. We know the character of these transactions. We know that in many instances these powers are coupled with interests—vested rights just as sacred as men get by transfer under deeds. With that interest, your law would be impotent. And why not leave this thing with the warning that the legislative department of the Government now gives, if it does not follow it up with legislation providing for the appointment of more efficient tribunals? Why not leave it to the regular Departments to ascertain these things by proof, and not overwhelm men by condemning them en masse?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HALL then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. VENABLE moved a pro forma amendment.

Mr. WOODWARD. I ask the gentleman from North Carolina to allow me to extend the amendment still further.

Mr. VENABLE. The gentleman from South Carolina can get the floor, and make his amendment when I have said what I intend to say.

Mr. Chairman, I regretted very much, indebted as I was to the committee for this courtesy, in allowing me to make the five minutes' speech which I made—that I did not have more time. The gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. WALSH,] I am sure, will understand me when I say, that I never make a denunciation without proof. On yesterday I took an appeal from the decision of the head of a bureau of this Government—

Mr. OUTLAW. I rise to a question of order; I make the question of order upon my colleague who, I know, will not misunderstand me. I insist that the gentleman shall confine himself to the amendment.

Mr. VENABLE. I will confine myself strictly to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was not in order in the course of remark he was pursuing, when he was interrupted by his colleague.

Mr. VENABLE. Well, sir, I will remark, as I remarked before—and it certainly is in order to reply to the gentleman from Maryland—that I never make denunciations when I have not the authority to prove them; and whenever I am called upon to substantiate the charges to which that gentleman alluded, I am ready to make good every word I said.

Mr. OUTLAW. I again insist that the gentleman shall confine himself to his amendment. I make that point of order.

Mr. STANLY. I call my last colleague [Mr. OUTLAW] to order, because my colleague [Mr. VENABLE] always talks well, but never talks in order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the gentleman from North Carolina was not proceeding in order. His remarks were not pertinent to the amendment.

Mr. OUTLAW. I insist that my colleague shall not be allowed to proceed in order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. VENABLE. Oh, I am very willing to sit down. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOODWARD. I have no argument to make, except by way of explanation. This amendment is not based upon the supposition that these contracts are not made; but the object is to prevent such contracts from being made in future, upon the part of the Indians. The law cannot exempt the Indian from his obligations to his agent. This section only operates to prevent this Government from recognizing such agents. The Indian is bound by his contract, and let the man who contracted with him seek justice there. It is to prevent your Executive Departments from becoming public judicial tribunals on behalf of these Indians. It is not to deprive the agent of the benefit of a judicial tribunal under which his questions will naturally fall, for if it interferes with any of your now vested rights, it will become an ex post facto law. If there be any legal, vested interest which this provision ought not to effect, it will not effect it.

Mr. NABERS. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

[Loud cries of "Question!"]

Mr. VENABLE. With the consent of the committee, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I object to its withdrawal. If gentlemen offer amendments here, I insist that they shall be voted upon.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FITCH. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the committee refused to rise—ayes 20, noes 100.

Mr. ROBBINS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order while there is an amendment pending.

The question was then taken upon Mr. Woodward's amendment as amended, and it was agreed to, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That no part of the appropriations herein made for the benefit of any tribe, or part of a tribe of Indians, shall be paid to any attorney or agent of such tribe, or part of a tribe; but it shall, in every case, be paid directly to the Indians themselves, to whom it shall be due, or to the tribe, or part of a tribe, per capita, or to heads of families, unless the imperious interests of the Indians shall require the payment to be made collectively; nor shall the Executive branch of the Government hereafter recognize any contract between any tribe, or part of a tribe, and any attorney or agent for the prosecution of any claim against the Government, under this act:

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the committee do now rise, and report the bill to the House.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman [Mr. STUART] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 207, it being a bill to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1852, and had made sundry amendments thereto; which, with the bill, it had instructed him to report to the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move the previous question upon this bill.

Mr. ORR. I move that the House do now ad-journal. It is very plain that we shall not pass the bill this evening.

Mr. SWEETSER. Will it be in order to make an inquiry of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. Not during the pendency of the motion to adjourn.

The question was put, and, upon a division, there were—ayes 70, noes 63.

Tellers were demanded.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. Will it be in order to move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next?

Several MEMBERS. Not while the House is dividing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion, that as tellers have been called, it will be in order for the gentleman to make his motion.

Mr. STANTON. Then I submit that motion.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. STUART demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. STANTON, of Tennessee, and ROBBINS were appointed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Did the Chair decide the motion to adjourn over to Monday to be in order? According to my understanding, it was not in order to make the motion while the House was dividing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did so decide.

Mr. JONES. I think that was not the general understanding, or the yeas and nays would certainly have been ordered.

The SPEAKER. It would not have been in order for the gentleman from Ohio to have made the motion while the House was dividing; but tellers were demanded and ordered by the House. The Chair thought then the motion could be entertained, and so decided.

Mr. JONES. It was not understood by—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask the Chair a question. I understand that the yeas and nays have not been refused upon the motion to adjourn over.

[Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!" and "Yes, they have!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot be mistaken in supposing that he put the questions in their order, properly and distinctly under the rules.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is certainly a mistake somewhere.

Mr. POLK. I call the gentleman from Alabama to order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask for a recount.

[Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. It is not in the province of the Chair to order a recount.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 66.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion that this House do now adjourn. The same gentlemen will please act as tellers.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 48.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to know of the Chair if the House now adjourn—

Mr. ORR. I rise to a question of order. Was there a demand for the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. There was not.

Mr. ORR. Then the House has adjourned.

Mr. HOUSTON. I demand the yeas and nays. I desire to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. By the indulgence of the House, the gentleman can propound a question, and not otherwise.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is said by gentlemen around me that if the House adjourn in the present state of the bill, it goes upon the table, and cannot be taken up except by a two-third vote. I desire to know if this is so?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has some doubt about that. He is inclined to the opinion that the previous question would have to be ordered, before it could positively come up, and take precedence of the business of the morning.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to make one suggestion. It is the universal practice of the House, that a motion to refer a bill keeps it up as unfinished business. I cannot see any difference between that and a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. If there was a pending proposition to refer the bill, it would keep it before the House, and give it precedence; but in the absence of such a proposition, and a demand only for the previous question, it will go to the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not wish to keep the House here against its will, but if the gentleman who has made the motion will withdraw it, I will make the motion to refer.

The SPEAKER. It is only by the universal consent of the House that gentlemen can proceed with remarks.

Mr. SWEETSER. I object to further remarks.

The SPEAKER. The vote has been taken on the motion to adjourn, and the Chair must announce the decision.

Mr. ORR. I desire to say to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON], that it was upon my motion that the vote was taken for the House to adjourn. There is no purpose, on my part, to stave off this bill, and if the gentleman's purpose can be accomplished, I will withdraw my motion for a moment, in order that he may move to refer the bill, so that it will come up to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON. I rise to make an inquiry. If I understand the state of the bill, it is that there is now a call for the previous question. If there is a second to the previous question, and the House then adjourns, will not the bill be left before the House as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. If the main question is ordered to be put, it will.

Mr. WOODWARD. I rise to a question of order. The question of adjournment having been taken by tellers, and thereupon the yeas and nays having been demanded, no business can be transacted between the two propositions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's colleague [Mr. ORR] withdrew his motion to adjourn, which he had a right to do, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. HOUSTON. I withdraw my motion for the previous question. I now move to recommit this bill to the Committee of Ways and Means, and I now ask for the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and

The House adjourned, to meet to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

PETITIONS, &c.,

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. RIDDLE: The petition of Saxe Gotha Laws, James L. Smith, and 40 other citizens of Kent county, State of Delaware, praying for the enactment into a law of the bill now pending before Congress for the encouragement of agriculture, manufactures, and other branches of industry, by granting to every man who will settle on and cultivate the same, 160 acres of public lands, as a homestead.

By Mr. LOCKHART: The petition of J. C. Graham, of Pike county, Indiana, asking for additional compensation for services rendered as assistant marshal in taking the Seventh Census of the United States.

By Mr. SNOW: The petition of inhabitants of Otsego county, New York, praying for the passage of a law granting lands to actual settlers.

By Mr. ASHE: The memorial of T. H. Williams and others, citizens of New Hanover county, North Carolina, praying for a certain mail route.

By Mr. BOYD: The petition of Joseph Averill, of Exeter county, New York, for a pension.

Also, the petition of inhabitants of Washington county, New York, asking that White Hall, in the county of Washington, New York, be made a port of entry and delivery.

Also, the petition of inhabitants of the State of New York, for a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Saratoga Springs to Sackett's harbor, on Lake Ontario.

By Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi: The petition of J. W. Ballow, United States assistant marshal for Scott county, Mississippi, praying for extra compensation for taking the Seventh Census.

By Mr. SKELTON: The petition of Abner B. Tomlinson, United States assistant marshal in Mercer county, New Jersey, praying for extra compensation for taking the Seventh Census.

By Mr. BUELL: Remonstrance of citizens of Montgomery county, New York, against a renewal of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. HIBBARD: The petition of Artemas Wells, Levi Parker, and others, praying for a new post route from Lisbon, via Sugar Hill, to Franconia, in Grafton county, New Hampshire.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 27, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] to recommit the deficiency bill and the amendment of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to the Committee of Ways and Means; on which motion the previous question is demanded.

Mr. FITCH. The question, as I understand it, is to recommit the bill to the Committee of Ways and Means. I desire, if I can obtain the consent of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON], to offer an amendment to the motion to recommit. I will send to the Clerk the amendment, containing instructions to that committee. I hope he will permit my motion to be made.

The instructions he intended to move, are as follows:

To strike from the bill all that portion of it relating to deficiencies in the quartermaster's department, and to hereafter report such deficiencies in a separate bill, specifying each item for which an appropriation is wanted, and the amount for each; and to report at the same time the manner in which the deficiency occurred, and the manner in which the appropriation for that department for the present fiscal year has been expended.

Mr. HOUSTON. Am I not entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. No one is entitled to the floor, as the previous question is pending.

Mr. FITCH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have my proposition read.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House to hear the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. FITCH]?

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FITCH] knows as well as I do, why I made the motion to recommit.

Mr. FITCH. I suppose I do.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not practice fraud. I made the motion, as was stated yesterday, and as understood, for the purpose of keeping the bill before the House, and preventing it from going upon the Speaker's table. If I have permission to do so, I will now withdraw the motion to recommit.

Mr. FITCH. Mr. Speaker, I had the right to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FITCH] is upon the floor, asking the unanimous consent of the House that the proposition which he has sent to the Chair may be read for the information of the House. Is it objected to?

Mr. STANLY. I object to it, decidedly.

The SPEAKER. It is objected to, and cannot be read.

Mr. HOUSTON. Have I the right to withdraw the demand for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right.

Mr. HOUSTON. Can I withdraw the motion to recommit, without withdrawing the call for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. You cannot.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now withdraw the call for the previous question, and also the motion to recommit the bill, and upon the engrossment of the bill I ask for the previous question.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Is it in order pending the demand for the previous question to move to refer the bill?

The SPEAKER. No motion to amend or to refer the bill is in order pending the demand for the previous question.

Mr. MARSHALL. I hope the previous question will be voted down.

Mr. FITCH. I hope it will.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope it will not; so there is hope against hope.

[Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported, as correctly enrolled, a bill entitled "An act amendatory of the act entitled 'An act to provide for holding the courts of the United States in case of the sickness, or other disability of the judges of the district courts,' approved July 29, 1850;" and the bill was then presented to the Speaker, and received his signature.]

Mr. FULLER, of Maine. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer resolutions from the Legislature of the State of Maine.

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. A great many seats in the House are vacant this morning, and I think it would be best to have a call of the House.

Mr. STANLY. That is a suggestion in which I concur.

Mr. JONES. I make that motion.

The question was taken on the motion, and it was agreed to.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The roll of the House was then called, and the following gentlemen answered to their names:

Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Willis Allen, Allison, John Appleton, William Appleton, Averett, Babcock, Bartlett, Beale, Bennett, Bibbhaugh, Bocoek, Bowie, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, George H. Brown, Buell, Burrows, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Chandler, Chapman, Churchill, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, Cullom, Curtis, Daniel, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Dockery, Doty, Dunham, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, Evans, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Floyd, Fowler, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gilmore, Goodenow, Gorman, Grey, Hammond, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Horsford, Houston, Howard, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, James Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, Mann, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Martin, Mason, McCorkle, McDonald, McLanahan, McQueen, Meacham, Meade, Miller, Millson, Miner, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Nabers, Newton, Oids, Orr, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Penniman, Perkins, Polk, Porter, Powell, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Scudder, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Smith, Snow, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, George W. Thompson, Tuck, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Wildrick, Williams, and Woodward.

The following gentlemen were reported as absent, viz:

Messrs. Charles Allen, Andrews, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bell, Bissell, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Albert G. Brown, Burt, Caldwell, Carter, Chastain, Colcock, Darby, Dean, Disney, Duncan, Dupee, Ewing, Faulkner, Gentry, Giddings, Goodrich, Green, Grow, Hall, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Haws, Hascall, Hebard, John W. Howe, Hunter, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, McMullin, McNair, Morrison, Murphy, Phelps, Price, Rantoul, Richardson, Robie, Russell, Savage, Schoonmaker, Abram P. Stevens, Alexander H. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Stratton, Strother, Sweetser, Thurston, Toombs, Townsend, Wilcox, and Yates.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I move to suspend all further proceedings in the call.

Mr. STANLY. I hope not. The House is far from being full, and I want to hear the excuses for members who are not here.

The question was taken, and it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 52, noes 82; so the House refused to suspend all further proceedings in the call.

The SPEAKER. The officers of the House will close the doors of the Hall.

The doors of the Hall were accordingly closed.

The SPEAKER. The names of the absentees will now be called over, and excuses may be rendered, if any, for the absentees.

The clerk then read the names of the absentees in the order in which they are inserted above.

Mr. CHARLES ALLEN.

Mr. FOWLER. I move that Mr. ALLEN be excused. The severe illness by which he has been for a long time confined, is not yet removed. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHARLES ANDREWS.

Mr. GOODENOW. Mr. ANDREWS is so ill that he cannot be here. I move that he be excused. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAM S. ASHE. No excuse offered.

Mr. DAVID J. BAILEY.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia. Mr. BAILEY has returned home, to attend to some business which required his personal attention. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS H. BAYLY. No excuse offered.

Mr. THOMAS BARTLETT. No excuse offered.

Mr. HIRAM BELL.

Mr. HARPER. Mr. BELL has gone home to attend to important business which required his personal attention. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Gentlemen are anxious to act upon this bill. We had better suspend further proceedings under the call. I make that motion.

Mr. STANLY. It is a good use of time to get every one here.

Mr. STUART. I demand tellers upon the motion.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. STUART and CHANDLER were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 60.

So the motion was not agreed to.

WM. H. BISSELL. No excuse offered.

OBADIAH BOWNE. No excuse submitted.

JOHN H. BOYD, of New York.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. BOYD is confined to his room with a lame foot. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

ALBERT G. BROWN.

Mr. NABERS. Mr. BROWN went to the Department to transact some important business. For that reason he is detained from the House, and I move that he be excused.

He was excused—ayes 75, noes not counted.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I renew the motion I made some time ago, that all further proceedings under the call be suspended.

The question was put and the motion was agreed to—ayes 79, noes 50. So further proceedings under the call were suspended, and the doors were reopened.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BRENTON. Is it in order, during the pendency of the call for the previous question, to move to lay the bill and amendments upon the table, and that it be printed?

The SPEAKER. It is in order to move to lay upon the table, but not to print. Does the gentleman submit that motion?

Mr. BRENTON. I do not, unless I can also make the motion to print.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be made except by unanimous consent.

Mr. STANLY. I object.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, upon the call for the previous question, demanded tellers, which were ordered; and Messrs. MARSHALL and JOHNSON of Tennessee, were appointed.

Mr. SACKETT. I desire to know what the question now is.

The SPEAKER. It is upon seconding the demand for the previous question; which, if seconded, the next question will be upon ordering the main question to be put, which will be upon the adoption of the amendments of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put, and there was a second—ayes 86, noes 68.

The question recurred, Shall the main question be now put?

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move to lay the bill and amendments upon the table; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. FITCH. Is it in order, at this time, to move that the vote by which the main question was ordered to be put, be reconsidered?

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair it is in order, and supersedes the motion to lay upon the table.

Mr. FITCH. Is it a motion upon which the yeas and nays can be called?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is.

Mr. FITCH. I then submit the motion, and upon it call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BROOKS. Does the Chair decide that motion to be in order? Does not the motion to lay upon the table take precedence?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. They are both privileged questions.

Mr. BROOKS. Have we not just decided that the main question shall be now put; and has there been any intervening business?

The SPEAKER. It is true that there has been no intervening business.

Mr. BROOKS. Well, we have decided that the main question shall now be put.

The SPEAKER. That, in the opinion of the Chair, does not alter the case. When the House decides against a bill, frequently, almost immediately a motion is made that the vote by which the bill was rejected be reconsidered.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, to move to lay that motion upon the table? If so, I submit that motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. OLDS, upon that motion, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 99, nays 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Allison, W. Appleton, Thos. H. Bayly, Bennett, Bibbhaugh, Bowie, John H. Boyd, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Chandler, Chapman, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Cottman, Cullom, George T. Davis, Dockery, Dunham, Evans, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Goodenow, Grey, Hammond, Harper, Haven, Hibbard, Horsford, Houston, Howard, Thomas M. Howe, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, George W. Jones, George G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Mace, Mann, Martin, McCorkle, Meacham, Meade, Miller, Miner, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Nabers, Newton, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Penniman, Perkins, Polk, Porter, Robbins, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Strother, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Alex. White, and Williams—99.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, John Appleton, Averett, Babcock, Beale, Bocoek, Bragg, Breckinridge, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Busby, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Churchwell, Clark, Conger, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Doty, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ficklin, Fitch, Floyd, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gilmore, Gorman, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Henn, Hillyer, Holladay, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Letcher, Lockhart, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McDonald, McLanahan, McQueen, Millson, Murray, Oids, Orr, Peaslee, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Smith, Stuart, Sweetser, Geo. W. Thompson, Wildrick, and Woodward—71.

The motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

The question recurred on the motion to lay the bill and amendments on the table; upon which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 76, nays 97; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, John Appleton, Averett, Babcock, Beale, Bissell, Bocoek, Breckinridge, Brenton, Buell, Busby, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Doty, Edgerton, Ficklin, Fitch, Floyd, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gilmore, Gorman, Hall, Isham G. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Letcher, Lockhart, Mann, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, McDonald, McLanahan, McQueen, Millson, Oids, Orr, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Polk, Powell, Ross, Savage, Smith, Sweetser, Geo. W. Thompson, Venable, Wallace, Wildrick, and Woodward—76.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Allison, William Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Bennett, Bibbhaugh, Bowie, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Chandler, Chapman, Cleveland, Clingman, Cottman, Cullom, George T. Davis, Dockery, Dunham, Eastman, Evans, Ewing, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gentry, Goodenow, Grey, Hammond, Harper, Hart, Haven, Horsford, Houston, Howard, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, Ives, Robert W. Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Martin, McCorkle, Meacham, Meade, Miller, Miner, Molony, H. D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Nabers, Newton, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penniman, Perkins, Porter, Riddle, Robbins, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Scudder, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Snow, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, and Williams—97.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The question then recurred upon agreeing to the amendments of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There are a great many amendments. Let the Clerk read them, and if there is any gentleman who desires a separate vote upon any amendment he can ask for it.

The first amendment was then read.

To insert after the clause appropriating $600 for the repairs of the President's House, the following:

"And a contract for the completion of the work, with good security, be tendered and accepted at that sum."

Mr. STUART. I desire that amendment again reported, so that the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SEYMOUR], who offered it in committee, may obtain the unanimous consent of the House to make a mere verbal correction in it.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House, that the amendment may be so amended as to read, "at a sum not exceeding that amount."

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HAVEN. I wish to inquire if the vote is not to be taken upon the amendments upon which a separate vote is to be taken, at the time when it is demanded, and not at the end of the reading of the amendments?

The SPEAKER. The amendments to which there are no objections, are usually adopted in mass; and then the vote is taken upon the other amendments, on which separate votes have been asked.

Mr. HAVEN. If this is the practice, I wish to make no objection.

The amendments of the committee, viz: Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19, upon which a separate vote had not been called, were then concurred in.

Mr. BRENTON called for a separate vote on the third amendment. It was read, as follows:

"For payment to the Seneca Indians, per capita, of New York, for moneys wrongfully withheld from them by an agent appointed by the Government for the management of their affairs, as per report of Thomas B. Stoddard, commissioner, selected by the Secretary of War to make the requisite investigation, pursuant to the direction contained in the fourth section of the act of 27th June, 1845, making appropriations for the Indian department, $28,505 50: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby required, upon payment of the money herein specified, to take such further steps, if any may be necessary, as shall enable the United States to recover the amount due from said agent."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEBARD called for a separate vote on the eighth amendment. It was read, as follows:

To strike out $12,000 in the clause below, and insert in lieu thereof $32,000.

"For this sum to cover arrearages for and on account of contingencies of the Indian department, $12,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HIBBARD. I intended to call for the yeas and nays upon the third amendment providing for the payment of money due to the Seneca Indians, but my attention was inadvertently taken away, and I ask consent to call for the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

Mr. SACKETT objected.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the third amendment was adopted.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. DOTY. I want to know how the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] voted upon this question.

Mr. HIBBARD. There was no division.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will ask the Chair if the motion to reconsider should be laid upon the table, whether it will carry the whole bill? It has been so asserted.

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The effect will simply be to prevent a reconsideration of the vote upon that particular amendment, and will leave the amendment as adopted and as forming a part of the bill.

Mr. HIBBARD demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. PENNIMAN demanded tellers upon the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and Messrs. DAVIS, of Indiana, and FOWLER appointed.

The tellers made a count, and reported—yeas 24; which not being one fifth, the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken upon laying the motion to reconsider upon the table, and it was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia, called for a separate vote on the ninth amendment, viz: To make the clause "for office rent, fuel, stationery, &c., for the Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Oregon, $1,000," read as follows:

"For clerk-hire, fuel, stationery, &c., for the Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Oregon, $2,400."

Mr. J. called for a separate vote on the tenth and eleventh amendments, to insert in the bill the following:

"For expenses of continuing negotiations with the Indian tribes of Oregon, lying west of the Cascade mountains, $12,000."

The question being on concurring in the amendment—

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 112, nays 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Beale, Bibbhauss, Bissell, Bowie, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Burrows, Bushy, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Conger, Cottman, Cullom, Daniel, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dimmick, Dockery, Evans, Ewing, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Henry M. Fuller, Gaylord, Gilmore, Goodenow, Grey, Hall, Hammond, Harper, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hillyer, Holladay, Horsford, Howard, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, Mann, Martin, Meade, Miller, Miner, Molony, Henry D. Moore, Murray, Newton, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Penniman, Perkins, Powell, Riddle, Robinson, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, Sweetser, Taylor, Benj. Thompson, George W. Thompson, Tuck, Venable, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Williams, Woodward, and Yates—112.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Averett, Churchwell, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Curtis, Dawson, Doty, Dunham, Eastman, Edmundson, Fowler, Freeman, Gamble, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Hubbard, Houston, Thomas Y. How, (ngersoll), Ives, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Letcher, Humphrey Marshall, McLanahan, McQueen, Meacham, Millson, John Moore, Morehead, Nabers, Olds, Orr, Outlaw, Peaslee, Polk, Robbins, Ross, Scurry, Skelton, Benjamin Stanton, Wallace, and Wildrick—48.

The question was then put on agreeing to the eleventh amendment, which is as follows:

"For the completion of the buildings for the use of the superintendent and the Indian agents in Oregon, $3,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk then reported the last amendment, on which a separate vote had been asked. It is as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That no part of the appropriation herein made for the benefit of any tribe, or part of a tribe of Indians, shall be paid to any attorney or agent of such tribe, or part of a tribe; but it shall, in every case, be paid directly to the Indians themselves, to whom it shall be due, or to the tribe, or part of a tribe, per capita, unless the imperious interests of the Indians shall require the payment to be made collectively; nor shall the Executive branch of the Government thereafter recognize any contract between any tribe, or part of a tribe, and any attorney or agent for the prosecution of any claim against the Government, under this act."

Mr. WARD demanded the yeas and nays, but they were not ordered; and the question being put, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and, being engrossed, it was read a third time.

Mr. BROOKS moved to reconsider the vote on the engrossment, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

The question now being, Shall the bill pass?—Mr. SWEETSER demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

And the question being put, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 95, nays 76; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Allison, William Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Bennett, Bibbhauss, Bowie, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Chandler, Chapman, Clingman, Conger, Cottman, Cullom, George T. Davis, Dockery, Dunham, Eastman, Evans, Ewing, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gentry, Goodenow, Grey, Harper, Haven, Horsford, Houston, Howard, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, Ives, Robert W. Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Mann, Martin, McCorkle, Meacham, Meade, Miller, Miner, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Newton, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Penniman, Perkins, Porter, Riddle, Robbins, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Scudder, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Benj. Thompson, Tuck, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, and Williams—95.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Beale, Bissell, Roccoek, Breckinridge, Brenton, Buell, Jos. Cable, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Churchwell, Clark, Cleveland, Cobb, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Doty, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ficklin, Fitch, Floyd, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gilmore, Hall, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Thomas Y. How, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Letcher, Mace, Edward G. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McDonald, McLanahan, McQueen, Millson, Nabers, Olds, Orr, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Polk, Powell, Robinson, Ross, Smart, Smith, Benjamin Stanton, Sweetser, George W. Thompson, Venable, Wallace, Wildrick, and Woodward—76.

So the bill passed.

Mr. BUSBY, who was without the bar of the House when his name was called upon this vote, asked the unanimous consent of the House to have his name recorded.

Mr. BROOKS objected.

Mr. HOUSTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

The Clerk then reported the title of the bill, viz:

"An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1852."

Mr. BRENTON moved to amend the title, by adding thereto the following:

And making additional appropriations for other purposes.

Mr. B. said: Mr. Chairman, my object in offering that amendment is to make the title of the bill conform to the bill itself. I have examined the bill, and I have listened attentively to the discussion which has taken place upon it, since it has been under consideration here, and I find that it contains many appropriations of money which do not properly belong to the deficiency bill.

The title as it now stands, reads thus:

"To supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1852."

So far as that title covers what is strictly for deficiencies, I have no objection whatever to it. I would willingly vote for any bill which was strictly a deficiency bill, and I would also vote for any bill which should contain provisions for original appropriations of a different character. But as this bill embraces items not only for deficiencies, but also for additional appropriations, I have cast my vote against it, and I have done so on that ground alone. I hope the title will be made to conform to the bill, and I can see no objection to the amendment which I have offered. I do not desire to detain the House, and I now move the previous question.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the demand for the previous question, that I may move to add to his amendment these words: "And subjecting Congress to the dictation of the Executive."

Mr. BRENTON. I cannot withdraw it.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put; and being put, the amendment was disagreed to on a division—yeas 55, noes 69.

The original title was then adopted.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved to reconsider the vote by which the title was agreed to, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. HART, the House then adjourned until Monday.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. THOMAS M. HOWE: The remonstrance of Abraham Patterson and 285 other citizens of Pennsylvania, against a renewal of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. CLARK: The memorial of William Drips and 47 others, citizens of the county of Clayton, and State of Iowa, praying for the suspension of mail service on the Sabbath day.

By Mr. CURTIS: The petition of the citizens of Potter county, Pennsylvania, praying for a mail route from Coudersport to Ulises, in said county.

By Mr. IVES: The petition of 251 inhabitants of Newburyport and vicinity, Massachusetts, praying for a modification of the law granting bounty on fishing vessels.

Also, a remonstrance against granting Thomas Blanchard any special act, making his patent for a self-directing machine more valuable.

By Mr. EASTMAN: The memorial of citizens of the United States, members of the Western Farm and Village Association, asking Congress to grant one hundred and sixty acres of land to each of the memorialists, on condition of actual settlement and improvement.

By Mr. INGERSOLL: The petition of numerous citizens of Middlesex county, Connecticut, owners of vessels, and others; interested in the navigation of Long Island Sound, praying for a breakwater at West Brook, in said State.

By Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi: The petition and memorial in favor of light-houses and for removing obstructions near the mouth of the Pascagoula river, in Mississippi.

By Mr. KUHN: The petition of Joseph Scraggs and other citizens of Pennsylvania, praying Congress to pass a law releasing from official duties on the Lord's day the agents and officers of the Government, especially with reference to the mail service.

Also, the petition and documents of Conrad Mowry, praying to be allowed a pension for services in the late war with Great Britain.

By Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana: Resolutions of the General Assembly of Louisiana—

1st. Relative to a donation of land to the "Pine Grove Academy," in the parish of Caldwell.

2d. Relative to a tri-weekly mail route from Harrisonburg, by way of the seat of justice of Winn parish, to Natchitoches.

3d. Relative to establishing a four-horse mail-coach route from the mouth of Red river, via Marksville and Alexandria, to Natchitoches.

By Mr. FULLER, of Maine: The petition of Ebenezer F. Haskell and Amos Howard, of Deer Isle, owners of schooner Reward, praying Congress for allowance of fishing bounties, said schooner being lost at sea.

By Mr. GILMORE: The petition of Thomas Houston and 180 others, citizens of Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, praying for a modification in the tariff laws of 1846.

By Mr. CABELL, of Ohio: The memorial of J. J. Greenough, preferring charges against T. Ewbank, Commissioner of Patents.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, March 29, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of War, made in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 25th instant, calling for information, as to whether any charges had been filed in his Department against the commissioner appointed to run and mark the boundary line between the United States and Mexico, and deposited in the War Department by an officer of the army; and if so, directing that copies of all papers connected therewith be transmitted to the Senate. The report states that no such charges had been filed in the War Department, and, as the commissioner is in no way accountable to that Department, none could properly have been filed in it. It adds, however, that an officer of the topographical engineers, who had been on duty on the Boundary Commission, but subsequently recalled, did, some months since, deposit in the Bureau of Topographical Engineers, a manuscript, containing charges of misconduct against the commissioner; but as it formed no part of the records of the War Department, and was the private property of the officer who deposited it, the Secretary of War had no authority to order a copy of it to be certified. The officer making the charges, however, would have no objection to placing the original manuscript before the Senate, or in the hands of any member thereof, if desired.

It was ordered to be laid on the table.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. WALKER presented a petition of citizens of Wisconsin, praying that a grant of land may be made to the State of Michigan, for the construction of the Oakland and Ottawa Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, ten petitions of citizens of Wisconsin, praying for grants of land to certain companies therein named, for the construction of a railroad from Chicago, through Janesville and Fond du Lac, to Lake Superior; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a petition of citizens of Franklin county, Illinois, praying that one hundred and sixty acres of land may be granted to every landless American citizen, becoming an actual settler; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a petition of citizens of Ganges, Richland county, Ohio, praying that the public lands may be sold only to actual settlers, and to them in limited quantities; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WALKER. I am requested to present a petition from Milton, Rock county, Wisconsin, signed by almost all classes of people—men, women, and children, to the number of something like one hundred—praying the repeal of the fugitive slave law. I shall not propose to give it a reference. I move that it be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANGUM presented a petition of citizens of Buffalo, New York, praying an extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. SHIELDS presented a petition of inhabitants of the city and county of Washington, District of Columbia, praying the enactment of a law for the punishment of trespasses on private property outside the corporate limits of said city, and within the county of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FISH presented a petition of citizens of Buffalo, New York, praying the extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, a petition of citizens of West Troy, Albany county, New York, praying that the bill giving additional remedies to patentees may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, the memorial of Alexander J. Atocha, praying indemnity for losses sustained in consequence of his expulsion from Mexico; which was referred to the select committee on the subject of claims against Mexico.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have been intrusted with a memorial numerously signed by citizens of Waldo-borough, Maine, in behalf of Conrad Hyer, a soldier of the revolution, and now one hundred and three years old, praying that the pension now received by him may, at his death, be granted to his idiotic grandson; which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the memorial of Hannah Thompson, widow of James Thompson, deceased, an officer of the army of Mexico. It is for a renewal of her pension. It comes within that class of cases which has already received the favorable consideration of the Committee on Pensions. The circumstances are within my own knowledge: the widow resides in my own neighborhood; and it is one of those cases which appeal to our sympathies and to our justice. As it comes within the rule of which the committee have already established, I trust it may receive from them a prompt and early attention. I ask that the memorial and accompanying papers may be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The several motions to refer were agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of North Brookfield, Massachusetts, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, three petitions of citizens of Boston, Massachusetts, and a petition of citizens of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. BORLAND presented the memorial of William Sena Factor, praying remuneration for losses sustained during the Seminole war; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DOWNS submitted documents in relation to the claim of Frederick G. Smith, United States marshal for the western district of Louisiana, to additional compensation for taking the Seventh Census; which were referred to the Committee of Claims.

Also, a resolution of the Legislature of Louisiana, in favor of granting to the corporation of Baton Rouge the right to inclose and use as a cemetery a portion of the grounds attached to the barracks in that town; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a resolution of the Legislature of Louisiana, in favor of the removal of obstructions in the Bayou La Fourche; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Louisiana, in favor of a donation of land for the use and benefit of the Pine Grove Academy; which were referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. CASS presented the petition of the heirs of Walcott Lawrence, deceased, praying remuneration for land improperly sold by the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented ten petitions of citizens of Wisconsin, praying a grant of land to certain companies therein named for the construction of a railroad from Chicago to Lake Superior; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented a memorial of citizens of Manayunk, Pennsylvania, praying a modification of the tariff; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. RUSK presented the memorial of Rachel Herbert, praying compensation for extra services performed by her late husband while assistant messenger in the Post Office Department; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. FELCH presented two petitions of citizens of Michigan, praying a donation of land to the State for the construction of the Oakland and Ottawa railroad; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. UNDERWOOD presented a petition of residents of Illinois, praying an appropriation to repair the dam at the head of Cumberland Island, in the Ohio river; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of Abigail Bishop, widow of Richard Bishop, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW AND EXTINCTION OF SLAVERY.

Mr. SEWARD. I present four several petitions of citizens of New York, and a memorial of the Caln Quarterly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, of Pennsylvania, praying the repeal of the fugitive slave law; and one petition of inhabitants of Marcellus, New York, praying Congress to institute measures for the extinction of slavery. I move that they be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MASON. Do I understand that the proposition is to refer memorials for the repeal of the fugitive slave law to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. SEWARD. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT. And one for the extinction of slavery.

Mr. MASON. I shall not interfere.

Mr. BADGER. What is the question?

Mr. MASON. In answer to the Senator from North Carolina, I reply that I understand that the Senator from New York has presented one memorial praying for the abolition of slavery; and several others for the repeal of the fugitive slave law, and that he asks that they may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I say that, so far as I am concerned, I shall not interfere with the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the same motion made with regard to the whole?

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. I call for a division of the question.

The PRESIDENT. The question then will be, first, on the petitions praying for the repeal of the fugitive slave law.

Mr. NORRIS. I move to lay them on the table; and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT. There are several memorials of that description, asking for the repeal of the fugitive slave law.

Mr. NORRIS. Let the motion embrace them all.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 33, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Borland, Brulbury, Brodhead, Brooke, Cass, Clarke, Clemens, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Geyer, Gwin, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mangum, Mason, Miller, Norris, Rusk, Sebastian, Spruance, Underwood, and Walker—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Chase, Davis, Dodge of Wisconsin, Fish, Foot, Hale, Hamlin, Seward, Sumner, Upham, and Wade—11.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The other memorial is for the abolition of slavery.

Mr. HALE. Where?

Mr. NORRIS. I move to lay that upon the table; and upon that motion call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SEWARD. I would simply state, that the petition prays Congress to institute measures for the extinction of slavery. That is the purport of the petition.

Mr. DAWSON. I would ask the Senator from New York, if he believes Congress has such power? and, then, if he does not, I ask why he presents this petition?

Mr. NORRIS. The motion is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire object to the reception of the memorial, and move to lay the question of reception on the table?

Mr. NORRIS. I object to the reception.

The PRESIDENT. The parliamentary rule is, that, when a petition is presented, and there is objection to the reception, the question must be taken on the reception of the paper; and that question the Senator from New Hampshire moves to lay upon the table. It is not debatable.

Mr. SEWARD. In reply to the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Dawson,] I would say, that I presented the petitions on the same principle that I always present all petitions—that is, that the people have a right to address Congress by petitions, and that it is the duty of Congress to receive them.

Mr. HALE. I call the Senator to order.

The PRESIDENT. He is not in order.

Mr. SEWARD. I submit, sir.

Mr. HALE. I want to inquire, whether the objection to the reception of the petition arises from the Chair, or from the motion of any Senator?

I simply want to have the point understood. The PRESIDENT. It comes from the Senator who made the motion to lay upon the table. The Chair stated to the Senate, as he has stated over and over again, that when a paper is presented it cannot be received, except by the consent of the body. When the Chair is aware that objections are made to its reception, it becomes his duty to put the question, "Shall the paper be received?" That is the parliamentary rule.

Mr. HALE. I only inquired for information, to let the Journals be right.

The PRESIDENT. It is moved to lay the question of reception on the table; and upon that motion, the Senator asks the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 36, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Borland, Bradbury, Brodhead, Brooke, Cass, Clarke, Clemens, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Fish, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mangum, Mason, Miller, Norris, Rhetts, Rusk, Sebastian, Shields, Spruance, Underwood, and Walker—36.

NAYS.—Messrs. Dodge of Wisconsin, Foot, Hale, Seward, Sumner, and Wade—6.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I hold in my hand a petition which prays, for certain reasons therein stated, for the repeal of an act of Congress commonly called the fugitive slave law. It assigns various reasons why it should be repealed; and, amongst others, that it offers a bribe to the judge, by giving him twice as much for deciding a man to be a slave as deciding him to be a freeman.

Mr. MANGUM. What is the amount?

Mr. HALE. Ten dollars for convicting and five dollars for acquitting. In presenting these petitions, I do not know whether it is obnoxious to the objections stated by the Chair, or whether the Chair will be compelled to put the question to the Senate whether or not it shall be received. I do not know whether it is liable to that objection or infirmity; but I wish to call the attention of the Senate, before they pass upon it, to one fact, which occurred here some two or three years ago. I do not know that it is so long back as two years. The honorable Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER,] not now in his seat, gave notice to the Senate then that he would never again object to the reception of one of these petitions. The reasons for that announcement I do not remember that he gave. But the honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MASON,] now in his seat, at the same time said that he would never interfere with the disposition of any of these petitions that might be presented by such as I. And I believe, in accordance with these declarations of those Senators, who were supposed to be qualified to look after the interests of the institutions of those who are undertaken to be protected by this bill, those gentlemen have never interfered since. That is all I have to say.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator propose to make any disposition of the petition?

Mr. HALE. Let it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANGUM. I only have a remark to make. I feel an interest in the character of all my countrymen. I think this petition ought not to be received, on the ground that it contains what I regard as an outrageous slander and libel upon the judges at the North. A man to be bribed for five dollars! I live in a country where they take justices of the peace from all sorts of people; and though I have been in professional life for many years, I never yet heard of a man being bribed for five dollars. These gentlemen are selected in the Northern States, as learned in the law; and to talk of their being bribed for five dollars, seems to me to be a slander, and a calumny, and a libel, with which I hope the Senate will not consent to soil their table. I move that the question of reception lie on the table. I make the motion, simply for the reason that it is a libel and a slander upon a class of my countrymen; and I feel an interest in the character of all of them. I see that my friend from Virginia wishes the floor, and I withdraw my motion for the present.

Mr. MASON. I shall not say a word in reply to anything on this subject, which comes from that quarter. But the Senator who introduced this petition spoke of a declaration made on this floor some time since by an honorable Senator not now in his seat, who is not here to reply to it; and, as I understood him, he said that at the same time I expressed my concurrence in the declaration of that Senator. I do not remember the occurrence. I think, probably, however, that the Senator is correct in his recollection. I do know, having in view what had been done by this Senate on the subject of this institution some two or three years ago, that I was prepared then to declare, as I have just now declared, when the first of these petitions was presented by the Senator from New York, that I would not again, as at present advised, interfere with any disposition of them that those who present them may ask the Senate to make. If a question is put, I shall give my vote; but I shall not be active in interfering with any disposition which Senators who offer them, may ask the Senate to make of them. There are many reasons that guide me in this; amongst others, that—which will not guide the Senator who offered this petition—I have no disposition to be instrumental in any way, directly or indirectly, in agitating again the question of slavery in this Congress.

Mr. MANGUM. I will vary my motion somewhat, at the suggestion of a friend. I understand that petitions of this character have heretofore been received. I will not, therefore, raise the question of reception, though I think the petition is a very outrageous libel; and I feel indignant at any such imputation upon gentlemen learned in the law in our Northern States. I vary the motion so as to allow the petition to be received, and then to lay it upon the table.

Mr. HALE. I merely wish to make a single remark.

Mr. MANGUM. I withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. HALE. I do not understand the Senator from Virginia to undertake to say that I have not stated the facts in relation to what took place here two or three years ago, as they occurred. He thinks I am right. I think I am right. And, to be certain that I was right, I looked over to the seat of the Senator from South Carolina, and not seeing him upon the floor, I went and put the question to the Senator from Virginia, and, as I understood him, he concurred in the statement which I made, as far as his own recollection was concerned.

Mr. MASON. I stated this: that I had no recollection of the occurrence, but that, knowing what my opinions were then, and what my opinions are now, I thought it highly probable that the Senator was correct in his recollection.

Mr. HALE. I am satisfied.

Mr. MANGUM. I renew the motion to lay the petition on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. RUSK, it was Ordered, That the petition of James Harrington, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the petition of Jonathan N. Sewall.

SAMUEL T. WASHINGTON.

Mr. BORLAND. During the last Congress, I presented the memorial of a number of citizens of Arkansas and members of the State Legislature, in behalf of Samuel T. Washington, formerly of Virginia, a relative of General Washington, asking that an allowance might be made to him in his old age and poverty, and in consideration of the presents made by him to the United States some years ago—in the year 1843—which were deemed of great interest, and, as relics, of great value—the sword of Washington, and the cane of Franklin. The memorial was referred to a committee of the Senate, and an adverse report made upon it. No more was done in the case. I have recently received an application from this gentleman, asking that his claim may be again brought before Congress. Under the rules, I know that when a memorial has been unfavorably reported upon it cannot be taken from the files and referred again to a committee.

The PRESIDENT. Was the report acted upon?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes, sir; the adverse report was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT. Then the memorial cannot be taken from the files.

Mr. BORLAND. I presume it will be competent, with unanimous consent, to take it from the files and refer it again. The case is certainly one of interest in many respects, whether the claim be founded upon any just grounds of compensation or not, owing to the name of the individual, his relationship with the Father of his Country, and his connection with the very interesting ceremony which took place in the presenting of the sword and cane to the Congress of the United States. I hope the Senate will agree that the memorial be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, in order that it may be acted upon. This individual is now old, and is very poor. He is known, I presume, to Senators on this floor, especially to the Senators from Virginia. I remember that, in 1843, a good deal of interest was connected with his name and the ceremony which took place in the other House of Congress, in the presentation of the sword and cane. I hope permission will be granted to withdraw the memorial and refer it to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

The PRESIDENT. The rule is positive that, when an adverse report is made and concurred in, the subject cannot again be referred, unless additional papers are presented to show that the report was not a proper one. The Senator asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to have these papers again referred. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. That he cannot have, sir.

So leave to withdraw the papers and refer them again was not given.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Catharine Crosby, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the representatives of Thomas Anderson, deceased; which was read, and ordered to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GEYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of John McIntosh, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the following bills from the House of Representatives, reported them back without amendment:

An act for the relief of Francis Tribon; and An act for the relief of Ichabod Weymouth.

THE SCHOONER AMISTAD.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the resolution directing the Committee on Foreign Relations to inquire into the propriety of providing by law for the claim arising out of the schooner "Amistad," submitted a report, accompanied by a bill, to indemnify the master and owners of the Spanish schooner "Amistad" and her cargo.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MASON. This is a subject in which the Government of Spain takes a deep interest. It has been before this Government since 1839. The bill has been passed once or twice, I think, by the Senate, but has never passed the House of Representatives; and I would submit to the Senate that there are circumstances connected with our recent relations with Spain that would make it peculiarly appropriate for Congress to take it up and consider it at a very early day. I move that it be made the special order for Tuesday, the 6th of April.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I cannot consent to that motion. I hope the gentleman will mention a more distant day, for there are many measures of more importance which should be considered by the Senate, and in which the people of the West are particularly interested—such as the Cumberland Dam and the Louisville Canal bill. I hope that, if we are to have a special day assigned for the consideration of this bill, it will be deferred to a later period than that mentioned by the Senator; and, in the mean time, let us attend to the important measures which have already been pending for years, and which are of importance to the whole country.

Mr. MASON. It is doubtless important, in the opinion of the Senator from Kentucky, that these questions which affect more specially the interest of the Western country should receive immediate consideration; but I submit to him that this is a matter of more importance, as it affects the honor of the nation, and ought to receive earlier consideration than a bill for a mere appropriation. It is a question between the Government of the United States and the Government of Spain, and is one in which, I think, the Senator, if he will investigate it, will find that the good faith and honor of our Government are involved. I do not now wish to interfere with the business before the Senate, and I therefore hope that the matter will be assigned to an early day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would say to my friend from Virginia, that I am certain that the bill in reference to the Amistad will be discussed, and perhaps tediously; and that, to fix on a day for the consideration of the bill before the report is printed, is unusual. I trust he will consent to let it lie over for a week or so, and then we can take it up and fix a day. The other measures to which I have made reference are measures which are held much at heart by many of our Western constituents; they have been pending here for a long time, and I do not think it would be right to over-ride them by these new measures. I hope the gentleman will let the matter lie over until the report is printed—at least for a week or so—when a day can be fixed.

Mr. MASON. I do not wish to press it too strongly, knowing the sensitiveness of the Senator from Kentucky for the interests of the Louisville canal, or the Ohio river, and other interests of that kind. Perhaps he will be satisfied with a later day in April. I will mention Monday, the 26th of April. I want to have a day fixed when we may take it up with certainty.

Mr. HALE. I have been, I think, five years a member of the Senate, and I do not remember that we have acted upon the calendar regularly for one single day in that time. I shall be here, perhaps, for another year; and when I go home, I want to tell my constituents that we have worked in order one day during the six years that I have been here. I have opposed all special orders. The last time that it was proposed to make a bill, in which my constituents are deeply interested, a special order, I opposed it; and when the proposition was made to make the bill granting indemnity for French spoliation prior to 1800, a special order, I opposed that too. I have uniformly voted against making special orders; and many other gentlemen have professed a willingness to refuse to make special orders. If I vote against one, I must against all. I hope the Senate will not make this bill a special order. I would inquire if the motion to postpone to the 26th of April, can be taken separately from the motion to make it a special order?

The PRESIDENT. It can.

Mr. HALE. Then I call for a division of the question.

The question was then taken on the motion to postpone the further consideration of the bill to the 26th of April; and it was agreed to.

The motion to make the bill a special order for that day was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 18, noes 18.

Mr. MASON. I wish now to make a motion in reference to the bill just acted upon, that it may take its place on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT. That bill has just been postponed to the 26th of April.

Mr. MASON. Will it come up on that day?

The PRESIDENT. It will be among the general orders, and will not come up unless it is called up.

Mr. MASON. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which it was postponed, that it may take its place on the calendar.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill takes its place on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED.

The following engrossed bills were read a third time and passed:

An act to authorize the payment of invalid pensions in certain cases.

An act to provide for the unpaid claims of the officers and soldiers of the Virginia State and Continental lines of the revolutionary war.

On motion by Mr. UNDERWOOD, the title of the last named bill was amended to read as follows:

“An act to compensate the owners of certain military lands in the State of Kentucky, granted to the officers and soldiers of the Virginia line of the army of the Revolution, which have been taken by paramount claims.”

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. GWIN moved that the bill for the relief of Richard W. Meade, recently reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, be recommitted to that committee, additional testimony having been produced since the report was made.

The motion was agreed to.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives was received, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that the House of Representatives had passed a bill entitled “An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1852.”

It was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

CONTRACTS WITH OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HUNTER submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate: First. Whether any of the officers of the United States Army have been contractors to furnish supplies to the Government of the United States. Secondly. If such cases exist, what were the rates of such contracts as compared with those of other persons contracting for the same things to be delivered at the same times and places. Thirdly. The names of the officers making and sanctioning such contracts. And lastly. As to the measures, if any, which have been taken by the Department in such cases.

Mr. H. also submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill to make it penal in an officer of the United States to become a contractor, or take an interest, either direct or indirect, in any contract to furnish supplies to the Government of the United States.

CUBAN EXPEDITION.

Mr. MALLORY submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the propriety of authorizing the President of the United States to have investigations made whether any Spanish subjects, not citizens of the United States, have sustained damage, by loss of property or otherwise, in consequence of public outbreak or violence in the State of Florida, growing out of the late Cuba expedition; and into the propriety of authorizing the President to make prompt indemnity to the Spanish Government for such Spanish subjects, for said damage.

STRYKER'S ANNUAL REGISTER.

Mr. SEWARD submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into the expediency of subscribing for Stryker's Annual Register.

WASHINGTON CROSSING THE DELAWARE.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution of inquiry, submitted by Mr. HALE, the 26th instant, respecting the purchase of a historical painting, “Washington crossing the Delaware,” to be placed in the Mansion of the President of the United States, and it was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF THE CAPITOL.

A message from the President of the United States was received by Mr. M. P. FILLMORE, his Secretary, announcing that in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 24th instant, relating to the extension of the Capitol, a report from the Secretary of the Interior was submitted, which furnishes, it is believed, the required information.

The message was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings.

NAVY-YARD AT SAN FRANCISCO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill to establish a navy-yard and dépôt on the bay of San Francisco, and for other purposes, the question being on the substitute offered by Mr. BROWNE.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Before the question is taken, I desire to modify the substitute in a few particulars. In the second section of the substitute, I desire to have the words “President of the United States” stricken out, and the words “Secretary of the Navy” inserted instead. The section will then provide, that “when such land shall have been so selected and secured, the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is authorized to appoint and assign such officers,” &c. I also desire to add a new section, providing for the pay of the officers who may go out, that is to say, that their actual expenses shall be paid in addition to their regular pay, but not that they shall receive double pay.

The additional section was read, as follows:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby authorized, to allow the amount of their present sea service pay to the officers whom he may select or appoint under the first section of this act, and to allow or reimburse to them the actual amount of their expenses consequent upon the performance of their duty under this act, and in conformity with such instructions as they may receive from the President of the United States, and in pursuance thereof.

Mr. SHIELDS. I would suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania, that, if he substitutes the words “Secretary of the Navy” for “President of the United States” in the second section, he ought also to insert them in the fifth section, so as to make the bill uniform.

Mr. HUNTER. Before the question is taken on the passage of this bill, I have a word or two to say in relation to it. I believe there ought to be a navy-yard in California, and not only do I believe there ought to be one, but I believe we ought to commence its establishment as soon as we have information enough to enable us to act intelligibly upon the subject.

I find, Mr. President, in relation to these establishments, a provision in one of the appropriation bills of 1844, which, I am informed, has governed the action of the Committee of Ways and Means, and the House of Representatives upon such subjects since that period. I will ask the Secretary to read it.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

“Sec. 2. That whenever hereafter in submitting to Congress the annual estimates from the several Executive Departments of the Government, it shall be found that the usual items of such estimates vary materially in amount from the appropriations ordinarily asked for, the object named, and especially from the appropriation granted for the same objects for the year next preceding, and whenever new items not theretofore used shall be introduced into such estimates for any year, the estimates shall be accompanied by minute and full explanations from the head of the appropriate department of all such variations and new items, setting forth the reasons and grounds upon which the amounts are required of the different items asked; and whenever any such estimates, whether annual or special, shall ask an appropriation for any new specific expenditure, such as the construction of a fort, the erection of a custom-house, or other public building, or the construction of any other public work requiring a plan before the buildings or work can be properly executed, every such estimate shall be accompanied by a full plan and detailed estimates of the cost of the whole work; and all subsequent estimates for every such work shall give the original estimated cost, the aggregate amount actually expended thereupon, as well as the amount asked for the current year for which such estimates shall be made; and whenever any such subsequent estimate shall ask for an appropriation for any such work beyond the original estimates of the cost, the full reasons for the excess shall be also stated.”

Mr. HUNTER. There is a similar provision in another appropriation bill, some years preceding; but, sir, it is unnecessary to read that. I do not mean to say, sir, that this law deprives us of the power of appropriating money for the erection of any new work for which we have not the plans and estimates which the laws require. I am very far from saying that we have not the power to act without these estimates, but I will say, that the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives never, when General McKay was at the head of it, voted appropriations without such plans and estimates, but, acting on this provision in the appropriation bill, they threw out all amounts that were not accompanied by them.

I am also informed by my colleague, General Bayly, that when he was chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, he invariably acted on the rule thus laid down. What is the mode of proceeding of the present committee I do not know, but I believe that, if we were to pass this bill without these plans and estimates, it would be a mere dead letter, and would not be considered by that House. I believe that it would be much better, if the Senator from California wishes the establishment of a navy-yard in that State, for us to obtain detailed plans and estimates, that we may see what we are about in voting for this establishment. I believe, as I proceed in my comments on the bill, that the necessity for such information will become obvious, and that it will be equally apparent that we should not grope too far in the dark in relation to the construction of this establishment, which, in the State that the Senator so well represents, would now be exceedingly expensive. I am ready to admit, that what is necessary to be done ought to be done. I am willing to commence with the establishment of a navy-yard, if we proceed in the regular and authorized way, and when I know what I am doing, and when I can feel satisfied that we can limit them properly, precisely, and accurately.

The first provision in relation to the commission I believe to be a proper one. Another commission I hold to be necessary. The report of the first was not sufficiently full; we do not know whether there is sufficient water in the site selected to use this dock. I think, as modified by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BRODHEAD,] the provision is a proper one for this floating dock. But, sir, there is a provision in the second section authorizing the President of the United States to appoint and assign such officers, according to law and usage; and make such arrangements as may be necessary to establish a navy-yard and depot upon the most approved plan, on the site so obtained, for the construction equipment, and repair of steam-ships and other vessels of war, and to cause the necessary materials and supplies to be procured and deposited there; the proper engineers, artificers, and workmen to be employed, and the proper buildings, machinery, and fixtures, including a marine barracks, and an hospital for sick and disabled seamen and marines, to be constructed, together with such works and arrangements for the defense of the same, as shall be deemed necessary by the officers appointed to locate this establishment, and approved by the President of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, what estimates, and what plan have we for the erection of these buildings? How do we know the amount of expense to which we shall have to go in the erection of such an establishment? Where is the plan and estimate from the proper bureau of the Navy Department, to enable us to act intelligently upon this subject? I believe that a site for a navy-yard ought to be obtained; I believe that there are certain buildings which we ought to put up, such as workshops, foundries, and some other things, but I believe that the expenditure ought to be limited, at present, to what is actually necessary, and that we should go no further. I believe so, because the expense of everything at present is so enormously great in California; and it seems to me that we should postpone all these public works which are not actually necessary, until prices fall to something like the usual rate of labor and materials elsewhere. From the report of the quartermaster in California to General Jesup, excusing his expenses, I find that he says that the estimates for every kind of building are ten times higher than they can be built for on the Atlantic. I find that he had to pay something like $500 per thousand feet for New England lumber. He says:

"I imagine that it would be a very common public building which on the Atlantic side might cost $5,000. It may appear extravagant to pay here $50,000 for a duplicate of that building; yet this is only multiplying by ten the current ratio in the relative value of labor."

"On the first of July, 1849, lumber was selling at San Francisco for $300 per thousand feet. A better quality of lumber could be purchased in New York for $12—in Maine for $10. The relative value in this important item, appears accordingly as one to fifty. Mechanics everywhere were receiving from $14 to $16 per day—most commonly $16—common laborers from $5 to $7 per day, and no sailor would ship for less than $150 per month. Captains of steamers in civil employment were paid from $700 to $1,500 per month, and the masters of sailing vessels from $300 to $500."

Mr. GWIN. That is two years ago. What are the estimates now?

Mr. HUNTER. I do not know what they are. I give them according to the latest report we have. I know they are high, and being so high, I think we ought to postpone the erection of all buildings which are not actually necessary until the prices of labor and materials are reduced to a standard somewhat nearer the common level. I have obtained an estimate from the Navy Department of such buildings as may be necessary in order to make a commencement in California. The buildings, and the amount necessary for each, are put down as follows:

For foundry.....	$37,000
For machine shop.....	60,000
For blacksmiths' shop.....	37,000

For boiler shop.....	32,000
For engine house, pattern shop, &c.....	24,000
For carpenters' shop.....	30,000
For store-house.....	40,000
For machinery and tools, and freight of same.....	96,000
For wharf.....	50,000
Total.....	$406,000

Now, Mr. President, these buildings are necessary to commence that establishment. I am willing to vote the necessary appropriations for them, although it is perhaps fair to ourselves, fair to the Department, and fair to California herself, to state that these estimates are somewhat conjectural. In relation to the objects proposed in the second section of the bill, I would be willing to devote that sum. But it will be observed that this estimate does not include them; and it would be very expensive for us to attempt to establish a marine barracks and hospital, "together with such works and arrangements for the defense of the same as shall be deemed necessary by the officers appointed to locate this establishment, and approved by the President of the United States." I therefore think that the Senator from Pennsylvania should strike out from his substitute so much as provides for this barracks, in order to confine the work to the plan estimated for by the Department.

Mr. President, so much in relation to the second section. The third section proposes to establish a basin and railway in the event that it should be ascertained, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, that the basin and railways now constructed at Philadelphia and Kittery are in full and successful operation. Mr. President, I am unwilling to launch out into any such experiment, until Congress becomes convinced that they are in successful operation. I believe this matter should be postponed. Here, again, we are in want of an actual survey; we are in want of information from the Department respecting any plan and estimates. Or it may be that the location is not suitable to a basin and railway, or to a stone dock; for I understand that there are great alternations of high and low water; and it would be impossible, except by going to an expense, which the authorities of this country would never dream of incurring, to establish a stone dock; because if it be adjusted to suit the tide at low water, it cannot be used at high water; and if it is fitted for use at high water, it cannot be used at low water. I believe it is yet uncertain whether there are not periods when the floods of the rivers will not bring down the fresh water in such quantities as to add to these alternations of water in the bay of San Francisco, so much as to make it impracticable to establish a stone dock. I do not say it is so; but I say it is a matter which demands inquiry before we establish a stone dock, or before we establish these basins and railways. Besides, I regard these basins and railways as an experiment. I was one of those who voted for these floating docks. I had supposed they were an improvement. I am now much inclined to think that I may have been mistaken in relation to the matter. But I know that when I gave my first vote for one of these docks, I was told that they would take a ship-of-the-line. It was represented that they would anchor at the mouth of the Hudson river, and would be able to receive a ship-of-the-line that it might be repaired, in any weather. I did not then hear of these basins and railways. Now, it seems, you are not only to have a floating dock, but a stone dock, not so expensive, perhaps, as the ordinary stone dock, but still a stone dock which will be very expensive. I am not willing to try this experiment until it is ascertained, not only to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, but also to the satisfaction of Congress, that those which have been made will be useful. I believe that a wooden pier is sufficient; and the pier is estimated to cost only $50,000. I understand from those who are considered competent to inform me, that a wooden pier may be copped also, in a manner which will preserve it. But if a pier is necessary at all, it is as much necessary, I am told, if you have a basin and railway, as if you do not have one. Why is it necessary? Because when these docks are anchored out for the purpose of receiving a ship, the danger is of the ship's rising unequally; that while one of the chains is stretched tight, the other may be loose; and thus the vessel may be shaken in the operation. The use of the pier is to steady this dock when it is rising, and you will have to sink the dock under the ship, in order to raise it up, as much if you have a basin and railway as if you have none. Therefore it is not money thrown away if a pier is established first; for you will need the use of one, not only for the purpose of raising up the dock, but it may be used for the purpose of a wharf.

We are obliged to have a pier, and I am willing to build that pier. I am willing to begin the establishment of a navy-yard, and put up the buildings referred to by the Navy Department, and vote the money necessary for that object; but I am not willing to go further till we have more information on the subject.

I believe that it is best that this establishment should be proceeded with gradually. I am, therefore, willing to vote for the bill, if amended in the manner proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, if he will strike out his provision in relation to the marine barracks, and add at the end this proviso, which is designed to make the bill conform for the present to such objects as I understand are deemed necessary by the Navy Department:

Provided, however, That the buildings, "fixtures," improvements, and pier shall be constructed on such a plan as, with the exception of the money paid for the ground, shall not exceed $500,000.

My object is to cause the work to conform to the plan not to give them the permission to make an establishment on any scale they may fancy—not to leave it discretionary. This would leave it open to future additions, as the necessity for these additions develops itself. As we find, if we should find, that this basin and railway are an improvement; and if we find that it would be better to establish a stone dock, we can add that at some time hereafter.

But, for the present, when we consider how expensive it would be to erect any of these buildings in California, and how necessary it is for us to tread with caution in relation to any of these establishments—I say when we consider all these things, I think the prudent course would be to confine the Secretary to such an establishment as would bring the expenses within the sum of $500,000; which, mark you, sir, is above the estimate that I have read, which is only $406,000, and which is also inclusive of the sum necessary for the purchase of the site.

If the Senator from California will accept this, I am willing to vote for it—I believe they ought to have a navy-yard; and I believe that the work should, so far, be commenced.

Mr. GWIN. I must say a few words in reply to the remarks of the Senator from Virginia, for I look upon the amendment he proposes as fatal to the bill. I therefore deem it proper to say a few words, though I did not intend to take any part in this debate, giving the reasons why I think the amendment objectionable. I must say I have cause to complain of the course which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] has pursued in regard to this bill. I was in favor of the course he has to-day recommended to be pursued when I first introduced the bill; that is, that we should pass a law authorizing the establishment of this navy-yard, and without making any specific appropriation until an examination was made, and the estimates sent in by the proper officers, of the probable cost of the work. The Senator from Virginia opposed the bill in that form, and at his suggestion the Naval Committee altered it and ordered the appropriation.

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator from California will allow me, I will say that I think he is entirely mistaken. I opposed it because no appropriation was included in the bill.

Mr. GWIN. I introduced this bill, and no appropriation was specified because the committee intended to ask for it in the naval appropriation bill. We wanted a board of officers to go and make an examination and send in their estimates before the appropriation was made. The Senator from Virginia then objected because there was no appropriation specified. And he now objects because there is an appropriation asked for in the bill upon his own suggestion; for the Committee on Naval Affairs wished to encounter no opposition upon immaterial points, when, by immaterial amendments, the success of the bill was not endangered. Now, the only person who raised the objection to the original bill, objects to it in its present form when it was thus amended to meet his views. He gets up and reads a report about the price of lumber and other articles two years ago, when everybody knows that the price of many building materials was then ten times as great as they are at present. I have seen lumber sold for $800 per thousand feet, and in a few months thereafter it was sold for less than $100; and everything is falling there at this very time. The argument of the Senator from Virginia is, that because it costs money to create defenses in California, therefore we must make everything temporary to save money. It must be known to the Senate that there is not, at this moment, one gun mounted on the waters of the bay of San Francisco; and any respectable naval power at war with the United States, with a fleet superior to the small naval force we have there, can take possession of the bay of San Francisco, and starve out the whole country. We have no defenses at all; and when I introduce a bill to commence these defenses, objections are raised on the ground that public works there are expensive.

I know it will cost a great deal to make these defenses, and I am in favor of economizing the public money to the fullest extent. But I put this question to the Senate and country: Are our possessions on the Pacific coast worth preserving? If they are, you must not postpone proper defenses, and thus tempt foreign powers to attack us, nor estimate too closely the amount that these defenses will cost.

In regard to the proposition to limit the appropriation to the sum of $500,000, if it is adopted it will cut off the navy-yard entirely. I do not hesitate to say, and the future will prove I am right, that no person of respectable judgment, after a full examination of the location selected for a navy-yard and dock, will ever propose to build a pier of any other material than stone. We have had ample experience of that in the case of the pier at Pensacola, which has already cost upwards of $400,000, and but little more than half finished; and the limitation of the sum in this case, makes the act a dead letter, either as to the pier or navy-yard.

The gentleman from Virginia speaks about the rise and fall of the tide. I should like to know where the tide does not rise and fall. At San Francisco it is only eight feet—very little more than it is at New York. Again, as to the difficulty of which the Senator speaks in regard to location: There is no ground for such an objection, for we have a dozen locations. It is not a question of depth of water at all. We have locations with fifty, a hundred feet—even two hundred feet of water. We have plenty of water everywhere, and the only difficulty is to select the best location, other things being equal. I again repeat, that the limitation proposed by the Senator from Virginia, will defeat the whole measure. We had a similar limitation in regard to our custom-house, and we have not been able to proceed with the building with that degree of dispatch which the public interest requires; and we shall have to ask for another appropriation to complete it.

Mr. HALE. It has been my fortune to know something about these docks, and I wish to say a word or two with regard to the question now before the Senate. I recollect very well that I voted for these docks, with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] some eight or nine years ago, when we were members of the House of Representatives. I was then impressed with the opinion that it was a matter of economy to the Government to build them; but I confess my convictions were somewhat shaken by the remarks and the facts addressed to the consideration of the Senate the other day by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BRODHEAD,] I have since that time given some attention to the subject, and have examined the facts as they exist, and I think I may possibly be able to explain the apparent discrepancies which seemed to exist between the estimates which that Senator stated the memorialists proposed to build the docks for, and the amounts they actually received. The honorable Senator read from a memorial addressed to the Senate some seven or eight years ago, by Gilbert and Dakin, in which he makes the estimate for which they proposed to build the docks, basins, and railways, something like half what they actually received. I will not attempt to state minutely the exact sums, but it is sufficient to state that the sum which the Senator says they agreed to build them for was about half what they did receive. I think it will be seen, by a reference to these memorials, that they relate to the area, to wit: of those at Norfolk, Virginia, and Charlestown, Massachusetts. It will be found, by a reference to the documents, that the length of these two docks was exactly two hundred and ten feet, and the width sixty-feet, making an area of twelve thousand six hundred feet; and it was upon that basis that the proposition of the memorialists was made. They proposed to construct docks of those dimensions.

Since the adoption of the steam-marine, it has been found that these docks are not capacious enough, and are not competent to take in these large vessels; and the Government, in making a contract with these persons, instead of contracting for docks having an area of 12,600 feet, ordered them to be made 350 feet in length, by 90 feet in width, making an area of 31,500 feet. Thus, it makes the docks which the Government actually contracted for by law, equal to twice and a half the capacity of those which the memorialists proposed to build. I think this will sufficiently explain the increased price over the sum estimated for in the memorial.

Let it be borne in mind, that the area of the docks first built at Norfolk and Charlestown, was 12,600 feet, while those at Philadelphia and Kittery have an area of 31,500 feet; so that those now built are nearly three times as large as the original docks. So much for the apparent discrepancy between the estimates of the memorialists, and the price which they actually received.

Then there is another fact. I think that gentlemen somewhat misunderstand the capacity of these docks and their usefulness. We have not a single place on the Pacific coast for docking vessels. If one of these floating docks were built with a pier, that pier would add nothing to the capacity of the dock. It will take only one vessel at a time. Now, if your vessel is in need of repairs, when on the Pacific, it has to come eighteen thousand miles before those repairs can be had, and such a vessel is certainly not in a good condition to make such a voyage; and if you have a dock on the Pacific, by which you can only repair one vessel at a time, it must be admitted that it will be of very little practical benefit. Now, the advantage of a basin and railway in connection with a floating dock is, that when you have once built a dock and basin, you can multiply its facilities indefinitely. You can build a railway outside a basin for $20,000, and these can be multiplied, so as to give you facilities for repairs to an indefinite extent. These railways may be extended for half a mile or a mile; or, as these basins are constructed, there may be five railways on each side of such basin, and two near the shore end; making the basin furnish a capacity for taking out and docking twelve ships, at least. If your railway is extended, the ship fast upon it, and nearest the water, must come off first. However, if you only have one ship at a time on each railway, you can still have twelve ships undergoing repair at the same time—that is, with the capacity of such a dock as that at Kittery, or Philadelphia, or Pensacola; whereas, if you have but a dock and a pier, you can have but one vessel undergoing repair at once.

I think the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] is mistaken in one part of his assumption—that is, that if a pier is built it will constitute a part of a basin and railway. It never can do so. The basin will have a wharf next the sea, and it will answer for the width of a pier by which the dock may be moved; but a pier made by itself never can be made practicable as a part of a basin in which vessels are to be put.

Now, let me say one word in regard to the practicability of building wooden piers in these waters. I believe it is conceded that if they are built of wood, they must be coppered. Now, do gentlemen know how long the coppering on a vessel will last? Do they know how long it will stand the corrosive action of the waves? I believe that six years is the extent of time. Gentlemen will correct me, if I am mistaken. You copper your vessel, and you put her to sea; and under the ordinary navigation of a vessel one well-coppered and copper-fastened will have its copper worn out in six years. That, I believe, is an established fact. If I am not correct, I will thank any one more conversant with the matter than I am to correct me; but I am told that the copper will not wear more than six years, so that if you build your pier, and copper it, you will have substantially to rebuild it every six years. I understand that it has been tried in Florida, and that the Government abandoned the idea of building wooden piers, and are now building stone piers. Now, if it is to be built, if the structure must be of stone, and if it is not practicable to build it of wood, and copper it so as to make it last more than six years, it seems to me that it had better be done with the material already contracted for.

These are matters of practical importance that are placed before the country. But I think there is something due to the honor of the Government, and the question is, "Whether the Government ever made a contract with these individuals or not."

I find in the appropriation bill, passed in 1851, this provision:

"That the Secretary of the Navy is required to modify the contract alleged to have been made on the 17th of January last."

The Secretary of the Navy is required to modify a contract! How can the Secretary of the Navy, or anybody else, modify a contract, unless the other party consent?

If the Government admit that they have made a contract, it is folly for them to talk of modifying it when it is made. It takes two parties to make a contract, and it takes just as many to modify it! The Government may rest on its arbitrary power, and refuse to comply with the contract, but it can claim no right to alter any of the terms.

But some gentlemen speak as though the Government was not legally bound, inasmuch as the contract was not signed. They say that although the terms were duly accepted, yet the Government is not bound because no contract was legally entered into. Now, I say that, in that view of the subject, the Government can never make a legal contract, because they cannot enter into a covenant to which legal considerations attach, and because it is impossible to attach any legal liability to the acts of the sovereign power.

It would be impossible for individuals to claim a similar exemption, because the statute of frauds comes in and says, that "two individuals cannot enter into such a contract without it is reduced to writing." But neither the statute of frauds, nor the statute of limitations applies to the sovereign power, and in that sense, the Government can never make a contract with another party by mutual obligations, because the Government cannot make any contract, to the infraction of which a legal remedy will attach.

Then, so far as the Government is concerned, the contract was as fully made when the proposals were acceded to, as if the contract had been committed to writing. If Senators will look into the clause of the appropriation bill relating to the contract, they will find that Congress did not undertake to do so mean a thing as to direct the Secretary of the Navy to depart from the terms of a contract already made. The language is this:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy be required to modify the contract alleged to have been made on the 17th of January last, so as to confine the sum to the construction of a floating dock alone, without a basin and railway."

Thus, the Secretary of the Navy was required to apply the sum of $150,000, then appropriated, to the construction of a dock, leaving the basin and railway to be provided for afterwards. In other words, it was the expression of the sense of Congress, that they wanted a dock built first; and that they required the money then appropriated to be applied to the building of a dock alone. They went on, therefore, to repeal so much of the law as authorized the construction of a basin and railway. What was the meaning of that? There was a difference of opinion in Congress about this matter. Some said there was a contract. The Secretary of the Navy thought so, and some gentleman said no; there was no contract. Congress said, by this act, we will not examine; but to leave it all right, we will apply the money which we appropriate to-day, and leave the building of the basin and railway open. If there is not a contract made, we will not confer authority to make one. What is the whole of the matter and the fair import of the proviso? There was nothing in the proviso from which anybody could infer that Congress would do so dishonorable an act as to refuse to comply with the contract which they had ordered to be made. So that, in my opinion, that contract is binding upon the Government by every obligation which can rest upon it. A legal obligation, it is true, cannot rest upon it; but an honorable one can, and always does.

On a former occasion, the honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. RHETT] said, with great pertinency, that if a merchant were to enter into such a stipulation as the Government had entered into, and refused to perform it because it could not be written, he would be disgraced on 'Change, and he, the Senator from South Carolina, would be unwilling to place the Government in a position in which he would not place a merchant and a gentleman; and I hope that none of us would be willing to do so. Now, if that be the case, this Government is bound by law and by contract, and by every honorable obligation which can bind honorable minds, to fulfill those contracts which our officers, under laws of our passing, have entered into with these gentlemen. Nor, sir, can it be said that the Government of the United States has made an improvident bargain; for this matter was all submitted to the bureau of docks and yards; and Commodore Smith, after calling all the aids he could, and the aid of all the officers to which it properly belonged, submitted a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, in which he estimates the cost of this work, if built by the Government, at $1,883,619, and then gives the contract price made with these individuals at $1,455,000; and it is the opinion of the bureau of docks and yards, that by the agreement made with these gentlemen, there has been an actual saving to the Government of $428,000, over and above what it would have cost the Government if they had built it by their own means. This is found in a letter addressed by Commodore Smith to the Secretary of the Navy, on the 14th of October, 1850. If these documents are correct, here is a law proposing to build a basin, dock, or railway in California, and a contract entered into by the Secretary of the Navy under that law with these gentlemen for building, and that law should be executed so far as anything remained for the Government to do, by entering into this contract, and by the opinion of the officer whose duty it was to superintend this matter, and who took great pains to ascertain the cost, and fully inform himself, we learn that this contract was actually made with a saving to the Government of nearly $500,000. Now, why should not this thing go on? It is said that it has not been tested. I have taken some pains to look into that. It has been said that the dock at Philadelphia has not been tested; but I find, by the opinion of the Attorney General, that the contractors had complied with everything they had pledged themselves to do; and that if there had been any delay in testing the work, that delay was at the door of the Government—that the Government had been negligent, and not the contractors; and upon that opinion of Mr. Crittenden, the balance of twenty per cent, which was to be retained till the testing of the dock, has been actually paid over to them.

Then, sir, there is another reason: in the report of the Naval Committee, which was submitted in this House of Representatives, they speak in this wise of the utility and practicability of these docks.

I will read from the report of the Naval Committee, made in 1848, prior to the passage of this law. In that report it is stated:

"It is worthy of remark, that the whole body of practical shipwrights and ship-builders, without a single exception, in the cities of Philadelphia and New York, (in the latter of which, the new plan has been in use for many years, and still is, for the largest ships,) have united in memorializing Congress, in favor of it, declaring that, in their opinion, it is in all respects superior to any other mode whatever."

And, sir, though these specific docks that the Government contracted for have not been tested, other docks constructed on the same principle have been tested, and the steam-ship "Baltic," a vessel larger than the "Pennsylvania," has been actually docked in one of them in the harbor of New York. So that, excepting so far as these particular docks belonging to the Government are concerned, it is not an untried experiment; and, if the report of the Attorney General is true, the blame of not having tested these docks attaches to the Government alone, and not to the contractors—the fault lies not at their door, but at the door of the Government.

Now, shall the Government take advantage of its own wrong? Shall Government, for any reason, refuse to perform anything that is honorably binding on it?

Sir, it is my decided conviction, from the best examination that I have been able to give the subject, that, as a matter of expediency and propriety, we ought to proceed with the work; that, as a matter due to California, we ought to proceed and give them some means of repairing their merchant marine and the national vessels sent there. So far as is necessary for an experiment, we have all the light that is necessary, and for this reason, I am in favor of going on with the dock. I am for redeeming the faith of the Government, expressed to the contractors, and implied to the people of California, that they should have the same facilities, so far as they can be extended, of fortifying their coast, and repairing their merchant marine, which are extended to the inhabitants of the Atlantic coast. I see no other practicable mode but to go on and redeem the faith pledged to the contractors, and by completing the contract, according to that section of the law providing for it. For these reasons I will vote against any amendment to the bill.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, the Senator from California says that he has some cause to complain of the mode in which I have opposed this bill—that I opposed it when it was first introduced, because there was no appropriation in it, and now oppose it because there is an appropriation in it and no estimates. Why, the Senator from California totally mistakes my course in relation to this matter. When he first called up the bill, on hearing it read, it struck me at once that there was no appropriation limiting the power of the President. I got up and objected to that, and said I should move to strike out the second section, giving authority to make these establishments, because I thought it gave authority to the Executive to run us indefinitely into debt. I was unwilling, without limitations, to vote for the establishment of a navy-yard. I did not say that there should be no other limitation than one contained in an appropriation of money. The Senator has had the bill amended, and proposes to add an appropriation; but that he has not gone far enough in the estimation of the two Houses of Congress, I have shown by a reference to a statute. I could have referred to another statute of the same sort, if necessary. These statutes show clearly that it was the sense of Congress that there should be specific plans and estimates accompanying all these projects for the establishment of public buildings. I am now willing to make a commencement; I am willing to give what is necessary to start with; but I want to feel my way as I proceed; I want to know what it is in which we are embarking the Government.

I do not object to giving California the necessary establishments because they are expensive. I admit we must do it. But I say we must beware how we go beyond what is necessary, because a mistake there would lead us into far more serious consequences than a mistake would elsewhere, where prices are lower. That is what I say.

The Senator says that everything I propose for California is temporary. Not at all. As far as we go, I propose to have permanent fixtures and permanent buildings—such buildings as will always be necessary, and leave it open for us how fast and how far we shall make additions to these hereafter. Why, I read an estimate for a foundry. Is that a temporary building? Is it not a necessary and a permanent one? I read estimates for a machine shop, a blacksmiths' shop, a boiler shop, an engine house, a carpenters' shop, a storehouse, and machinery, and tools, and freight for the same. I also read an estimate for a wharf or pier, which, I understand, will be sufficient to enable them to work the floating dock. All of these are necessary and permanent buildings, which would have to be established under any bill. The only difference between my scheme and that of the Senator from California is, that I propose to establish these now, and wait to give authority to others hereafter. I know that hereafter we shall have to provide for other establishments, such as an hospital and a marine barracks; but I wish to proceed by degrees, to make our contracts as they are necessary, and to take the chances that prices may fall in that country.

The Senator seems to think that I made an objection that there could be no dock near San Francisco, because the tide rose and fell. Not at all. I know that that is no objection, for the tide rises and falls wherever there are stone docks; and I know that it produces alternations in the depth of the water of short duration. What I spoke of was quite another thing. I say, that we do not know, and cannot know, without a survey, and a careful survey, of the spot which may be selected, its adaptation for the purpose. I do not know where it will be selected. What I referred to was, whether the accumulation of fresh waters in the rivers may not produce, owing to the damming up of those fresh waters by the tides, long periods when there is a very great difference between high and low water. I was informed that, if such should be the case, any such location would be unfit for a basin of any sort. I know that there are situations in California which can be subject to no such objection; but I say that, before we proceed to establish it, or to authorize the establishment of anything so expensive, we ought to know that a proper location is proposed—one free of all danger of this kind.

Nor did I say that a pier was a necessary part of the basin. I said that I had been informed a pier would be necessary whether you had a basin or not, to steady the dock as it was rising with the ship; and that that was the process we should have to go through, no matter whether we had a basin or not. The ship must be raised before it can be carried into the basin. I do not state this from my own knowledge, for I have no practical knowledge on such subjects; but I derive the information from those on whom I have a right to rely, and I think that the statement appears to carry reason with it. It must be so.

Mr. BADGER. I would suggest to the Senator that the basin and railway of which he speaks include a pier. One of the sides is projected out, say one hundred and fifty feet, so as to answer the purpose of a pier extending into the deep water, for the purpose of protecting the dock which lies there to receive the ship, in order to be raised and moved within the basin.

Mr. HUNTER. If the basin includes a pier, it strengthens the view I have taken, that we can risk nothing by making a pier at first, because it will be necessary in any event. I have given one reason why it is necessary—because it is required to steady the dock as it rises with the ship. The Senator from North Carolina gives another reason why we run no risk in making it—because it is a necessary part of the basin.

Mr. BADGER. Although the basin and railway include the pier, yet the pier which the Senator proposes to construct as an independent one will not be adapted to the basin, and cannot be used with it.

Mr. HUNTER. I am informed otherwise. At any rate, we know that the estimate for the pier is about $50,000; and we run no risk in trying this. I have given a very sufficient reason, I think, to show that the pier will be necessary, in any event, whether it forms a part of the basin or not. It will be necessary to steady the dock as it rises with the ship. I am willing to go just so far as may be necessary to enable us to use the dock—to enable us to commence the establishment of a navy-yard; and proceed hereafter step by step, as the necessity of the case may develop the propriety of such action. This is what I am in favor of.

Something has been said in relation to a contract. I presume that the Secretary of the Navy has examined that matter. I confess that I have given no very particular attention to it. I had presumed that an authority was originally given to contract for more than the dock; and that before the contract was consummated and made, the authority was revoked, and that the Secretary, acting under this revocation of power, contracted for less than what was originally proposed he should contract for. That, I had presumed, was the case. But I do not profess to have examined the papers attentively, and I do not speak with certainty. At any rate, if I was led into the error, I was led to it in part, by the bill itself. What does the bill propose to do? It establishes the basin and railway as soon as "it shall have been ascertained to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, that 'the basin and railway now being constructed at Philadelphia, or Kittery, are in full and successful operation.'" Why, if this is a positive obligation, we have no right to provide for this on a contingency.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to say to my friend, that it was a part of the contract, as the Secretary reported to us, that the basin and railway were not to be constructed, unless he should be satisfied, by experiment, that it could be carried into full and successful operation. The contract was conditional on that.

Mr. HUNTER. What right had he to impose such a condition, if the original law made it imperative on him to contract for a basin and railway? What right had he to impose conditions other than the law presented? If he had discretion in relation to this contract, he had full discretion; and, in the exercise of that discretion, when the power was revoked, he determined to contract for nothing but the dock.

Now, why not proceed by degrees? Let us establish this pier. Let us, then, further experiment, and see whether the basin and railway will be necessary. If we should find that they were necessary, I should be willing to vote for them, but not until then. But I am not willing to leave this matter—and I mean no disparagement to the Secretary of the Navy—solely to his discretion. I wish it to be left also to the discretion of Congress, and when they are convinced that it has been successfully tried, and that it is necessary to establish it, then I have no doubt they will do so. I hope that that portion of it will be postponed until that time. My object in proposing the limitation of $500,000 was not to prevent an extension of this establishment hereafter, but to require them to proceed by degrees, according to estimates; not to erect temporary buildings, but to erect only a portion of the permanent buildings, and such portion as might be necessary to establish the navy yard and commerce operations successfully. Who will say, that with these buildings, with the dock which is already provided for, and which is soon to go round to San Francisco, with the pier which I propose, they will not be able to repair ships of any size in California—that is to say, if the dock will take them? I have no doubt—at least, I have not much doubt—but that it will; and if there be any inability to repair ships there, it will arise, not out of the want of workshops, if my proposition should pass, but from the incapacity of the dock to raise and sustain them.

Mr. GWIN. When this bill first came before the Senate, the Senator from Virginia objected because it contained no appropriation. In order to waive that objection, an appropriation was introduced into it. It had been omitted because, as I stated before, it could have been added to the naval appropriation bill, when it should be brought up for consideration. I brought the Senator's objection to the notice of the Naval Committee, and, that the bill might pass with as little opposition as possible, and at my suggestion, originating with the Senator himself, the amendment adding the appropriation was agreed to. The Senator says if this appropriation had not been put in the bill, when it became a law, under it the President of the United States would have had unlimited power to make contracts for any amount he pleased. The Senator is altogether mistaken. Unless there be an appropriation he has no right to make any contract, and would not dare to do it; nor will any Executive officer of this Government make a contract to carry out a law when no appropriation is made for the purpose of carrying that law into effect. Notwithstanding this undoubted fact, established by law for more than thirty years, yet to avoid the opposition of the Senator from Virginia, the appropriation was inserted in the bill, before the estimates, which the committee intended to wait for, could be prepared by the board of officers to be sent out to California. It was originally intended to do the very thing which he now proposes in the naval appropriation bill; but in order to conciliate him—for I know that his opposition to this or any other measure is not to be disregarded—we have put that in the bill, upon which he now bases his objections to its passage. Originally, he said he wanted a limitation by an appropriation, because the President would have unlimited power to make contracts under the law if we should put in no appropriation. But the Senator is mistaken. The President has no power to make a contract, "except under a law authorizing the same, or under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment," (act 1st May, 1820, section 6.) There is no authority given in this bill to contract for any of the materials for the navy-yard.

A word in answer to what the Senator says of the rivers that run into the bay of San Francisco. I happen to know something about them. Here is a map of the bay of San Francisco, [holding it up and exhibiting it.] That bay is forty miles long, from where those rivers enter it, to the ocean. Here are Sausalito Raccoon Straits; Angel Island; Aspinwall Bay; the Straits of Carquinas, and many other points, besides Mare Island. They all afford bold soundings—some one hundred feet—more water than is required for any description of dock. There is no danger of filling up. The difficulty is not to get a good location, but to select between a number of good ones. There is no possibility of filling up the channel at any one of these points. In some places there is water to the depth of two hundred, or more, feet.

The Senator insists upon a wooden pier—a temporary one. Why, nobody believes that when the dock goes there, there will not be a temporary pier made, so as to work it to some extent immediately. I never thought otherwise—I never contended otherwise. What kind of a temporary pier will be erected there? Why, a crib of logs will be sunk at a proper place, and filled with concrete and stone, so as to answer for a temporary pier at the least possible cost. When the logs are worm eaten, the stone and concrete will make a pier. But when you are to build a pier to last for a thousand years, (and such a work ought to be durable for the purposes of the Government,) a wooden pier will not answer. It must be a stone pier. But it is said the dock will be built of wood. Yes; but you can repair it easily. One section can be repaired while other sections are in working order; and it can be preserved from year to year by repair.

I will not detain the Senate longer. The Senator has brought forward estimates here; and how did he get them? Has the Secretary of the Navy sent them here? The Senator admits that they are but guesses; and I think I am as good at guessing as the Secretary of the Navy, and his heads of bureaus. I know as much about that country, and I say that these estimates are mere guess-work. I know very well that estimates will be made before any contract will be entered into, because a naval board of officers has gone out there for the purpose.

The Senator says he does not want a marine barracks in California. Now, does it not seem ridiculous that we should have no station for marines on the Pacific coast?—no place where a corps of marines can be quartered; if an occasion should arise which would render it necessary to concentrate our forces on the Pacific coast? There we have a coast of nearly two thousand miles in extent, and not a single marine barracks. It is to the sea that we are to guard against our enemies. The Senator wishes us to get things little by little—to be passing laws for the same object time and again for California. I am for a general law. I do not see the necessity of coming to Congress session after session to get special laws passed, when a general law ought to be passed at once.

Mr. CLARKE. The day is now so far spent, that I think we shall hardly be able to get through with this subject to-day. I desire to address some few remarks to the Senate upon this bill, but it is so late that it will be hardly possible for me to proceed now, so as to gain the attention of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. To accommodate my friend from Rhode Island, I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

CARMELITE NUNNERY OF BALTIMORE.

Mr. COOPER. At the request of several gentlemen who were absent, but who desire to vote upon the bill, which was rejected on Friday, for the benefit of the Carmelite Nunnery of Baltimore, I move a reconsideration of the vote rejecting it.

Mr. BORLAND. I suppose the motion to reconsider opens the consideration of the bill itself.

The PRESIDENT. The motion is to reconsider the vote, by which the bill was rejected.

Mr. BORLAND. Before the question is taken, I wish that the memorial upon which the bill is founded, may be read to the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. I suppose it is not desired, that the vote shall now be taken on the motion to reconsider, but that it will lie over until Friday.

Mr. COOPER. I simply wished to make the motion within the necessary time. I have no disposition to press it now.

The PRESIDENT. The motion will be recorded.

Mr. BORLAND. If the motion lies over, I have nothing to say now.

GOLD AND SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. HUNTER. I would be glad if the Senate would take up the bill, "amendatory of the existing laws relating to the dollar, dime, and half dime." I believe there is no objection to it. We can pass it this evening.

It was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that from and after June 1st, 1852, the weight of the half dollar piece shall be one hundred and ninety-two grains, and the quarter dollar, dime, and half dime shall be, respectively, one half, one fifth, and one tenth of the weight of the half dollar; that the silver coins issued in conformity with this act shall be legal tenders in payment for all sums not exceeding five dollars; that, in order to procure bullion for the requisite coinage of sub-divisions of the dollar, the treasurer of the mint shall, with the approval of the director, purchase bullion with the bullion fund of the mint; that these coins shall be paid out at the mint in exchange for gold coins in sums not less than $100; that the amount of half dollars, quarter dollars, dimes, and half dimes to be coined, shall be regulated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that no deposits shall be received hereafter for coinage other than those made by the treasurer of the mint on account of the United States. The bill further provides, that, at the option of the depositor, gold or silver may be cast into bars or ingots of pure or standard fineness, as the owner may prefer, with a stamp on it, designating its weight and fineness; the bars or ingots to be either one, two, three, five, or ten ounces in weight; but in cases where gold or silver is cast into ingots, there shall be charged to the depositor, in addition to the charge now made, for refining and parting, one half of one per cent. The bill also provides, that from time to time there shall be coined at the United States Mint and its branches, a gold piece of the value of three dollars, and that all the provisions of an act approved March 3, 1849, "to authorize the coinage of gold dollars and double eagles," shall be applied to the coin herein authorized, so far as they may be applicable, but the devices and shape of the three dollar piece shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury. This act is to be in force from and after—

Mr. HUNTER. I move to fill the blank with "the first day of May next."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendment was concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

COMPENSATION OF DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. HALE. I move to postpone all prior orders, for the purpose of taking up Senate bill No. 52, which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary—being a bill increasing the salary of the district judge of the United States for the district of New Hampshire. I will state a single reason why it should be taken up. There have been applications presented here from New York and Massachusetts, praying that the district judges of Vermont and New Hampshire might be liable to perform duties in those States. A bill to that effect has passed, and become a law. The salary of the district judge of New Hampshire is $1,000—the smallest upon the whole calendar of the thirty-one States. You have passed a law extending his jurisdiction to the adjoining States; and I think the least you can do is to give him a comfortable support. The Judiciary Committee unanimously recommend an increase to $1,600 per annum. I hope the Senate will take up the bill and pass it.

Mr. DAWSON. I would say to the Senator from New Hampshire, that there are various propositions of that kind, and that it would be better to put them all in the same bill, and pass them together.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; they are different bills.

Mr. DAWSON. Then I shall oppose this. I would prefer to have them all together.

The motion to take up the bill was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole.

It enacts that there be paid to the district judge of the United States for the district of New Hampshire an annual salary of $1,600, instead of the salary now established by law. It was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment to strike out the words, "instead of the salary now established by law," and insert, "to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, in quarterly payments."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Let me state very briefly to the Senate, a few reasons why this bill should pass, and then let me entreat those who are friendly to it, not to kill it with amendments. I will endeavor to do justice to everybody else. The salary of the district judge of the district of New Hampshire is $1,000. By the law of the United States he is debarred from practising in any other court. Of course you expect a lawyer and a gentleman to fill that office. The bar of the State have repeatedly, for a great number of years, memorialized Congress, stating the entire insufficiency of the salary, and praying Congress to increase it. A year or two since an application was made from the western district of Virginia—and I crave the ear of the Senator from Virginia—to raise the salary of the district judge of that district from $1,600—the sum to which it is now proposed to raise that of the district judge of the district of New Hampshire—to $2,500. The committee reported favorably upon it, and the bill was brought up for consideration. I was proposing to make an amendment to increase the salary of the district judge of New Hampshire; but the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MASON] entreated me not to embarrass his bill by it, because the consequence might be to defeat the bill, and said that when this came up it should be treated fairly. I refrained to offer my amendment, because I thought that that salary ought to be raised, and I did not want to embarrass it by any other question, and his bill passed the Senate. Now, if the Senate think that the salary of the district judge of New Hampshire is entirely inadequate, particularly under the operation of a law which you have just signed, by which his judicial duties are extended to Massachusetts and New York, and anywhere else in the adjoining States—for when the business on the docket requires it, the judge, by law, is liable to be called into any of these States—I ask them to pass this bill. I ask every Senator if $1,000 is an adequate sum to be paid for such a gentleman as ought to fill that station, his jurisdiction extending to Massachusetts and New York? If, then, Senators think that it is entirely inadequate, I do beg them, by every consideration of justice, that they will pass it, and not embarrass it with amendments of other bills which may be equally meritorious. When those bills come up we will do justice to them. I ask for justice to my judge.

Mr. SHIELDS. I certainly think that a salary of $1,000 is insufficient for a judge, and shall vote most cheerfully for the gentleman's bill. But there have been bills reported to increase the salaries of other judges. In my State, I believe, the salary of the United States judge is $1,500, and that amount is not considered at all adequate as a salary. The committee reported in favor of increasing it to $2,000, and I apprehend that $2,000 there is about equal to $1,600 in New Hampshire; that is, a man is not better paid there at $2,000, than he is in New Hampshire by receiving $1,500 or $1,600. I have no wish whatever to embarrass this bill; but my impression is that the object is a legitimate one, and that it would be better to include the cases of all the judges in one bill. Now, I know that in my State a salary of $2,000, considering the duties which a judge has to perform, and the expenses of living, is by no means unreasonable; on the contrary, that it is nothing more than an adequate salary; and without any wish to embarrass the bill, as the committee has already reported on this, I believe, two sessions ago, I will move an amendment that the district judge of the district of Illinois be included, that his salary be increased to $2,000.

Mr. CLARKE. In this consideration of the salaries of district judges throughout the country, it appears to me as though the Judiciary Committee had better provide for the salaries of the several district judges, instead of confining it to one. I do not mean to throw any obstruction in the way of the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire, and I should not desire to propose an amendment to the bill, unless the proposition made by the Senator from Illinois should be adopted. A petition was presented to this body, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, asking for an increase in the salary of the district judge of the district of Rhode Island; and every reason which has been so well assigned by the Senators from New Hampshire and Illinois for an increase in the salaries of the judges in their districts, as strongly applies to an increase of the salary of the district judge of Rhode Island. It is hardly necessary for me to say that in that judicial district there is a great amount of maritime business, which necessarily comes before the judge of the district. And I may also be permitted to say, that a great deal of the business of the circuit court of the United States for that district falls on the district judge exclusively. He has, besides sitting with the circuit judge, to do at least one half of the business of the circuit court, without the assistance of the circuit judge of the United States. His business, as district judge, is very large. The salary now paid him is $1,500. Within the last few years he has been obliged to go to New York, and hold a district court there. He also had to go to Boston during the absence of Judge Sprague, and hold a court there. His expenses have been necessarily very much increased; and that officer is absolutely now living upon a pittance of $1,500 a year, which is less than the chief justice of the supreme court of the State gets. Under these circumstances, if an amendment is to be made to this bill, though I do not wish to interfere with my friend from New Hampshire, I beg leave to ask that it may be amended so as to give to the district judge of the district of Rhode Island $2,000 a year, instead of $1,500, which he now receives. The salary of $1,500 was fixed some ten or fifteen years ago. Since that time his business has increased, probably more than double, and his expenses of living, as we all know, have very much increased. I have one thing more to say; notwithstanding he is a prudent man, I am sorry to say that after all the salary he has received from the United States, he is, not absolutely, perhaps, destitute of property, but he has very little. Under these circumstances, if the amendment proposed by my friend from Illinois be added to the bill, I shall ask that it may be amended so that the salary of the district judge of Rhode Island will be increased to $2,000.

Mr. RHETT. If the amendment of the honorable Senator from Illinois, and the amendment of the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, are to be brought forward, I shall be compelled to bring forward one of my own; and I presume every Senator on this floor, who knows that the judiciary of the United States in his State are not properly paid, will feel bound also, on this occasion, to bring forward various propositions for additional compensation. But in this case it seems to me that the Senate must be driven to one of the two alternatives. Let us legislate on each particular case, as on that which the Senator from New Hampshire has up, or let us have a general bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. For my part, I am perfectly satisfied that our judges are the worst paid men, in proportion to their character, age, and learning, that there are on the continent; and, consequently, I am prepared to vote for a general bill that will cover additional compensation for the United States judges from one end of the Union to the other. I say now to the Senate, let us make up our minds to do one of two things. Take up these bills separately, and consider and vote on each separately; or let us determine to have a general bill, and vote upon all the cases according to the report of the committee and the merits of each. I prefer a general bill, I must confess; but at the same time I say that, as the case brought forward by the Senator from New Hampshire is under consideration, I shall not myself offer any amendment unless others do. I was prepared directly to vote it through, and I am now prepared to vote for the bill before the Senate. I think it just and proper; and I do not think that it is exactly right in principle to postpone justice in one case, because injustice is done to others, with the hope that you may afterwards do justice aggregately. On that ground, I shall vote for the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire; but I say now, that if amendments are to be offered, let us have them all round. The Senate is not full. Let the Senate be full; and let all the representatives from the different parts of the country, where the judiciary are improperly paid, come together and make a proper bill, doing justice to all.

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not rise to oppose action on this bill, but to state the fact that a very large number of applications for an increase of the salary of district judges have been referred to the Judiciary Committee. That committee now have the subject under consideration. I think that the applications embrace the cases of more than twenty judges; and I venture to say that the subject will receive the early attention of the committee. They intend, when all the cases come in, to consider the whole; and if, in their judgment necessity requires it, to report a general bill. I do not, however, state this fact with a view of opposing action on those bills which were reported before such a large number of applications came in.

Mr. SHIELDS. The observations made by the honorable Senator from South Carolina, I think are so pertinent that I shall withdraw my amendment. I do it because I think we can very safely vote for this bill as it is. Every man will admit, that $1,000 is not an adequate compensation, and that $1,600 is not unreasonable. So I think I may safely vote for the bill, and not to embarrass it, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. At the last session, and again at this session of Congress, a memorial, signed by nearly all the bar in the county of Suffolk and city of Boston, Massachusetts, was presented, in which they represented that in their judgment the district judge of that district is very inadequately compensated. When we look at the increase of business which has grown up, and more especially that in the admiralty department of it occupying a very large portion of all the time of that learned judge, the salary which I believe is $2,000, or $2,500, every gentleman who knows the expenses of living in Boston, knows is entirely inadequate to a comfortable and reasonable support. The associate judges of our State supreme court have $3,000 a year, and the chief justice $3,500 a year; and it is a very plain matter, I apprehend, that the district judge ought to have a compensation equal to those associate judges. He is compelled to reside within the city, and to incur the expenses which are incident to a residence there, and the sum of $2,500, I think my colleague, and every other gentleman who is acquainted with the city, will say is entirely inadequate, and that it ought to be increased.

Mr. SUMNER. It is entirely inadequate.

Mr. DOWNS. That, I believe, is the opinion of the whole bar. The memorial in this case is signed by nearly all the members of the bar. Under these circumstances, I am glad to hear from the honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. BRADBURY] that the subject is under the consideration of the Judiciary Committee. It was under the care of the honorable Senator from Georgia, [Mr. BERRIEN], who is now absent. It is not my wish to interpose any obstacle to the passage of the bill of the honorable Senator from New Hampshire. At the same time, I think there ought to be some general provision to meet the cases where it is proper there should be an increase.

Mr. HALE. I believe that there is not a single Senator but what is satisfied that this bill ought to pass; and I am exceedingly obliged to the Senator from Illinois for withdrawing his amendment. I want to state that this has been before the Committee on the Judiciary, and they have reported it. The case to which the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS] refers, has also been before them, and they have reported upon it. The proposition to increase the salary of the judge of this District has also been before them, and they have reported upon it; and also a bill to increase the salary of the district judge for the Southern district of Florida. The committee have had these before them, and refused to conglomerate—to put them together. So far as these are concerned, they have reported them separately. And now, inasmuch as everybody believes this bill ought to pass, and as the only objection is, that there are a great many more which ought to be passed, I beg them to do right now, and it will be considered a precedent for other bills of the same sort which may come up hereafter.

Mr. BORLAND. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HALE] is, to a small extent, at any rate, mistaken, if he supposes there is no opposition to this bill. I am opposed to its passage; and, even if there were no other reason, I am opposed to it upon the very ground for which he seems specially to urge it at this time—that is, as a precedent for increasing the salaries of Federal officers.

I do not undertake to say that the gentleman who holds the office of district judge in New Hampshire may not fairly, by the devotion of his time and talents to the public service, be entitled to more than he now receives under the law. But I inquire of the Senator, [Mr. HALE,] what is the amount of salary paid to his State judges?

Mr. HALE. The chief justice of the supreme court gets $1,400, and the associate judges get $1,200 each; besides which, they have additional compensation for reporting their decisions.

Mr. BORLAND. Then, I suppose, if this Federal judge be, as I doubt not he is, competent to perform the duties of his office, he might be allowed the same salary as one of the State judges, but no more.

I made the inquiry, expecting to find the fact in this case as I have in others, that the salary of the State judge is less than that of the Federal judge in the same State. It turns out, however, that here the State judge receives a little more. In my own State, and in some, I believe most others, the Federal judge receives the higher salary. In my State, the salary of the United States district judge is $2,000; whereas, the chief justice, and associate judges of the supreme court, get $1,500, and the circuit court judges get $1,200 each; and yet these State judges are occupied a larger portion of time, and have much more labor to perform. That they have equal learning and talents, and sustain equal responsibilities, I do not hesitate to say, without disparagement to the Federal judge; that no one will question. Not only does this Federal judge get a larger salary than any of our State judges, but larger than any one of our State officers. Our Governor gets but $1,800.

Mr. President, I am unwilling to set up a standard for compensating Federal officers of any class, which shall assume an estimate of their services as of a higher value than the services of State officers, of the same class, in the same State. I can see no good reason for it. But I think I do see a most conclusive reason against it, in the effect such a policy has already had, and will continue to have, upon the character of our Government. It contributes to make this Federal Government the great object of admiration—the great center of attraction—to the popular eye, and to the office-seeker's heart. It tends to build up, here, a great store-house of patronage, which draws, by the richness of its contents, a horde of hungry applicants to its doors. As far as such moneyed (and we know they are moneyed) influences can accomplish such end—and who does not witness their potency and their evils every day?—they divert the currents of patriotism from their legitimate channels, and impair, by turning in the wrong direction, the feelings of attachment and respect which the citizen should be encouraged to cherish, above all other public sentiments, for the State in which he was born, or to which his allegiance may be due. Such influences I consider among the most potent and dangerous of the causes which are operating to change the form and character of our present system of Government.

From the frequency with which I have suggested the dangers of centralism, recently, I may seem to some to be a sort of monomaniac on the subject. I confess, sir, I am alive, sensitively alive, to what I regard as this dangerous tendency in our system of Government; for all around me there are causes, small they may be severally, but innumerable, which strike upon my every sense, and tell me in terms I can neither misunderstand nor disregard that there is danger; and that, unless it be met and resisted at every point, we shall be overcome by it. And in this proposed increase of salary to Federal officers, I care not whether they be judicial or executive, this danger presents to me an aspect so strongly characterized by its parent source, and therefore so forbidding, that I cannot hesitate a moment to raise my voice against its admission here. Sir, it has long wielded, it is wielding now, and will continue to wield, a potent influence over the country. This bill proposes to augment, by a drop only, I admit, in this case—yet to augment an existing evil—a growing danger. I shall vote against it.

Mr. CLARKE. I intimated a short time since, a desire to make an amendment to this bill, including the district judge of Rhode Island; but after what has been said, and the extreme reasonableness and necessity of passing this bill, for which the Senator from New Hampshire seems to be anxious, I shall postpone to a future day any such movement, and beg of my friend from Maine to induce the Judiciary Committee to report a bill in relation to the salaries of all these judges. I have no fear, such as the Senator from Arkansas has expressed, that the increase of the salaries of the judicial officers of our Government will have a tendency to consolidate or to injure the purity of this Government. If he has any such apprehension in regard to his own State—if he believes that the salary of the district judge for that State ($2,000) is too large, I would suggest to him whether some reduction could not be made in it, in order to meet the increase of the salary of the judge in the State of my friend from New Hampshire; and then this consolidation and patronage would be so far diminished as to do away with the fear of my friend from Arkansas. I know that my friend from New Hampshire has no fears whatever. I hope we may pass the bill.

Mr. DAWSON. I trust that there will be no action taken on this bill to-day. The subject has been referred to the Judiciary Committee; and the first ground on which application was made to increase the salaries of judges in certain States, was because a judge in one State was required to discharge duties in another, where labor was great. That brought the question directly before the Judiciary Committee, and my colleague, [Mr. BERRIEN,] who is absent, but who is conversant with the subject, is now overlooking the whole matter, in order to regulate the salaries of these Federal officers throughout the United States. We are asked to pass this bill first. Why, this is the last bill on the subject which was reported from the committee. There were three reported before it in point of time. The first of these bills on the Calendar is in relation to the salary of the judge for the district of Massachusetts. Now, I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not think hard of me if I remind him of what he said this morning, when he announced that he had but one year longer to remain here, and that he wished to say to his constituents that he had seen business done in order for one day at least; and yet here he is, having this bill taken up out of its order, and asking to have it passed through.

Here is a great question to be decided; and I agree with the Senator from Arkansas, that it is one of principle. Say what we please about it, the salary of no judge of this description should exceed the salary of the State judges. That is the principle to which I would adhere; and I would make the salaries of these various judges equal to the salaries of the judges of the States in which they reside. There is a principle involved in this matter. If we hold out larger inducements than the States, we shall command for the service of the United States the best talent, and leave the States that of a secondary order. These, however, are mere suggestions. My colleague, I expect, will present a plan to do equal justice upon a general principle to all the judges. He may provide that the salary of a judge in the State of New Hampshire shall be regulated by the salary of the chief justice, if you please, of the State. So of every State in the Union. I trust that we shall now adjourn, and await the report of the committee, which I hope will put all these bills in one, and enable us to have some regularity in our legislation on these salaries.

Mr. BRADBURY. The Senator from New Hampshire made a remark which might lead to a misapprehension, that the several bills which had been reported, had been reported because they were distinguished from the mass of applications.

Mr. HALE. I did not say so.

Mr. BRADBURY. That seemed to be the inference from your remarks. They were reported first, before it was known that the applications were to be so general. After the application was general, the inquiry presented itself to the committee, whether there ought not to be a general examination, in order to establish the salaries upon some general principle; and it is true that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BERRIEN] had that subject in charge. Having left the Senate for some time, unless his return is a speedy one, the committee will undoubtedly proceed to consider the whole subject. There was a case which was one that required, if any one did, early action, and that was the case of the district judge of the southern district of Florida.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 29, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the call of the States for petitions.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask that it may be read.

It was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the House proceed to dispose of the bills from the Senate on the Speaker's table, giving priority to such as shall not give rise to debate.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object, unless the bills upon the Speaker's table be taken up in their regular order. If that is to be the order, I have no objection.

Mr. BROWN. Then I move to suspend the rules to enable me to offer the resolution.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Will the resolution be so amendable, if the rules are suspended to receive it, as to provide for clearing the Speaker's table in the regular order? If the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BROWN] will put it in that shape I shall have no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. If the rules be suspended it will be competent for the House so to amend the resolution.

Mr. BROWN. If the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] will lend me his ear for a moment, I think I can show him that the resolution, as it now stands, will fully accomplish his purpose. It only proposes first to dispose of those bills which shall give rise to no debate, and then of the others.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Does the resolution so specify?

The SPEAKER. The resolution provides that such bills as shall not give rise to debate, shall have priority.

Mr. BROWN. Then of course the others follow immediately after.

The SPEAKER. It provides, also, for disposing of all the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to know whether, by implication, it is possible, under the resolution, to bring any other bills or resolutions before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is impossible that the resolution can do so.

Mr. FOWLER. Then I am satisfied.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, I desire to inquire whether the resolution provides for taking up all the business upon the Speaker's table?

Mr. BROWN. Only bills from the Senate.

Mr. STANTON. Does it provide for taking up those which shall give rise to debate?

The SPEAKER. It does, but gives preference to those which shall not give rise to debate.

Mr. BROWN. My object is first to dispose of those Senate bills which cannot possibly give rise to debate. Let us first dispose of them, and then the others will come up.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would suggest that the resolution be so modified that only those bills be taken up to which there is no objection to their reference, and which shall not give rise to debate. I do not want the House to be forced to a vote on any of them under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. STANTON. I desire to submit a statement to the House, and I hope it will influence gentlemen in their votes upon the suspension of the rules for introducing this resolution. I have a bill ready to report, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, relative to discipline and to promote good conduct in the naval service. The East India squadron is about to sail, and it is urged by the Navy Department, as well as by the commanding officer of that squadron, that the bill should be passed before the sailing of that squadron, in order that some substitute may be furnished for the lash, which has been abolished in the Navy. The object of the bill is to enable the officers to continue discipline. It is not to restore the lash, but to furnish a substitute which will enable them to dispense with it, and at the same time to enable them to continue discipline in the Navy. I hope I shall be allowed to bring up this bill. I do not think it will give rise to much debate.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. It will give rise to a long debate.

Mr. STANTON. I do not think it will give rise to much debate, if any at all.

Mr. VENABLE. Will the gentleman allow me to make a single remark? I desire to suggest the importance of acting upon this subject at once. We have a fleet about to start for the Mediterranean, and another about to start for Japan. We have repealed the law providing for corporal punishment in the Navy. The Senate, after great care, have taken up the recommendation of a board of officers, and have passed a law providing a substitute, consisting of rewards and punishments, for that we have abolished.

A MEMBER. What are they?

Mr. VENABLE. Why, stopping their pay, confinement, and others. In a consultation the other day with the gentleman who commands the Japan fleet, and also the gentleman who commands the Mediterranean squadron, I was told by both that unless this bill was passed, they would be obliged to go to sea, without any means of enforcing discipline. You have taken away from them the right of punishment, and have left them nothing in its place. You have the control of the Navy, and I think it is due to that Navy, and due to the country, that we should provide some means for enforcing discipline.

Mr. BROWN. I must insist upon my motion.

Mr. WOODWARD. I desire to make one inquiry. I do not understand what law the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VENABLE] alludes to.

Mr. BROWN. All that matter is out of order. I insist upon my motion.

Mr. VENABLE. I hope the gentleman will allow me to make a simple statement of facts.

Mr. BROWN. I object.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to propound this question to the Chair. What will be the regular order of business if the rules are not suspended?

The SPEAKER. It will be to call the States for petitions.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, I desire that the gentleman from Mississippi shall give way for one moment in order to enable me to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. STANTON] a single question.

Mr. BROWN. That can have nothing to do with the suspension of the rules for my resolution.

Mr. STANTON. It will have something to do with those who wish to get at other business. If the gentleman will so modify his resolution as to provide that no bill shall be taken up except those which shall give rise to no debate, I will not object to it.

Mr. BROWN. I will, then, so modify it as only to embrace such Senate bills upon the Speaker's table as shall give rise to no debate.

The resolution, as modified, was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House proceed to dispose of such bills from the Senate upon the Speaker's table as shall not give rise to debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I desire to ask a question of the Chair. I desire to be informed, if the resolution passes, when a bill is taken up for the purpose of reference, and a motion made to refer is objected to, whether the member who made the motion can then move the previous question, and have it referred?

The SPEAKER. The previous question, if seconded, would have the effect to cut off all debate. Under this resolution, however, no bill can be taken up which gives rise to debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What I desired to know is, whether, when a bill is taken up, and objection is made to it, under this resolution a demand for the previous question, or any motion, can be made in reference to it?

The SPEAKER. Not after objection is made, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I shall vote against the suspension.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to propound another question to the Chair. The Chair decides that the previous question cannot be moved after a bill has been objected to. Now, I desire to ask if it may not be moved before a member can get an opportunity to make an objection?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide these particular questions as they come up.

Mr. BROWN. In reply to these inquiries, I will say that I have no such purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must inform the gentleman from Mississippi, and others, that this discussion is entirely out of order.

Mr. BROWN then demanded tellers on his motion to suspend the rules, which were ordered; and Messrs. CHANDLER and BROWN, of Mississippi, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes not counted.

So the rules were not suspended.

DISCIPLINE IN THE NAVY.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the bill to which I have already alluded.

Objection was made.

Mr. STANTON. I move to suspend the rules for that purpose, and hope I shall be permitted to make a brief statement in relation to it.

This is a matter which is regarded as one of a good deal of importance by the Navy Department, as has been stated by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. VENABLE.]

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me to ask one question?

Mr. STANTON. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. It has been stated in the papers that this expedition to China is to enter upon a negotiation with Japan, at all hazards. I want to know whether such is the fact?

Mr. STANTON. I am not able to inform the gentleman.

Mr. STANLY. I call the gentleman to order. This has nothing to do with the question before the House.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, I want to ask another question.

Mr. STANLY. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. FOWLER. Very well; I will sit down.

Mr. STANTON. Before the question upon the suspension of the rules is put, with the permission of the House, I would like to say a few words further upon the merits of this bill.

It is a Senate bill which is designed to substitute punishments to take the place of those by the lash, which, as the House knows, has been abolished. There is now no means by which discipline can be enforced in the navy, upon single ships, except by means of a court-martial, which, in cases of small offences, is entirely too cumbersome, too slow, and too difficult, to enable the officers of the navy to enforce that discipline necessary to the public service. This bill has been carefully examined in the Senate, and has passed that body almost unanimously. It came to this House, was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. That committee have examined it, and instructed me to report it with one amendment. The East India squadron is about to sail, under the command of Commodore Perry, and unless this bill passes before the sailing of that squadron, it is not likely that the information of its passage can reach the squadron in less than twelve months; and during that time they will be in a condition which will be very deleterious to the discipline of the service.

After the rules shall have been suspended, I expect to say a few words in relation to the nature of the bill, and in explanation of its provisions. I shall detain the House but a very short time, and I think the bill will pass without further discussion.

The question was then taken, and the rules were suspended.

Mr. STANTON. The Committee on Naval Affairs have instructed me to report this bill of the Senate back to the House with a single amendment. I do not think it will be necessary to read it through, but I will state its nature very briefly.

Mr. VENABLE. Move to put it on its passage. [Cries of "Read the bill!"]

The bill was then read through by the Clerk.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I desire to say a few words in reference to the provisions of this bill. I think it is pretty generally understood that the lash cannot be again restored to the Navy. I am myself satisfied that it ought not to be; and whether it ought or not, I think it is clear to the House and to the country that it cannot be. But the abolition of this punishment has left the Navy without any sort of means of producing discipline. This bill is designed to supply that defect. I acknowledge that some of the punishments provided for in this bill, are tolerably severe, but it is impossible to maintain a system of military discipline at any time, without summary and severe punishments.

Mr. WOODWARD, (interrupting.) With the permission of the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] I will say that I cannot in my seat hear anything he says. I simply wish to inquire of the gentleman whether the bill does anything more than provide for punishment of insubordination in the Navy? Has it any other object?

Mr. STANTON. That is all. It, however, provides, in addition to punishments, a system of rewards to some extent, and about that I wish to say a single word. I will detain the House but a few moments. I will say that some of these punishments, on the face of them, seem to be severe; for instance, the power in the commander of a vessel of war to punish a sailor by confining him in double-irons for thirty days. This may seem to be extremely harsh and severe; but it must be recollected that this punishment cannot be inflicted when the surgeon on board the vessel declares that it will be injurious to the health of the sailor. Then again, there is this difference: when an officer directs a sailor to receive twelve lashes, and the punishment is inflicted, perhaps in the heat of passion, the injury cannot be repaired; but if an officer under the influence of passion directs a sailor to be confined in double-irons, or upon bread and water for any length of time, after his passion is over, and time has been had for reflection, he can repair any injury that may have resulted from his order. It may be necessary, under some condition of things, to carry out such a punishment as this for thirty days; it may be necessary on account of the magnitude of the offense; but it seems to me that no officer in the American Navy could inflict this heavy punishment unjustly, and allow it to continue the whole time. Therefore I think that, however severe these provisions may appear to be, they are necessary; and I think they will not prove injurious or oppressive in practice. The committee have not thought that in addition to the other severe punishments provided for in this bill, that it was necessary or proper that the provision obliging the offender to wear a badge upon his back, with the word "thief" written upon it, should be retained in the bill; and they have accordingly directed me to report an amendment striking out that clause.

Mr. SAVAGE, (interrupting.) I would ask my colleague [Mr. STANTON] if there is any provision in the bill for branding? I have understood that there was.

Mr. STANTON. There is not. The provision is simply to wear a badge, with the word "thief" written upon it, and the committee have instructed me to report an amendment to strike that provision from the bill.

I now turn to another part of the bill, which I consider as containing the most important features in it, and one which will have a better influence, and a greater tendency to elevate the character of the sailor, and hold out greater inducement to good conduct, than anything which ever has been adopted in this or any other branch of the public service—I mean the military or naval service. It is the system of rewards—a system by which a register shall be kept of the conduct of every sailor, and providing for granting to him at the expiration of the term of his enlistment, good conduct discharges, and which, upon his again entering into the service, shall entitle him to a gratuity of three months' pay, in addition to his regular compensation.

Now it has been with me a matter of great doubt whether the pay of the sailor ought not to be raised. Those gentlemen familiar with the subject know that the sailor in the American Navy gets but twelve dollars a month, while a sailor in the merchant service gets from sixteen to eighteen dollars per month. It is hardly possible, under this state of things, that the best class of American sailors can be induced to enter the naval service. The effect of this provision is, that after a sailor has served for two years, and receives a good conduct discharge, upon his again entering into the service, he receives a bonus of three months' extra pay, as a reward upon his second enlistment, for his good conduct during his first term of service. This is a slight addition to his pay; but I think it will have a happy effect, and it will not then give the best sailor in the Navy as much pay as he would receive were he in the merchant service, at the highest rate of wages paid in that service.

I presume there will hardly be any objection to that portion of the bill, which provides that after a sailor has been in the service twenty years, and has received good conduct discharges at the termination of every period of his enlistment, he shall be received into, and entitled to the provisions of, the naval asylum for life, with half of the monthly wages of his last period of enlistment. This benefit is only given in a case where a sailor has been twenty years in the service, and during the whole period has received good conduct discharges.

In addition to that, it is known to every one that the very last thing a sailor will do, who is fit for service, is to remain on shore, when he is able to go to sea; and therefore the operation of this portion of the bill will be, to give the benefits of this asylum, and half pay, only to those sailors who are unable to go to sea, and who have discharged their duties well for a continuous period of twenty years. It is not probable that any able seaman, however long he may have served in the United States Navy, will ever claim the advantages of these provisions. It will be an advantage only to those who have worn themselves out in the service by a faithful discharge of duty for at least twenty years. I will simply say in addition, that the passage of this bill is deemed very important, both by the Secretary of the Navy, and by the commanders of those squadrons about to go to sea; and also by all the officers of the Navy now in the United States, so far as their opinions have been made known.

Mr. STUART. As nearly as I could understand from the reading of that bill, there are several things in it, which I could not consent to vote for. But my object now is, to suggest some mode, if I can, by which this bill may be passed, if the House decide to pass it, within a very short time, and at the same time allow the bill to be printed so that we can examine it.

A Voice. Move to print, and postpone the consideration of the bill to some other day.

Mr. STUART. What I am disposed to suggest is this, that it be postponed to some particular day, by unanimous consent, and taken up within the morning hour, so as not to interfere with the special order, which comes up to-morrow. It will then be printed to-morrow morning, and we can have an opportunity to look at it, and be able to vote advisedly; for I confess, if pressed to vote upon this bill now, with the very imperfect understanding which I could get from hearing it read, I should vote against it.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I have no objection to the postponement of this bill to some early day, when it can be taken up so that gentlemen can have a fair opportunity to examine and understand it. I had thought that the provisions of the bill were so simple—

Mr. BOCOCK, (interrupting.) I desire to inquire of the Chair, if the special order does not take the precedence in the morning hour as well as at any hour, and if there is any way by which this bill can take the precedence of the special order, except by the unanimous consent of the House, or by going into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It will take precedence only by unanimous consent, or by the House going into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The special order is in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and not in the House.

Mr. STUART. I propose to move to postpone the consideration of this bill until Thursday morning, and that it be printed, in order to give us an opportunity to look into it, and then gentlemen will be prepared on that day to vote for it one way or the other.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I have no objection to a postponement for a few days, if it be under such circumstances that the bill will be certainly taken up then and disposed of.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Will this interfere with the special order already pending?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent of the House. It will be competent, however, for a majority of the House, at any time, to go into the Committee of the Whole upon the special order. If, on the other hand, however, the House choose to remain in the House to consider this bill, it can do so, and thus would it set aside the special order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand this is merely a proposition to postpone until the morning hour on Thursday.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I cannot consent to any postponement of this bill, if it is to be a matter of doubt whether it will be taken up, as it is known that a portion of the Pacific squadron will sail during this week, on Wednesday next; and it is exceedingly important that this bill should be acted upon previous to that time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. Can the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] take the floor and farm it out to every one who wishes to speak upon this bill? I object to that proceeding. He cannot yield the floor for an amendment, except by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] yields the floor to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] for explanation, and the Chair cannot decide that to be out of order.

The Chair would say to the gentleman from Tennessee, that the universal practice in the House has been, when one member has the floor, to yield it for explanation to others, he having a right to the floor for one hour. So the Chair understands it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If not objected to; but when objected to it has been ruled here uniformly that he cannot yield the floor for the purpose of offering an amendment. He may yield it for personal explanation—personal to the gentleman to whom he yields the floor—but he has not a right to make a speech upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds the practice has been for the purpose of yielding it for explanation connected with the subject-matter before the House. This has been, I believe, the universal practice. It is a different case to yield the floor for the purpose of amendments; that may be objected to.

Mr. HALL. I wish to make a few observations as to the matters contained in this bill.

Mr. JONES. I must object to the gentleman making a speech upon this bill within the speech of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] and I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, and decides that the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] having the floor for one hour, may yield it, for explanation, to other gentlemen upon the floor.

Mr. JONES. I must appeal from that decision, and let the House determine whether gentlemen can take the floor and farm it out to others.

Mr. HALL. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. JONES. I ask for the yeas and nays. They were not ordered.

The question being on the motion to lay the bill upon the table, it was put, and, on a division, there appeared—ayes 83, noes 30; no quorum voting.

Mr. TAYLOR called for tellers, which were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and HIBBARD were appointed.

Mr. HAVEN. Will the Chair state what the question is?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The gentleman from Michigan being upon the floor and addressing the House, was appealed to by the gentleman from Missouri to make an explanation connected with the subject-matter under debate; the gentleman from Michigan yielding, as requested, the gentleman from Missouri was called to order by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.] The Chair overruled the question of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, and decided that it had, according to the practice of the House, been common for gentlemen, having the floor for one hour, to yield it to other gentlemen who might wish to make explanations within that hour. From that decision the gentleman from Tennessee takes an appeal, and the gentleman from Missouri moves to lay the appeal upon the table.

The question was then again taken on the motion to lay the appeal upon the table, and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 30.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. HALL. I only wish to ask the gentleman from Michigan to change his motion from a motion to postpone this bill, for a motion to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES. I submit whether that is an explanation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Missouri is in order.

Mr. JONES. It is not an explanation.

Mr. HALL. The reason, sir, why I wish to make this proposition, or, rather, this change in his motion, is, that there is a part of this bill, the fourth section, which proposes to establish an entirely new principle; by which to grant pensions to sailors in the Navy of the United States. It proposes that every sailor who serves in the United States Navy twenty years, with credit and good conduct, shall receive a pension of half-pay during the remainder of his life. Now, I think if you once admit that principle in the Navy, you will have to establish the same principle in the Army, and give your soldiers half-pay during the remainder of their lives. Then, our officers will come in and claim their share. I therefore think, sir, this being a matter of such importance, that some discussion should take place with regard to it.

Mr. JONES. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman is discussing the bill, and not making an explanation.

Mr. HALL. I have done.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. The effect of that clause is simply to change, and, in my judgment, to restrict, the principle upon which sailors are now admitted into the naval asylum. They are admitted now, I do not know exactly upon what principle. They are admitted after twenty years' service, whether good or bad sailors. Whether sailors have good conduct or bad conduct noted, there is no distinction; for they are all, under certain circumstances, admitted into our naval asylum. I understand, from the representations which have been made to me, that there are upwards of one hundred sailors in our naval asylum at Philadelphia, who are admitted, under certain circumstances, after having served twenty years in the Navy. But under this provision, they are admitted only after serving twenty years, and after having received a good conduct discharge, commencing from the time of their enlistment, to the period when they are discharged. That is the restriction.

The SPEAKER. I would inquire of the gentleman from Michigan, whether he has submitted any distinct motion in regard to this bill?

Mr. STUART. I submit this motion, and I wish to make an inquiry of the Speaker in regard to the effect of it, to see if I understand it properly myself. My motion was, that by unanimous consent, the House postponed the consideration of this bill until Thursday morning next, and that it come up in the morning hour. My belief was that that motion would make it the order of business immediately after the reading of the Journal on Thursday, and would not interfere with the special order. If the House now, by common consent, make such an order, I would inquire of the Chair if I am correct or not?

The SPEAKER. The proper way to reach that, would be to postpone the special orders for an hour, or to a given time, and make this a special order in its stead. The Chair, however, would say that the special order for to-morrow is in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It is in the power of the House to go into or stay out of the committee. If the House choose to remain in the House, and dispose of this bill, they may do so.

Mr. STUART. That was my view of the matter. It would leave the bill under the control of a majority of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under that form, the bill would be left under the control of a majority of the House.

Mr. DURKEE. If the gentleman from Michigan is in favor of the passage of this bill, I think it is wrong to postpone it. It is a bill which could not bear to come into the light. Its features were such that if published, they would never allow the bill to pass. I think it cannot pass.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I beg to say that this bill has been published long ago. Every feature of it has been discussed in the Senate, and published in the newspapers during the debate upon it. It bore the light of day then, and will bear it now.

Mr. STUART. I wish the unanimous consent of the House to make this motion.

Mr. MILLSON. I have in my hand a printed copy of the Senate bill as reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs to the Senate. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] whether the bill, as it passed the Senate, is different at all, or in any material degree, from the bill as reported to the Senate?

Mr. STANTON. I cannot answer that question without examining into the matter, for that is a point I have not turned my attention to.

Mr. KING, of New York. I rise to make an inquiry, with the permission of the gentleman from Michigan. I desire to know if it is not in order to make a motion to postpone this bill to a day certain?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. KING. That motion may be submitted, Mr. Speaker; by the gentleman, and then a majority of the House can dispose of the matter as they may choose.

Mr. STUART. Then I submit the motion, that the consideration of this bill be postponed until Thursday morning next, and I wish—

Mr. BOCK. With the permission of the gentleman, I wish to ask the Chair whether, if the motion is made to postpone the bill to Thursday morning next, it can be done by the action of a majority of the House? Does this bill take precedence upon Thursday morning, without being made the special order in the House; or, rather, does it not require, to do that, a vote of two thirds?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that there is a difficulty, as suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. STUART. I can submit the motion to make it the special order for Thursday next in the House. It will require a two thirds vote, I know, to do it.

The SPEAKER. It will require a two thirds vote to make it a special order for a particular day. Then it will be for the House to decide which of the two special orders shall have the preference.

Mr. STUART. That will leave it in the control of a majority of the House on Thursday next to say whether they will go into committee upon the special order, or not.

The SPEAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. STUART. That is what I desire. I wish to state in a few words why I submit this motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Michigan whether he proposes to make this bill the special order for the whole of the day, or whether he confines it only to the morning hour.

Mr. STUART. I propose to make it the special order for that day, and the majority of the House can control it then.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is a special order now.

Mr. STUART. I have only had time to look over the enumeration of the mode of punishment pointed out by this bill. Here they are, sir:

"1st. By diminishing their rations, by restricting their diet to bread and water, by imposing extra police and other duties, and in case of theft, in addition to any of the foregoing punishments, by making good from the wages of the offender to the owner the full value of the article or articles stolen, and obliging the offender to wear for any time not exceeding ten days a badge with the word 'thief' thereon."

This last punishment of a badge with the word 'thief' thereon, the Committee on Naval Affairs propose to strike out

"By restricting their diet to bread and water, by imposing extra police and other duties."

Now, sir, what are those "other duties?" Who is a judge of them? It is proposed by this bill to clothe the commander of a ship with arbitrary, and unlimited power to determine what are other duties, no matter how degrading or disgraceful that he may impose upon the offender. That was the principal reason I had, when the question was up for abolishing flogging in the Navy, for voting for it.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman inform me whether he can state what duties there are upon board a ship degrading to perform? I do not know of any myself.

Mr. STUART. The gentleman will see by looking at this bill that these duties are not confined to duties on board ship.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. They are all duties on ship-board. They cannot be anywhere else.

Mr. STUART. I do not admire a flat contradiction. Either the gentleman or myself is mistaken; but let us look at this matter a little further.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I wish to give the gentleman information upon that point. I know he would not state anything that he supposed to be incorrect intentionally. I do not wish to test the gentleman's veracity, or to make any point of that kind between me and himself, but, simply to correct him in his statement.

Mr. STUART. Now, sir, for the purpose of showing the correctness of my construction, I will read all of these provisions:

"2d. By discharge from the service with bad conduct discharge.

"3d. By solitary confinement in irons, single or double, on bread and water, provided no such confinement shall exceed thirty days.

"4th. By solitary confinement, in irons, single or double, not exceeding thirty days.

"5th. By solitary confinement, not exceeding thirty days.

"6th. By confinement, not exceeding two months.

"7th. By reduction to next inferior rating.

"8th. By ball and chain, but not to be worn at sea.

"9th. By deprivation of liberty on shore."

Now, sir, take these last clauses, "By ball and chain, not to be worn at sea," and "by deprivation of liberty on shore," and do they not, when put together, go to show that offences may be punished on shore as well as upon ship-board? Do not they apply to the naval service, and does not the bill give to a commander, upon shore, of any navy-yard or naval station, the right to punish individuals who are connected with the Navy according to this code? I apprehend that there is no doubt about it.

Mr. STANTON. If the gentleman will allow me to answer his question, I think he will find that the first clause in the bill confines this punishment to the commanding officers of vessels. Of course, it will not apply to the punishment of sailors at navy-yards, or any naval stations upon shore.

Mr. STUART. In order to settle this question definitely, let me read the commencement of the bill. It is:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the commander of any vessel in the Navy, or of any shore-station, shall have authority to punish offenses committed by petty officers, and persons of inferior ratings, by any one or more of the following punishments, to wit:—"

Now, can the English language be made any plainer than that?

Mr. STANTON. I was mistaken.

Mr. STUART. It confers upon the commander or the captain of any vessel in the navy, or of any naval station upon shore, the right to inflict this punishment at his own discretion. As I said before, I voted against flogging in the navy, because it placed in the hands of one man, without any responsibility, except to his conscience and his God, the power of degrading and disgracing his fellow-man. That is a proposition I will never vote to sustain anywhere. I know it is the theory that this arbitrary power is a good one, provided you have always more than human wisdom to carry it out. But to take humanity as it is; to take a man subject to his passions, his emotions, his likes and dislikes, and confer upon him arbitrary power, and that unlimited, as some of these powers are under this bill, I never will vote for it. Now, the last clause contained in that enumeration is not, in my judgment, by any means the least offensive—the depriving a man of his liberty on shore. I know not how it may affect other gentlemen; but whenever you talk of depriving a man of his liberty, my mind immediately reverts to that other power in the Constitution, which gives to the individual the right of a trial, and that trial by jury, with witnesses to confront him, to show that before the power of the community interposes, and takes from an American citizen his liberty, that he is to be pronounced by his peers unworthy of the enjoyment of it.

Mr. STANTON. I desire to say, with the permission of the gentleman from Michigan, that I am not myself convinced of the necessity of giving the power of summary punishment to officers upon shore stations. That clause of the bill escaped my attention, and if the gentleman will move to strike it out I shall certainly vote for his motion; for I think the exercise of the power of summary punishment ought to be confined to commanders of vessels in the naval service of the country, which renders these summary punishments necessary when a jury could not be obtained.

Mr. ORR. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if he, originating this bill, has allowed an important feature to escape his attention in the bill, how it is expected that the House shall, at once, vote upon its passage.

Mr. STANTON. I beg leave to say to the gentleman that I did not originate this bill. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. ORR. I understand the gentleman reported the bill, and it is presumed that he has examined it.

Mr. STANTON. So I did.

Mr. ORR. But I merely allude to it for the purpose of illustrating the impossibility of the House voting understandingly upon the bill until it has been printed.

Mr. KING, of New York. It ought to be printed and laid upon our tables.

Mr. STUART. I am not disposed to consume the time of the House in this discussion. I only wish to present, in the briefest possible time, a few of the reasons which seem to me imperatively to demand that this bill should be considered at a future time—that it should be printed, so that every gentleman in the House would vote upon each one of its provisions understandingly. Now in regard to this pension business, I shall proceed very cautiously in voting to establish a pension system different from any that exists now in the Navy or the Army. This bill does it, and, if I understand, it gives to able-bodied seamen who have a sufficient number of credit marks, if you may so call them, a right to a pension for the remainder of their lives. Well, I do not know of any good reason why the country at this time—in a time of peace—should enter upon any such system of pensions. Without further consuming the time of the House, I wish to say I have given but a few of the reasons which seem to me to require at the hands of the House the postponement of this bill. Let it be printed, that we may examine it, and have an opportunity of voting understandingly upon it.

Mr. STANLY. It is very obvious that the gentleman from Michigan intends to oppose this bill in any form in which it may be presented. The gentleman is opposed to giving what he calls a "pension," even after the honest old sailor has served for twenty successive years—to give him any reward for his services. He has announced that he will "never vote for it." Then, sir, I take it for granted that the gentleman intends to endeavor to defeat this bill. Now it is utterly impossible, though each of us had all the arms of Briareus, and all the eyes of Argus, that members can examine every bill, and every measure presented here for consideration. That would disperse with the whole organization of the committees of the House altogether. We must take some matters upon faith. Here, when this bill has been reported by a Senate committee, passed by the Senate, and has gone through the examination of the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House, and the public service imperiously demands that some action be taken to make a substitute for flogging in the Navy, we see gentlemen—with all respect I say it—who come from the extreme frontier of the United States, and who know nothing in the world of naval affairs, save what they learned from books, endeavoring to ride down all the information of the Committee on Naval Affairs, of commodores of the Navy, and of men of high character and intelligence, whose life has been spent upon the salt water, in the service of their country. Is this to be so? Now, if gentlemen are ready to vote for this bill, let them do so; if not, let us, at all events, have a vote upon it, and proceed to other business, before we get a general,

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 1852.

NEW SERIES.... No. 58.

sympathetic, humanitarian discussion upon matters and things in general—the liberty of my friend from Michigan, and the “largest liberty all over the world among all men,” which will come next. I call for the previous question, that the House may be brought to a vote.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] to withdraw his motion for the previous question, and I will renew it.

Mr. STANLY. I will, if the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. BAYLY. I will. I have been requested by some gentlemen interested in the naval service to examine this bill, and if I approve it, to say a word in its favor. I have examined it, and I am not only satisfied of the propriety of passing it, but of the necessity of doing so at once. As has already been stated to the House, we have a large number of ships about to leave port. Under the law, as it now stands, there is no mode of punishing in any other than the highest grade of offenses in the Navy. If a ship go to sea in this condition, every man knows who is acquainted with sailors, and I believe I represent as many of them as any member upon this floor, that no one can predict what will be the consequences to our service. It has been asked, Why not pass this bill, say, in the course of a week or two, and send it after these ships? In the first place, there will be a difficulty of getting it on board these ships when they have gone to sea; and besides that, every one who knows anything of the naval service, or anything of the merchant service, knows that the difficulties upon ship-board occur always in the first two or three weeks after they have gone to sea. When they first go to sea is the time that the sailors try their commander's temper. They see what they can do. If you give them an inch, they will take an ell, and the only way on the face of the earth by which a voyage can be made with any certainty is, that proper discipline may be obtained in the first two or three weeks after they go out. Now, what are these punishments? There is not one of them that is a degrading punishment, that is disproportionately degrading to the offenses which may be committed. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] objects particularly to putting the chain and ball upon a man. The bill provides that it shall not be done on sea-board, thus restricting that punishment to the navy-yards. The gentleman says he is opposed to that.

Mr. STUART. The gentleman misunderstood me entirely. I did not say I was opposed to that. I spoke of that clause which gives to an individual upon shore the power of affixing just such penalty as he chooses under the term “other duties.”

Mr. BAYLY. The duties at your navy-yards are as distinctly defined as rules and regulations can make them. There are no duties at the navy-yard that any man cannot be called upon to perform. When you give a commander the power to assign particular duties which may be more onerous than others as a punishment, you inflict no great wrong upon the individual. They cannot assign them to any duties which they please.

As to the ball and chain punishments at the navy-yards. Gentlemen seem to think that offenses upon shore may be punished by the courts. There are a large number of offenses to which our municipal law attaches no punishment. Take the case even of a man refusing to work. What are you to do with him? Bring him up before a magistrate? The magistrate would tell you, that I find no authority in my court to punish that offense. Suppose the sailor is insolent; how will you punish him for that? Suppose he is insubordinate—suppose he refuses to obey those regulations which are necessary to the peace and good order of the yard in any respect. The civil code affords no punishment. The very nature of the case requires that there should be some discretion in these commanders. As to this punishment upon ship-board discretion must be given to commanders to a very great extent, as you cannot have any other court on board a ship than that sort of a court for a particular class of cases composed of these officers. I do not wish to continue this discussion, I believe that the House, unless they mean to have such scenes upon our ships as would disgrace the nation and the Navy, unless they mean to make our Navy perfectly inefficient, and of such a character that no man in the Navy would feel safe to go into action—unless you wish to put it in that position, where it is absolutely necessary, since you have abolished flogging, against which I voted—

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman allow me to say a word? I desire to say to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY,] that there is no proposition pending to strike out the words, “on shore stations.” I have said if that proposition should be made, I would vote for it.

Mr. BAYLY. It ought not to be made.

Mr. STANTON. I understand the gentleman to differ from me, and I understand there is a great difference of opinion with regard to this matter. I know that the courts of the State have no jurisdiction in the navy-yards, where the jurisdiction has been surrendered to the United States. I know a great many offenses for which sailors would be punished at sea, and for which they may not be punished at navy-yards, for there is no necessity for it. There is not the same necessity for severe punishment upon shore, unless it be in receiving-ships, where sailors are received for the purpose of sending them at once to sea, and then they would be on ship-board, and liable to punishment. But on shore stations, I do not see that there is any necessity for these severe summary punishments, so far as the discipline of the navy and the safety of the service are concerned. Under these circumstances, I think if the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] thinks proper to make the motion to strike out the clause making all these rates of punishment applicable to shore service, it would secure the passage of the bill.

Mr. BAYLY. I do not think the passage of the bill in any danger.

Mr. ORR. I desire to ask my friend from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] a question. He says that he has examined this bill closely at the request of naval officers—gentlemen who feel interested in its passage, and think it ought to be passed. I desire to inquire, if my friend would be willing to vote for this bill if he had not made this investigation? and if it is right, proper, and fair to call upon other members of the House to vote for a bill without their having the same opportunity to examine it? We will have to vote upon trust—we will have to vote upon his judgment and the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Would it be proper to force a vote now, by sustaining the previous question upon the passage of the bill, when we have not had the same opportunities of examining it as he has?

Mr. BAYLY. If this bill was complicated in its character, there might be some force, though not much, in the objections of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] He asks if it is fair, when we have examined the bill, that we should press other members to a vote upon it, when they have not examined it, and if it is right that members should be called to vote upon trust. I undertake to say, that nineteen twentieths of the bills of this House are voted upon without their being read by the members, and if this bill is voted upon without being read by one tenth of members, it will be by no means singular.

Mr. MILLSON. My colleague has indicated a purpose to move the previous question. I desire to call his attention to a portion of this bill, while I have the opportunity of doing so. I desire to ask my colleague if the clause in the Senate bill providing for the establishment of summary courts-martial has not been stricken out of the bill now before the House, and whether the punishments contained in the first page of this manuscript bill now lying before me, are not to be inflicted by any commanding officer, of his own authority. I have not had the opportunity of comparing the Senate bill as reported to the Senate with the manuscript bill reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs to the House. But I am informed by a member of the Naval Committee, that this bill differs materially from the bill as reported to the Senate.

Mr. BOCKOCK. I will state that my colleague over the way [Mr. BAYLY] has in his hands the Senate bill, but the bill to which my colleague nearest me [Mr. MILLSON] alludes, is a bill which was offered in the Senate, which did not pass. I suppose that the bill there underwent various amendments, and it resulted in the bill which my colleague from the Accomac district [Mr. BAYLY] has now in his hands. The only change which the Committee on Naval Affairs made in that bill was the simple amendment striking out that part of it which provides for branding a man with the word “thief” on his back.

Mr. MILLSON. I understand the printed bill which I hold in my hand was not adopted by the Senate, but the bill from which I read, and which I suppose to be the one reported to the House to-day, is the bill which passed that body. I take this opportunity of saying that I represent an important naval district, and my constituents, at least many of them, are deeply interested in the questions involved in this bill. I most earnestly desire that some bill establishing a code for naval discipline should pass at once. I wish to draw the attention of the House—

Mr. BAYLY. I do not yield the floor any further. I demand the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. BAYLY. It is the call of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY,] and not mine.

Mr. JONES. I believe that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] called it. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. ORR. Is it in order to make a motion to lay the bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ORR. Then I make that motion, and call the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. STUART. Before the question is taken upon the call for the previous question, I wish to modify my motion. Will it be in order, after the question is taken upon the motion, to lay the bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be scarcely proper for the gentleman to modify his motion during the pendency of the previous question.

Mr. STUART. Is it not in order to modify my motion before the question is taken upon seconding the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman cannot modify it.

Mr. ORR. At the suggestion of some friends, I will withdraw my motion to lay the bill upon the table. I will renew it if the previous question is sustained.

Mr. STUART. I desire to leave this bill in the control of a majority of the House on Thursday, and I understand it will be so upon a simple motion to postpone it, and the majority will take up the bill, or not, as they choose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to state to the House, that in the early part of the session he decided that the previous question would not cut off a motion to postpone to a day certain. Upon examining the rules, the Chair is perfectly satisfied that the previous question being sustained and put, would cut off a motion to postpone to a particular day. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] has submitted a motion that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until Thursday next. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] demands the previous question. The decision of the Chair is, that if the previous question is sustained, it will cut off the proposition to postpone, and bring the House to a vote upon the amendment and upon the bill.

Mr. STUART. Then I hope that we will not sustain the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desired to make the statement he has, that gentlemen may vote understandingly.

The question was then put upon seconding the demand for the previous question, and on a division there were—yeas 69, noes 71.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, called for tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. FOWLER and STANTON, of Tennessee, appointed.

And the question being again put, the tellers reported—yeas 81, noes 69.

So the previous question received a second; the main question was then ordered to be put.

Mr. ORR moved to lay the bill upon the table; and, on that motion, he demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

And the question being put, it was decided in the negative—yeas 71, nays 94, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Averett, Beale, Bissell, Brenton, Briggs, Buell, Busby, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Chapman, Clark, Cleveland, Cobb, Curtis, Daniel, J. G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Doty, Durkee, Edgerton, Ewing, Ficklin, Fitch, Floyd, Fowler, Gamble, Gaylord, Grow, I. G. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Horsford, Houston, John W. Howe, Hunter, Ives, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, George W. Jones, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McLanahan, McMullen, McQueen, Molony, Murray, Nabers, Olds, Orr, Peaslee, Penniman, Perkins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Benjamin Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Stuart, Sweetser, George W. Thompson, Watkins, Addison White, and Wilcox—71.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Allison, William Appleton, Ashe, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bartlett, Bennett, Bocock, Bowie, Bragg, Breckinridge, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Chandler, Churchwell, Clingman, Cottman, Cullom, George T. Davis, Dean, Eastman, Evans, Florence, Freeman, H. M. Fuller, T. J. D. Fuller, Gentry, Goodenow, Gorman, Grey, Hammond, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Haven, Hillyer, Holladay, Howard, Thomas M. Howe, Ingersoll, Jackson, James Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Edward C. Marshall, Martin, McCorkle, McDonald, Meacham, Meade, Miller, Millson, Miner, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Newton, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Perkins, Porter, Richardson, Riddle, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Scudder, Scurry, Origen S. Seymour, Smart, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abram P. Stevens, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Welch, Wells, Alexander White, Williams, and Woodward—93.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. MILLSON. Do I understand the Chair to have decided that a motion to postpone is not now in order?

The SPEAKER. That is the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MILLSON. Then no amendments can be offered.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has cut off everything, except the amendment offered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, which was pending at the time the previous question was demanded.

Mr. MILLSON. Then I shall vote against the bill.

The question was then taken upon the amendment reported by the committee, to strike out from the first section, the following words: "and obliging the offender to wear for any time not exceeding ten days, a badge with the word 'thief' thereon;" and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and having been read a third time,

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, demanded the previous question on its passage.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be now put.

Mr. MILLSON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The question was then put, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 76, nays 97, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, William Appleton, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Bartlett, Bennett, Bocock, Bowie, Bragg, Breckinridge, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Chandler, Clingman, Cottman, George T. Davis, Dean, Dockery, Evans, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gentry, Goodenow, Goodrich, Grey, Hammond, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Haven, Hillyer, Horsford, Thomas M. Howe, Jackson, James Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Martin, McDonald, Meacham, Meade, Miller, Miner, Henry D. Moore, Morehead, Penn, Porter, Riddle, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Scudder, Scurry, Smart, Snow, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Venable, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Welch, Wells, Alexander White, and Williams—76.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Allison, Averett, Barrere, Beale, Bissell, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Busby, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thomas Campbell, Caskie, Chapman, Churchwell, Clark, Cleveland, Cobb, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Doty, Dunham, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ficklin, Fitch, Floyd, Fowler, Gamble, Gaylord, Gorman, Grow, Isham G. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Howard, John W. Howe, Hunter, Ingersoll, Ives, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, Mann, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McLanahan, McMullen, McQueen, Millson, Molony, John Moore, Murray, Nabers, Newton, Olds, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penniman, Perkins, Polk, Powell, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, David L. Seymour, Smith, Benjamin Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, St. Martin, Stuart, Sweetser, George W. Thompson, Tuck, Wallace, Watkins, Addison White, Wilcox, and Woodward—97.

So the bill did not pass.

Mr. MILLSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the House rejected the bill, upon its passage.

Mr. CABLE. I move to lay that motion upon the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order, the gentleman from Virginia being upon the floor.

Mr. ORR. The motion to reconsider is not debatable, is it?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ORR. Has the previous question exhausted itself?

The SPEAKER. It has; and the motion to reconsider is, therefore, debatable.

Mr. MILLSON. I believe it will be conceded on all hands that the passage of some bill involving the discipline of the navy, is absolutely necessary to the public interest. I would not vote for the bill which has just been rejected by the House, because it contained provisions which never can command my assent. But I am exceedingly desirous that this question may come up at some future day—nay, at some early day, and that the bill, by a reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or without it may be put into such a shape as to command the universal assent of this House. One objection which I had to the bill—

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that the reconsideration of this matter should go over until next Monday, and by common consent the bill be printed.

Mr. MILLSON. I meant to make that suggestion; but I want, also, while I have the floor, to vindicate some of the objections which I have, and which I suppose the House has, to the passage of the bill, and which can, I have no doubt, be easily removed if the bill is postponed.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I suggest to the gentleman, that if we reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill, we leave it still in a condition not to be amended, and that the House had better retrace its steps to a position in which the bill can be amended.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that if the motion to reconsider goes over by unanimous consent, it is in the power of the House, by unanimous consent, to have the bill printed—the motion to reconsider being a privileged question—would come up next Monday.

Mr. MILLSON. That is the suggestion which I intended to make to the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Suppose this motion to reconsider goes over, and then comes up, as the Speaker has stated, will it then be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered to be put?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that it will be in order.

Mr. STANTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON,] is upon the floor.

Mr. MILLSON. I merely wish to make a suggestion, for the purpose of enabling gentlemen who voted against the passage of the bill, to concur with me in voting for its reconsideration.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know whether the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] did not move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered, and to lay that motion upon the table, and whether that motion was not agreed to by the House?

Mr. STANTON. No, sir, I did not.

The SPEAKER. According to the recollection of the Chair, the gentleman from Tennessee made that motion, but withdrew it.

Mr. ORR. It was my impression that the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLSON. I was about to explain my reasons for voting against the passage of this bill. I attempted to state my reasons sometime ago; and if my colleague, [Mr. BAYLY,] had yielded me the floor, I should not have troubled the House with another explanation.

Mr. BAYLY. Allow me to say to my colleague, [Mr. MILLSON,] that my refusing to permit further interruption, was not from any discourtesy to him, but it was through the permission of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] that I obtained the floor. That gentleman came over to me and insisted that he had only yielded to me for the purpose of making a brief explanation, and not with the expectation that it should be yielded to others.

Mr. STANLY. That is so.

Mr. BAYLY. And hence, in good faith, I felt bound to refuse permission to my colleague to interrupt me.

Mr. MILLSON. I will say to my colleague that I did not suppose his refusal to allow me to make my explanation proceeded from any discourteous feeling. I was only saying that the interest taken in this matter by my district, made it incumbent upon me to state my reasons for voting against this bill.

I repeat, then, that my district is as much interested in the passage of a proper bill upon this subject as any other in the United States. I have objections, nevertheless, to many of the provisions of the present bill; but one only, however, will I state at this time.

For more than fifty years, no commanding officer in the Navy, however high his rank, was authorized, by law, to inflict, by his own authority, more than twelve lashes for any offense. The law provided that, if the offense was deemed worthy of a more severe punishment, a court-martial should be convened by the Secretary of the Navy, if the offense was committed within the jurisdiction of the United States, or by the commanding officer of the squadron when the offense was not committed within that jurisdiction. So careful was that law to guard the rights of the humblest seaman, as I have said, that no officer was permitted, by his own authority, to inflict a severer punishment than twelve lashes upon any man. In more severe cases, the Secretary of the Navy, or, if out of the jurisdiction of the United States, the commanding officer of the squadron convened a court-martial, whose proceedings were to be in writing, and a record of which was to be preserved and transmitted to the Navy Department. Yet the bill we have just rejected, proposed to confer upon the commanding officer of any vessel, even though he should not hold a higher rank than that of passed midshipman, the power to inflict the punishment of solitary confinement not exceeding thirty days, with irons upon the hands and upon the ankles, and the culprit restricted to a diet of bread and water; all this without even preserving a record of the crime for which the punishment was inflicted, or the evidence upon which the crime was ascertained. This power, sir, I would not confer upon anybody; not upon any officer in the Navy, however exalted his rank. It is, in my judgment, exceedingly important that the punishments which are inflicted in the Navy should not be inflicted without regulations by law. I would give the commanding officer the power to summon a summary court-martial—sometimes called a "captain court-martial"—to be composed of not less than three commissioned officers. A recorder may be appointed by the court, or the commanding officer. But I would not give jurisdiction over a crime that deserves the extent of punishment by solitary confinement, to any one man. It is a punishment severe in the highest degree; a punishment which sometimes produces a shock upon the human reason which it is incapable of surviving.

A MEMBER. You got all this from the novels!

Mr. MILLSON. My friend says, I get all this from novels. I tell him, I get it from reports on prison discipline, made by scientific men to various legislative bodies, and which have sometimes induced petitions praying for the abolition of punishment by solitary confinement altogether. However that may be, I hope the House will reconsider this bill. It is very important that some bill of the kind should pass.

Mr. STUART. Before the gentleman from Virginia makes this motion, I desire to have it put in some shape by which we can have the bill printed.

Mr. MILLSON. That was my purpose in rising, that the bill may be printed and then go over.

Mr. BAYLY. My colleague [Mr. MILLSON] says this solitary confinement injures the constitution of the sailor. I wish to inquire whether the bill does not provide that if the surgeon who is on board all our vessels shall certify that the health of the prisoner is suffering, he shall be released? I know that the provision is in the bill.

Mr. MILLSON. My colleague misapprehends me. I did not say that the punishment by solitary confinement injured the constitution of the sailor. I said I had seen it stated in scientific works and reports, in petitions addressed to legislative bodies, that punishment by solitary confinement frequently gave such a shock to the human reason as utterly to overthrow it.

Mr. BAYLY. Mr. Speaker, let me inquire of my colleague, whether by the laws of Virginia a part of the punishment for certain offenses in our penitentiaries is not solitary confinement for a short period? And has he ever heard of persons there being injured by it?

Mr. MILLSON. I am aware that a part of the punishment of certain persons sent to the penitentiary is by the laws of the State of Virginia solitary confinement, at the discretion of the judge. The judge is to determine the length of the time, and that time is generally divided during the whole period of imprisonment, so as to have the convict kept in solitary confinement but a short time at any one period. I would suggest, however, that in these cases the guilt of the prisoner is ascertained by a jury. Now, what I am attempting to enforce upon the House is this: where the crime is so flagrant as justly to deserve punishment by solitary confinement, it ought not to be placed within the jurisdiction of any one man, whoever he may be.

Mr. STANLY. I want to make this suggestion, with the consent of the gentleman from Virginia. I suggest that he had better refer this bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs, with instructions to provide that seamen in every country shall have the right of a presentment by a grand jury, and a trial by jury; and that no free white man shall wear double-irons; and that all the penitentiary men in the country shall be taken out for exercise, and rode out, now and then, at the public expense. [Laughter.] I have no doubt that such a provision will be acceptable to some of the fastidious gentlemen who object to this bill.

Mr. MILLSON. I can only say, that if the gentleman desires such a movement to be made, he is entitled to all the credit of its originality; and if he desires to make such a motion, he ought not to be deprived of the privilege of carrying it into effect.

I desire to say, however, that I shall be happy to hear any suggestions. I rose in good faith. I desire that the bill should pass in some shape. I am ready to receive any suggestions made in good faith, as the most suitable mode of effecting this purpose. My main object is, to produce the result which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] and myself both deem desirable; for, upon consultation with him, we both agreed as to the importance of establishing a summary court-martial in the Navy, for the purpose of trying those offences which were too light to go before a general court-martial.

Mr. STANLY. I want that now.

Mr. MILLSON. Well, if the gentleman from North Carolina, or any other gentleman, will give any suggestions by which my object may be facilitated, I will most gladly hear them.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I make this suggestion. If the House will reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected, and then reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be read a third time, then let it pass over till Monday, and allow the bill in the mean time to be printed; any amendment could then be made which the House might desire. I hope the proceedings will take that course.

Mr. MILLSON. There seems to be a difficulty upon the point of order. I do not understand that if we reconsider the vote by which the bill passed, that it will then become necessary to reconsider also the vote by which the main question was ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. If the proposition to reconsider goes over till Monday it will come up in its regular order.

Mr. MILLSON. In reference to the other question, as I was saying, if this vote be reconsidered, it surely cannot be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered to be put. That vote has done its office. The House ordered that the main question shall be put, and that order has been executed, for the main question was put.

The SPEAKER. That question has been variously decided by former Speakers of this body. The present incumbent of the chair has decided that it is necessary to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered. In other words, if the vote by which the bill was rejected be reconsidered, it becomes necessary to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered to be put, in order to reach the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was ordered to its third reading. That, however, in the option of the chair, can be done on Monday next, or at any other time as well as to-day.

Mr. MILLSON. I then submit the motion to reconsider, and move that it go over until Monday next, and that in the meantime the bill and amendment be ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The proposition to reconsider the vote goes over, and in the mean time the bill is ordered to be printed. Is that objected to?

Mr. EVANS. I do not intend to object to it. I wish to speak to the motion to reconsider. Of course I do not wish to object to any such reasonable proposition as that.

The SPEAKER. The discussion of it will be substantially an objection.

Mr. EVANS. Then I will object, and speak to it, and afterwards withdraw my objection when I get through.

The rejection of this bill is the offspring of the misdirected philanthropy of these times, which, instead of expending itself in sympathy with upright men who observe the laws, goes seeking abroad in prisons, and in places set apart for the punishment of the vicious, for the purpose of tampering with condemned profligates, and sometimes raises itself to the pitch of exaltation of feeding prisoners and other criminals upon poundcake. That is a policy to which I am opposed. There are gentlemen in this House who declare that they will inflict no such punishment as is specified in this bill, except for crimes. Well, sir, mutiny and insubordination on board a vessel-of-war, or on board of any vessel whatever upon the high seas, are the highest crimes. These are crimes which peril the lives of every one who is on board of that vessel. These are crimes which may devote every person on board that ship to the speediest destruction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not belong, I believe, to that class of individuals who have been denominated "Old Fogies." I am in favor of all proper, prudent, rational reform; that which protects and conserves, in its onward movement, the institutions and liberties of my country, and does not peril both for fanciful and imaginary good. No, sir, I am not an "Old Fogey." I am not one of those who, if they had stood at the creation, in the presence of the Almighty, I speak it reverently, would have exclaimed, "Oh, mon Dieu! conservons le chaos." I am not one of those persons who would have asked, in place of the beautiful and beneficent creation, which is the work of a bountiful Benefactor, of a just and benign Creator, that the institution of chaos might be preserved. But I am opposed to much of this modern philanthropy, this impatience of all just subordination and restraint, which is running about, betraying itself even in the Halls of Congress, for the purpose of enlisting sympathy for those who are little deserving of it.

I had the pleasure of hearing the other day, from an old officer in the Navy, a gentleman of the highest character—I will not mention his name, for it is not necessary—a firm Democrat—I make that declaration, for it may add weight here to his declarations and opinions—who has held that faith from his first manhood to the present time—a surgeon, and therefore not one of those officers whose pleasure it is, as is very unjustly asserted of some persons having command, to inflict punishment upon the seamen in our public vessels of war—I say I heard from him that it would be dangerous to lay an American vessel alongside of a vessel of a foreign nation, in actual war; that insubordination has reached such an extreme that the sailors on board our vessels of war are daily and habitually accustomed to use the foulest and most profane, and even the most licentious, language to their officers, and that there is no punishment for it.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, (interrupting,) made a remark entirely inaudible to the reporter.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] calls my attention to the case of a sailor who threw a missile at his commanding officer; and I do not wonder at it, for insubordination has run riot, and seems likely only to work its own cure by some flagrant outbreak, which shall shock the sense of the whole nation.

And now, sir, it strikes me, as a circumstance not a little extraordinary, that the moral feeling of gentlemen should be so exceedingly shocked at the proposition in this bill to mark the word "thief," upon a felon's sleeve for ten days; it is called a badge of ignominy, a mark of disgrace; and some members are horror-stricken at the very proposal. Sir, it is a mark of ignominy and disgrace, and well deserved by those who may wear it. But why all this philanthropic horror? Are not badges, much more ignominious, bestowed upon thieves in many of the States, without shocking any sensibility, or even exciting any remark. I have heard that in the Legislature of Kentucky a proposition has been introduced, to dye one half of each convict's face as permanent a black as possible, and to renew the same from time to time, as often as need may require. Now, there the felon undergoes his punishment by confinement in the penitentiary, and by hard labor, and gets the japan brand in addition; and yet we hear nothing of an indignant community; no tears are shed, no sighs wasted.

But when this bill proposes that a thief on ship-board shall wear a little piece of flannel upon his sleeve, with the word "thief," worked upon it, without the accompanying punishment of solitary confinement and hard labor, or at most, with a confinement of thirty days, our philanthropic sensibilities rise to fever heat, and we are seized with spasms of virtuous indignation.

In any State of the Union, a fellow who steals something is thought worthy of going to the penitentiary; but if he happen to be a thief who has smuggled himself into a ship, under the pretense that he is a sailor—for true sailors never steal—and there commits larceny, it is a great degradation if he be condemned for ten days to wear a piece of flannel with his true name worked upon it. The Legislature of Kentucky I say, proposed in such cases to blacken the criminal's face; but I do not know whether they passed the bill or not, but my friend from Kentucky (pointing to Mr. MARSHALL) knows.

Now, sir, let us for a moment consider who the sailors are, in our Navy. During the last war there was no navy in the world that had such crews as our own.

When the "Constitution" went to sea, she had on board of her many men serving in subordinate capacities, who had commanded ships; a stern but kindly discipline enforced the rights and duties of every man; no foul, insolent, and licentious language then marked the manner of the true American tar towards his superior officer; each heart beat with a noble desire to vindicate the rights of American seamen, and to uphold the honor, the glory, and the dignity of his country. Mark the result. Your flag was borne triumphantly over every sea under heaven, and yet we had order, discipline, subordination, even flogging in that day: all which in this day of progress is sneered at, and derided as quite antiquated and out of fashion. In that day the majority of our crews, despite the assertions of our enemies to the contrary, were American sailors, with some gallant and true-hearted naturalized seamen among them, who fought nobly for their adopted country, against a proud, imperious, and heretofore triumphant adversary. But now, sir, it is doubtful whether American and naturalized seamen compose a tithe of the crews of our men-of-war, or of our merchant vessels. I want gentlemen to understand this, and that it may be spread abroad throughout the country, that the sailors on board of our men-of-war are composed, in a considerable measure, of non-naturalized foreigners, and they not the best of sailors, but many of them, I am sorry to say it, and the true tar deploras it as much as I do, of worthless men, scandalous jail-birds, men who have been perhaps engaged in the slave trade—[A Voice—or perchance in piracy]—yes, or perchance in piracy—men who require the strong hand of power to be laid upon them continually. If only a few of these insubordinate, mutinous, turbulent spirits—enlist on board a ship, and the means of quelling, subduing, and controlling them are taken away, what scenes do we behold! what lack of discipline! what disorder! what contempt of authority. In that day your Navy will be in greater danger from its own crew than from the enemy, disastrous result! I beg, if your false and misplaced philanthropy must be bruited abroad, let it be elsewhere; a ship is no place to preach liberty, fraternity, and equality. On the contrary, the government of a man-of-war is a despotism, restrained and kept within just and legitimate bounds by wise and prudent enactments; enforcing its rules by wholesome, and if necessary, severe discipline. Such the Navy was, such it ever must be, if you wish to preserve it as the right arm of your power. Now they have in the Navy these foreigners, most of them non-naturalized foreigners, who do not become citizens of your country, who enlist for a cruise and perhaps take their discharges in foreign ports. These men, some of them good seamen, and worthy, some bad, mutinous, insolent, and unworthy, come aboard your men-of-war. And for what purpose? At home, in their own country, a low rate of wages obtains in every department. By the very limited demand which there prevails for labor, and by the necessity which men have of obtaining subsistence, by every possible method these persons are driven into their Navy, and into their merchant service.

Sir, notwithstanding the wages are less in our navy than in our mercantile marine, yet the wages in our navy are higher than in that of any other country. These men, then come aboard our naval ships for no other purpose than to get their pay, their rations, and their whiskey; and then many of them utterly refuse to do any duty whatever. They use opprobrious and degrading language to their officers, such as if used by any man to another on shore, would meet with the speediest punishment; and for this there is no remedy. I have been on board a man-of-war since the abolition of flogging in the Navy, and have been a witness of the insubordination that has resulted from it. Many persons were there confined for refusal to perform the ordinary duties required on board ship, and were thus liberated from all labor, and at the same time fed at our expense. They cared little how long such punishment lasted. I hope I may be forgiven by my country for voting as I did, to abolish flogging in the Navy. I would be happy to vote it back again were it in my power, coupled with a provision that it should not be hastily or unnecessarily inflicted, but only upon the finding of a court-martial, certifying that such punishment was necessary to good discipline.

Let gentlemen reflect that insubordinate men who refuse to do their duty, increase insubordination; each mutinous man is a pestilential plague spot, spreading his miasma until at length the whole crew becomes corrupted; this terrible and dangerous contagion is only to be controlled and suppressed in its very inception, and this you now have no means of doing. See, besides, what injustice is worked by your present laxity of discipline. Those men who refuse to perform duty throw the whole burden and labor upon good, noble, honest sailors, who love their duty, and are willing to perform it alike in storm or sunshine, in peace or danger. The result, then, is that out of a ship's crew of six hundred or eight hundred men, you may have but a hundred who do anything. Now, suppose you come into action with such a state of affairs, what else can you expect than ignominy, disgrace, and defeat?

Gentlemen, I tell you there has been a theory afloat here which ought for the good of the country to be now, at once, and forever ended.

It is taken for granted by many persons that a naval officer is a man who takes pride and delight in a refined cruelty; that he loves to exasperate first, and then to torture his victims; that he is never so happy as when Jack is at the gangway lashed to a grating with his bloody back quivering under the "cat." I, for one, believe none of this; I believe that our Navy is, in the main, composed of high-minded, humane gentlemen, to whom the very idea of cruelty is abhorrent, and who shun punishment when it is not indispensa-bly necessary to the discipline and safety of all on board. I admit that in the Navy there are always some men of high temper and violent passions; and such there must ever be, everywhere, while human nature is what it is; and I would not unnecessarily subject any citizen to arbitrary and hasty punishment at the hands of such a man. Cruelty may easily be prevented by requiring that punishment in this extreme degree be ordered only by a court, and with that guard I would have no objection even to flogging in the Navy. And now, once for all, disbelieving all these high wrought pictures which some gentlemen here delight to paint upon this and other subjects, of the demoniac cruelty of our gallant officers, and our worthy citizens, I contend that the theory that our naval officers, or the officers in our Army, are naturally cruel, or that any set of American citizens are naturally disposed to do wrong to those who are submitted to their charge, is erroneous. Let us consider what we are about. All the nations in the world are arming. For what? Is it out of regard for us? Have we any mercy to expect at their hands? May we not rather look for war to the knife? Is this, then, a time to break down the discipline of your Navy, and make the crews of your men-of-war mere mobs? Standing armies are dangerous to our liberties; these to any great extent we never will maintain; but a Navy need excite no such distrust; to its protection we may safely trust without the apprehension that when it has overthrown our enemies, its pariacidal hands will be turned against its country. We must continue our Navy upon the sea, and meet all attacks beyond the view of American land. All Europe is close to our shores. There is among European despots a universal feeling of hatred against us. Already almost the whole continent is closed against the entrance of our citizens. We are the only Republic maintaining its liberties now upon the face of the globe. As such we are the detestation of despots everywhere, and they seek and desire merely a pretense to crush those liberties which we have earned so dearly, and which we so highly prize.

If we be thus attacked, we should meet our enemies first upon the high seas; we should meet the invading hosts upon the ocean, and bury them amid its waters.

We should allow no foreign footstep upon our soil, and it should be our proud boast, as it has been that of England for the last eight centuries, that our women have never seen the face of an enemy. How are you to effect all this, unless you maintain a stern and severe discipline in the Navy? It is impossible. All victory, all success, rests at its foundation, upon strict subordination, and this subordination you must secure by some enactment. It will not do in a reckless and heedless way to reject propositions looking to this end.

I believe that the sublimated philanthropy which is preached here, when repeated in the service will, of itself, work mischief.

Moreover, sir, upon this subject of punishment, I have heard it asserted—but I do not assert it upon my own knowledge—that those of our sailors, who do their duty, who live honest and upright lives, who live manfully, and die manfully in the service of their country, desire the restoration of flogging; and they wish for it, because the "cat" will never touch their backs, and the idle will, by its restoration, be made to perform their share of labor, and the mutinous and insubordinate be brought to order. I know that there are a few persons going about the land to enlist that sympathy which was always given to criminals in this country by a certain class; threatening members of Congress, and striving to prevent the restoration of discipline by clamor, and the cry of unpopularity. None seek the abolition of punishment so much as those who deserve it; for

"No rogue e'er felt the halter draw,
With good opinion of the law."

But this is not the course of the true American. He does not commit the offense which merits the punishment. There are enough instances of these true American hearts, who have been in our service until they have grown gray—who have fought our battles on the seas, as gallantly as any men ever fought in any battle, and who have carried our flag triumphantly over every wave, to every clime, and every part of the globe, and who have made our name honored and respected. They are the men who have never felt the lash, and who desire to have it restored, in order that the whole burden of service may not be put upon them. Is it a sickly philanthropy, or a fear of giving offense, or a desire for popularity, or what is it, that animates this House, when it will not restore any discipline to the Navy?

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I wish to inquire why such vagabonds as the gentleman has described are continued in the naval service of the country? Why are real sailors, who are guilty of insubordination, discharged from the service? If sufficient pay is offered, can you not obtain sober and orderly citizens in that as well as any other business. And I wish further to inquire, whether the vagabonds he describes are the persons that it is proposed by this bill to be pensioners for life on half-pay?

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. With the consent of the gentleman from Maryland, I will state a fact, which I had from a sailor myself. He said, that, after one of the cruises of the ship to which he belonged, and they were discharged and found out that whipping was abolished, that every good man on board the vessel refused to reenlist, and said that they would not go to sea unless there was a mode of punishment.

Mr. EVANS. I think the gentleman from Ohio is sufficiently answered by what has been said by the gentleman from Virginia. Such characters are enlisted as come forward. It is possible for the enlisting officer, when he sees a jack-tar, to tell whether he is a sailor, or not; but it is not possible to judge of his habits, his disposition, or to know anything of the history of his previous career. He takes him upon board of his vessel, and then in the middle of the China seas, the bosom of the Pacific, or the southern Atlantic ocean, the man proves insubordinate, disorderly, and mutinous; I will ask the gentleman how, then, is his place to be supplied?

Mr. STANTON. I do not understand why there cannot be obtained honest and sober men, who need no such correction?

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman seems to think that the sailors are a standing class; that they consist of one hundred and fifty thousand or two hundred thousand men; who do not die, and are not replaced by others, and whose characters may at all times be ascertained. There is not a more variable and fluctuating class in the whole world. You scarcely have the same man in the same vessel in two consecutive years. I apprehend the common sense of the House—for if there is anything that marks the House of Representatives, it is common sense—will see at once that it is not in the power of the enlisting officer to get up such a crew as he chooses. That is obvious.

Allow me to return to the bill now under consideration. I will say that I think I would prefer flogging, with the restrictions before reverted to, to the provisions of this bill. I am bound to say it. It is not that I am disposed to have corporal punishment inflicted upon any one, unless deserved; and if we can get along without such punishment, I would never resort to it; never. But our information is that we cannot. I must say, then, that with this information, I would prefer the repeal of the section of the naval appropriation bill of last Congress abolishing discipline, (for it was upon the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] that a provision was inserted into the appropriation bill abolishing flogging in the Navy,) to the provisions of this bill; but I see nothing greatly wrong in this bill. I think it better, by far, than no discipline, and therefore I voted for it. I do not see any great hardship to any man in being confined thirty days for a grave offence. In our State, we are in the habit of putting a criminal in solitary confinement twenty years, if he is deserving of it; and why solitary confinement for thirty days should be thought by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] to be so great a punishment, I cannot conceive. If we look at it in all of its lights, it appears to me to be a very lenient punishment for a grave class of offenses.

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman, perhaps, misapprehended the direction of my remarks. My purpose was to show that punishment by solitary confinement in double-irons for thirty days upon bread and water, was a very severe one. The gentleman does not doubt that? It ought only to be inflicted for a very heinous offense. Now, I wish to call the gentleman's attention to this fact, that by the existing law, by the law as it has stood for more than fifty years, such offenses could not be inquired of by any commanding officer of his own authority. The law provided, if the offense deserved a higher punishment than twelve lashes, that it must be inquired of by a court-martial, and therefore it was that I objected to the jurisdiction granted by this bill to a single commanding officer—perhaps a lieutenant—in a case which might deserve such punishment as that of solitary confinement for thirty days, with the accompaniments stated in this bill.

Mr. EVANS. I understand the gentleman. I would be willing that an offense of this kind should be inquired of by a court-martial. I voted for the bill, and took it as it is, because we have no punishment, no discipline in the Navy at this time. Immediate discipline is wanted there. I took the bill, because it is a beginning. If it is found by practice to be onerous in any particular provision, it will be altered. It will be amended, you may depend upon it, because the current of sentiment is in favor of leniency.

I very much fear, sir, that the days of our naval glory have passed away forever; sickly sentimentality has usurped the place of true genuine feeling, and discipline no longer will be enforced under the stars and stripes. The conflicts in the revolutionary war, when the American tars feared to meet no enemy, and when the American officers knew who they commanded—

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. If the gentleman will allow me to make a suggestion, and that is in regard to one portion of this bill, which seems to be lost sight of by those who oppose it; that is, that the severity of these punishments are counteracted by something that never existed in the Navy before—a system of rewards of a very important character.

Mr. EVANS. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for directing my attention to that part of the bill. I think it is an important portion, which may obviate many of the objections made to other portions. It is in most of its parts a just and proper bill. If provisions were introduced, founded upon the speeches I have heard here, we should have a pretty state of affairs indeed. I do not wish to misrepresent gentlemen in any way, but one gentleman thinks that by the Constitution of the United States our sailors are entitled to a trial by jury. Well, sir, while the gentleman was speaking, I sat down and drew up, as nearly as I could, based upon his remarks, an amendment which would give them effect. I will read it to the House:

Be it enacted, That the commander, lieutenants, midshipmen, and other officers on board ship, shall be elected by ballot by the whole ship's crew.

And be it further enacted, That all distinction of quarters is hereby abolished.

And be it further enacted, That every offense committed on board ship, whether by officers or seamen, shall be tried by a jury to be chosen by the whole crew, and such punishment shall be inflicted as is prescribed for the like offenses on shore, by the laws of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. STANLY. If my friend will allow me to suggest a correction, to strike out "by ballot," and insert "viva voce," and to add to the end of the last section "punished, &c.," according to the resolutions of '98 and '99." You will then have it just right. [Laughter.]

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman has perhaps improved it, but as I am not saying anything political, I will leave out the resolutions of '98. What I utter, I feel. I believe that the safety, the independence, and the glory of our country are closely connected with the discipline of the Navy. I believe, too, that our Navy will be yet our right arm of defense in the day of need and danger. I was about to say, when I was interrupted, that I much feared, unless we adopted some severe and stern discipline above the sickly sympathies and sentimentalities of the times, that we would never again have the days of the Constitution and the Guerriere, the Constitution and the Java, the Constitution and the Cyane and Levant, the Wasp and the Frolic, the United States and the Macedonian, and the days of those other glorious victories which covered the American flag with immortal honor. Those honors were attained by a strict and rigorous discipline, and not by riot and looseness on board of ship—not by questions of position of the commander here, and the crew there, not by any sentiment that a man who had been guilty of insubordination, mutiny, and who was in the highest degree disorderly, should rather have the tender sympathies and kindly feelings of everybody in the community, than a good proper punishment. I desire to see restored to the Navy its proper discipline. I believe that the members of this House desire it, and if they will look into its condition—if they will imagine for a moment the position of a commander—I was about to say the deplorable position, but, certainly, the great, tremendous and overwhelming responsibility of the commander of a ship in a distant sea, far away from his country at the mercy of five hundred men, picked up at random, many of whom may have been turned loose from the prisons and jails of Europe, they will have to admit that a strict discipline is indispensably necessary in every Navy. I assert here again, to those who would inflict no punishment, except for crime—and with them mutiny, insubordination, disorder, and refusal to obey orders is no crime—that those who, by their disorderly conduct, jeopard the lives of all the crew are guilty of a very great and heinous crime. Such crimes are worse than those committed upon land. The midnight murderer is not more criminal than are they who commit the offenses I have mentioned, for these lead to wholesale death. Let us see what has been the effect of the abolition of flogging in our naval service. It is fresh in the recollection of you all—and I state facts derived from creditable sources, that in the port of Liverpool there was lately a deplorable mutiny on board of an American ship, before she had proceeded out of the jurisdiction of the British waters. What was the result? If the lash had been resorted to, it perhaps would not have occurred. The result was, that the mutiny had to be quelled by a resort to cutlasses; and the maimed and mutilated bodies of the seamen engaged in it, bear attestation to the wisdom of your anti-flogging laws. This is but one single instance. There have been others, I am told, that women fear to take passage in American vessels upon long voyages. It is not because of fear of American seamen, but of the foreign jail-birds, criminals, and the abandoned of every land who congregate and take refuge there; but your sickly sympathies, and what I must call, with all respect to the House—your sickly sentimentality—refuse all remedy and prevent all redress. I will now, in compliance with my promise, withdraw my objection.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to prolong this debate, and unless some gentleman desires particularly to discuss this matter, I will say a word in reference to that portion of the bill to which I called the attention of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS,] and that is the new system of rewards which has been introduced for the benefit of the sailor, and among those especially, that provision by which, after twenty years of service, when his conduct has been proved, by good conduct discharges, at the termination of every term of his enlistment, the sailor shall be permitted to go into the naval asylum with half pay during life. Now, this is just and fair to the sailor, and a very great advantage. It is one which you will see can only be enjoyed by the sailor, who has performed his duty continuously for twenty years, without serious complaint by his commanding officers. It will be confined necessarily to a small portion of the Navy; and it will be for the benefit of the country, that this provision should be enjoyed by all. It is suggested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAILY] that this will be more than made up, by that very provision of the bill which makes a forfeiture of pay not exceeding three months, one of the punishments which may be inflicted for disorders upon board of a ship. I confess there is something singular in that objection.

Mr. HALL. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. I only desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, if he will be willing to give pensions to all officers of the Army or Navy who have served faithfully twenty years?

Mr. STANTON. I will say in regard to them, that the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, has directed me to report a bill for the relief of aged and disabled officers, unfit for service, or who may be put upon the retired list by a board organized for that purpose. I say that they have instructed me to report a bill which will have the effect of giving half-pay during life to these disabled officers, placing them out of the line, to give place to young and more vigorous officers, who will be prepared to perform the duties of their position. I would not be willing to turn these old officers out, without a dollar in their old age, after they have worn themselves out in the service of their country. Nor, upon the other hand, would I be willing to turn the sailor adrift in the same way, when he has performed his duties well and without objection, continually for twenty years.

I stated in the first remarks which I had the honor to make here to-day, that this provision, in all probability, would never be claimed by any sailor who was able to go to sea. If there is a man who is unwilling to confine himself to any asylum, and who is unwilling to confine himself to the shore, when he is able to do duty upon the sea, that man is the sailor—the sailor in the American Navy especially, so that the operation of this provision will be to exclude the undeserving man from the naval asylum, though now your naval asylum may be filled by men who are unworthy, and who never faithfully performed their duties. This, then, is a restriction, and at the same time, that it is a bounty and advantage to the sailor, it is a reward for good service.

In addition to that, there is another reward of three months extra pay. Upon the second enlistment of the sailor, provided that during the first term of his enlistment he has acted well, he obtains a good conduct discharge. Those gentlemen who are particularly the friends of the sailor objected to these severe punishments for crimes committed by sailors upon board of vessels. I say these are the gentlemen who most seriously object to the provisions rewarding the sailor after he has served his country twenty years faithfully, with half pay during his life, and an asylum under the patronage of the Government. It seems to me that there is a great inconsistency in these two objections.

Mr. EVANS. That sailor will have taken out of his pay for hospital money more than that half-pay will come to.

Mr. STANTON. The hospital money taken out of his pay is for the purpose of affording him medical assistance in time of sickness, and, when he needs it, an asylum in the hospital. However, the substance of what the gentleman says is true. I admit that there is great force in the objection, that these punishments are inflicted summarily by the officer. I grant it, and hence it is, I have admitted, that these summary punishments—although many gentlemen differ from me in that respect—are not necessary on shore. I know there is a great difference of opinion upon this point. Why is it that these summary punishments have been allowed in many cases? Because the discipline of the navy could not be maintained upon the sea, in the hour of danger, in the hour of battle, and in foreign countries, when we are not within the reach of our laws. Take the case of a vessel which may be detached from the squadron at a time when it would be impossible to have a court-martial, and when perhaps in the hour of danger, during a storm, it may be necessary to inflict punishment at once; or it may be necessary for the sailor to know that summary punishment may be inflicted speedily, so as to operate upon him as a terror, forcing him to do his duty.

Mr. MILLSON. There is no one punishment which can be inflicted at once.

Mr. STANTON. The gentleman is mistaken. The sentence that the sailor may be confined for thirty days in double-irons, and upon bread and water, is known to him at once, and it produces its effect upon him. The knowledge that the punishment can be inflicted upon him is what will produce a good effect. What was the objection to the lash? The objection taken by the majority of the House, and the weight of which I feel, and which is felt by the whole country, or at least by a large majority of the people of the country, is this: that it is a degrading punishment. If you put the question to any man, who has a proper sense of his honor, whether he would submit to the punishment of confinement upon bread and water, in irons thirty days, or submit to a dozen lashes; I am sure there would be no hesitation in the answer that would be given. It was the degrading character of that punishment which was objected to. One of the strong arguments upon all occasions has been, that the punishment by the lash has been abolished in almost every State of the Union. It is against the public senument. But confinement in irons has not been abolished. Solitary confinement has not been abolished anywhere. In my own State, I have known men, upon the suspicion of crimes, before any trial had taken place, to be confined for months in irons. In my judgment, you must give the officer in command of a vessel, the power of inflicting summary punishment. See what a vessel-of-war is. Take a village in the country, or a town of ten thousand inhabitants. Select from that ten thousand, one thousand vigorous men—all the effective force of the whole ten thousand. Place them in one vessel going to sea, and remaining there for, perhaps, three years, charged with the honor and defense of the country. Every one must see under these circumstances, that you cannot possibly maintain or carry on that important service by the same laws, by the same system of punishment, and you cannot acknowledge the same rights by which you are governed on shore. The thing is impossible. Reflect that in the absence of this bill, or something like it, or something which may be substituted for it, there is no power to punish. The lash cannot be inflicted. There is nothing else but death, and you must do it by a regular court-martial; and the sentence must be approved by the Navy Department and by the President of the United States. What check is there upon the passions, upon the insubordination or mutiny of the crews of our vessels? What power is there to control them? I agree that the lash ought to be abolished. I bow to the will of the people. I bow to my own instincts, and I acknowledge their full force; but crime must not go unpunished, and the necessities of the service must not be neglected. You must give this high and important power to the commanding officer of a vessel, or else the service will go to destruction. This is the feeling of the whole Navy, and I think it is the conviction of everybody, who is well acquainted with our naval system. I have never understood that the objection to this system of punishment was anything, but the disgraceful character and cruelty sometimes exercised by means of the lash. I have already shown you, that this punishment which requires time to carry out, will have the effect of doing justice. If punishment has been unjustly awarded, a little reflection and lapse of time will correct it, and an unjust sentence of confinement for fifteen or thirty days would never be carried out against the sense of justice, of any considerable portion of the officers on board ship. It is the continuance of these punishments that give to them a milder character; in short, a character totally different from that which existed under the late law, by which the lash was inflicted. I am not much disposed to close debate upon any proposition, but I am under the necessity of moving the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I hope it may be voted down. The House was attempted to be dragooned this morning—

Mr. STANTON. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. ORR. Two years ago flogging was abolished in the Navy by act of Congress, and just about in as summary a manner as the effort made this morning to pass this bill. I had the honor of occupying a seat upon this floor, and upon turning to the Journals, I find that there were but twenty-nine gentlemen who voted against the proposition which was introduced into the naval appropriation bill, abolishing flogging in the Navy. My name is one of those recorded in the negative. I thought then that I foresaw the evil consequences and disorganization which would ensue in consequence of that hasty and inconsiderate legislation. Now you attempt to remedy the great evil you have entailed on all the branches of the naval service by bringing a bill into the House which has not been even printed, and refuse time to the members to read it in manuscript, to say nothing of the time necessary to scrutinize its provisions, to determine whether they are favorable to it or not; but, under the force of the previous question, it is attempted to be thrust down the throats of members, nolens volens. I trust such a case of legislation has received such a rebuke as will not allow it to be attempted again. I am as well aware as any gentleman upon this floor that there is a necessity, imperious and unavoidable, for some additional legislation to prevent and suppress insubordination in the Navy. It is impossible that discipline in your Navy can be maintained unless you give authority to the officers in command of vessels to inflict summary and exemplary punishment upon evil doers. But, sir, I am opposed to seeing other subjects having no legitimate connection with proper punishment in the Navy, incorporated in this bill, and passed through the House under the force of a pressing necessity demanding our immediate action, to be in time to meet the wants of the expedition soon to sail to or against Japan, I know not which, when if left to their own merits, I am reasonably assured, could never get the sanction of a majority of this House.

It is urged by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] who, be it remembered, voted to abolish flogging in the Navy, without first providing other punishment, that the last clause of the bill, which provides that, after a sailor has served twenty years creditably, when he has had good marks all that time, he shall then be put upon the retired list, with half pay, is a just and proper one. He retires him, never requiring him to perform any further service of any sort to the country, and gives him half wages all the balance of his life for doing nothing. Quite a comfortable berth, truly, for a sailor can retire at forty, and be a pensioner the balance of his days. Well, I have the same objection to that as to a retired list in the Army and Navy. Persons engaged in the public service of the country are all the time they are thus engaged receiving fair, adequate salaries or wages; and if, by profligacy, wastefulness, extravagance, dissipation, or from any other cause, they squander their earnings, and have nothing to subsist upon when they become old, what obligation is there devolved on this Government to pay them pensions, when they have been well paid during the time they have been occupied in the public service. Why should not the same rule apply to the mechanic who has labored faithfully upon the public buildings for twenty years, and has become disabled from age, or other causes? Why should not the Government pension him also? Why not have a civil list, to include the statesmen and politicians of the country who have spent their best days in the public service, and when they become superannuated, let them feed from the public crib? I am opposed to the whole system, and hope it will never be saddled on to the people of the United States. If the gentleman desires to originate anything of that sort, let him introduce a separate bill, and pass it, if pass it must, upon its own merits. Now, I am in favor of a well digested bill, to prescribe and regulate punishment for offenses against the order and discipline of the naval service at sea and on shore. I do not know but what the principle features contained in the bill now before the House may meet my sanction. But I cannot without examination or consideration, aye, sir, without even reading, be forced to vote for the bill under present circumstances. I did hope that the proposition made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] to let his bill, by unanimous consent, go over until Monday next, and be printed, would have prevailed. We should then have the bill before us, and all the facts necessary to enable us to legislate upon it judiciously and discreetly. Hasty legislation, so pertinaciously pressed on the House to-day, will result just as it did two years ago, when you abolished flogging without providing a substitute. We have one evidence already of the difficulties which await ill-digested legislation, and the dissatisfaction it is likely to lead to. This bill, according to the statement of the gentleman from Virginia, confers upon the officers of the Navy more arbitrary power over the persons of the sailors than did the old law, which allowed flogging. Now, sir, if he is correct, how long will the act stand upon your statute-book, and what confusion will it not involve you in? If you pass the bill as it now stands, in all probability you will be forced to repeal it in a year, as being more revolting to humanity than flogging. I hope, therefore, that the question will go over until Monday next, when it can be considered, and that, by the unanimous consent of the House, the bill may be ordered to be printed.

I desire to inquire of the Speaker whether, if a motion is now made to adjourn, and it prevails, this business will not come up on Monday next, as the first in order.

The SPEAKER. It will. It is a motion to reconsider.

Mr. ORR. Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. VENABLE. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion for a few moments.

Mr. ORR. The gentleman can make his speech on Monday next.

Mr. VENABLE. The gentleman surely does not wish to choke me down?

Mr. ORR. I have no sort of objection to the gentleman's proceeding now, but it is the usual hour of adjournment. I will, however, withdraw the motion to adjourn, if it will gratify my friend from North Carolina.

Mr. VENABLE. I have only a remark or two to make. I do not feel under any particular obligation to help gentlemen out of the difficulty into which they have got themselves. I voted for the bill, because I thought it necessary to sustain the discipline and glory of our Navy. The gentlemen who voted against it, have my leave to get out of their difficulties as soon as possible.

Mr. ORR. It is the friends of the bill who have got themselves into difficulty. The majority here are very able to take care of themselves. There is no uneasiness at all in my mind, as one of that majority.

Mr. VENABLE. I suppose so. But the gentlemen must get out of the difficulties into which they have plunged themselves. I do not feel much inclination to help them out of it. Gentlemen tell us that they voted to abolish flogging, because it was degrading to the sailors. Sir, with flogging a part of the discipline of the Navy, the stars and stripes have been borne in irresistible triumph upon every ocean on which heaven has set breeze. Degraded men, and men crushed down by the discipline of the Navy, would never have achieved those triumphs which, from the days of Paul Jones down to the present day, have been written in letters of living light on the pages of our history. The gentleman tells us that the old sailor ought not to be pensioned after twenty years of hard service, with marks in his favor all the time. They begrudge him retirement to the sailor's snug harbor. I have no difficulty of that sort. You call a man into an ephemeral war, and skirmish with Indians; he goes into the field once, and is then discharged, and you give him one hundred and sixty acres of land. The militiaman, who never drew a trigger, and never saw an enemy, gets one hundred and sixty acres of land. But when a proposition was made here to give one hundred and sixty acres to the sailor, who has grown gray in the hard service of his country, the House voted it down. Even those who did such tall walking at Bladensburg, got paid. But when the poor sailor, who, hoary with the snows of winter and of age, who has been for twenty consecutive years facing the stormy winds and the enemies of his country, comes and asks for retirement or for one hundred and sixty acres of land, you refuse him, because you say he is a mariner, and not a landsman. Gentlemen say that it is creating the system of a retired list in the Army and Navy. If it be so, let us inquire, is it right and just? The man who braves the ocean waves, and the storm, and the battle on the deck of a man-of-war, that man shall never be refused a pension at my hands. I am never willing to refuse such a man a harbor to retire into after twenty years' consecutive honorable service. I have been pained, on looking over the years and nays, to see how many gentlemen voted against giving bounty lands to the poor sailors, whilst they are voting them away to railroads, and giving forty-two millions of acres of lands called "swamp lands"—which would include the top of Mount Ararat, for the flood passed over that once. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman, but I cannot allow—

Mr. VENABLE. Sir, I will take back all about Mount Ararat and the flood, to satisfy my friend from Arkansas. [Laughter.] Sir, when the Roman soldier had served for twenty years he was called a veteran, and was honored by every one, whether plebeian or patrician, and supported from the public treasury. When he appeared in the streets of Rome he was received with respect by old and young; and in those days the young men rose up before the old men. But, in these days, when "Young America" is running against "Old Fogysm," it is a disqualification for a man to have been in the high and honorable service of his country, and to have some of the signs of age upon his temple, prophetic as it may be, of decline. That is to say, that the man who has achieved enough to secure the confidence and esteem of his contemporaries, and who bears the marks of honorable service upon him, is to be denominated an "old fogey," because some young man has claims which he desires to put forward. I may, perhaps, be somewhat sensitive, because I am a little of an "old fogey" myself.

The SPEAKER. The chair will suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina, that the question before the House is on reconsidering the vote by which the bill was rejected. [Laughter.]

Mr. VENABLE. I know it is, and I shall return to the subject. I wish gentlemen to get out of the difficulty into which they have got themselves, and if our ships are disgraced for want of discipline, I want the responsibility of that disgrace to be on those who refuse authority to the officers to enforce discipline.

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman from North Carolina speaks of the predicament into which the majority have got themselves. I will state to him that I believe there is not one of the gentlemen who constitute that majority who would not prefer that there should be no bill at all, rather than the bill which was presented to day. But that majority—I speak advisedly, after a consultation with a very large portion—are perfectly willing to concur in the passage of a suitable and proper bill. But does the gentleman from North Carolina mean to be understood as occupying the position of one who will give no discipline to the Navy unless the bill which has been presented to-day is accepted?

Mr. VENABLE. All I have to say is, that I am in favor of a suitable and proper bill, such as the one which was rejected this morning. I voted for the amendment striking out the provision for putting "thief" on a man's back, and that was the only provision in the bill to which I objected. I have long since passed by the day in which I believed that moral suasion could govern anybody. That is one of the features of this progress of which we hear so much in this nineteenth century. Sir, this is called the age of progress, and it is; but let me remind gentlemen that there is a progress downwards, as well as upwards—backwards, as well as forwards. Under this banner—the punishment of crime, the restraint of vice, and the sanctity of law, have all been made to recede. Sympathy, instead of clustering around suffering merit, is poured out in a perennial stream in favor of those whose crimes have at last brought them to deserved punishments. The short way to paradise is from a two-legged edifice, erected at the public expense, accompanied with a piece of hempen cord, furnished to those steeped in the guilt of murder, and all over defiled with guilt. Good men, struggling with adversity, were once described as subjects worthy of the admiration of superior beings. That age has passed away, and now the most profound interest is attracted by those whose just condemnation for the grossest crimes ought to have secured the approbation of all good men. We are told of degrading punishments. Sir, this is the foundation of the whole mistake. The great fundamental error in progress in this direction is, that the disgrace is annexed to the punishment, and not to the crime. The crime is the disgrace; the punishment is intended, not for that end, but to reform and restrain the offender, and as an example to others. Good men and good sailors have nothing to fear from the disgrace of punishment, because such do not commit crimes. Why, then, is it that malefactors are to be protected and shielded from punishment, to the destruction of discipline and the hazard of the lives, as well as the vessels, which are employed in our service? Why do gentlemen forget the honorable officers, and equally honorable and obedient sailors, and offer a bounty to the unworthy and disobedient, by withholding the power of inflicting punishment or exercising restraint? It is answered that too much is left to the discretion of the officer in command. Sir, you must trust somebody. The responsibility is on the officers, and it is unjust to withhold from them the means of enforcing obedience. The court-martial will certainly censure them for failure to do all this duty, and you render that impossible by depriving them of the power to compel refractory men to obedience. If gentlemen are ready to give up the Navy, let them haul down our flag honorably—let them order the ships home and disband the crews, but save our bright and glorious naval history from a degrading termination. England, France, and every naval power, will rejoice to see this arm of our strength paralyzed, our extended coast and our wealthy cities invite assault and stimulate the thirst for plunder. The guns of our ships, and the bold hearts and stalwart arms of our tars have been our bulwark; but without discipline it will be so no longer. Good men, brave men, will not divide risks or share perils with the insubordinate and unworthy. No, sir, their proud, brave hearts will shrink from mingling with such contamination. The bronzed cheeks would be colored yet more deeply with the sense of shame, if compelled to see the disasters to this service which must result from the want of discipline in the crews.

Sir, I know no conservatism but obedience to constituted authorities; I recognize as durable no progress but that which restrains vice, punishes crime, and protects the virtuous and deserving. I am not afraid to trust those who must control the elements of social organization, with the power to make that control effective. I dread nothing so much as insubordination to acknowledged law, whether in civil life, the camp, or on the deck of our ships of war. Somebody must rule, and the civil magistrate and the military officer have, by common consent, been selected for that purpose, and they must be sustained. Sickly sensibility for offenders cannot be cherished without danger of social disorganization. I have always admired the promptitude with which the people of the State that I in part represent render obedience to the magistrate. His mandate is always sufficient to restrain the highest as well as to protect the humblest member of society. Gentlemen speak of the disgraceful nature of the punishments in this bill; seem shocked at the authority of an officer to imprison the rebellious sailor. Sir, I have often seen the magistrate imprison disorderly citizens, and all seemed to approve his decision; I have seen the insufferable nuisance which often afflicts society in the persons of abandoned and licentious loafers, abated by his order to place such persons in the stocks. It was obeyed, and all the people said Amen.

Mr. FICKLIN. I would ask my friend from North Carolina whether they hang people yet in his State for stealing horses?

Mr. VENABLE. My friend from Illinois can have no interest in that matter. There are so many horses in Illinois that he will have no occasion to come to North Carolina, and I have no time at present, to reply to amateur questions. In North Carolina we whip larceners, counterfeiters, and thieves in general, and place those who deserve it in the pillory or the jail. I never hear complaint made of the disgrace of the punishment. It is the crime, and not the punishment, which constitutes the disgrace. I have no sympathy for the malefactor, and I hope I never shall have, whilst I would refuse to reward the old soldier or sailor, and to vote him a place to retire to in his old age. I never will require the gallant officer to walk his quarter-deck without being able to command his men with a certainty of being obeyed by them. I never will compel him to kill his men for mutiny, or submit to their will. I will never be willing to risk the lives of seven or eight hundred men, or have a fully armed vessel put in jeopardy because there is no way to compel the sailors to obey their officers. Sir, if it is to be the temper of Congress to pour contempt on those institutions which are intended to restrain the unholy passions of men, and to curb and hold back those who would sin against the rights of individuals and the laws of the country; if this temper is to be encouraged; if the current of national feeling and sympathy is to run in that direction; if our legislation is to assume that character, our country will be cursed of God and fled from by men, and our Government will dissolve in its own filth and corruption, and it ought to be dissolved! We have no security for the institutions of society unless we make laws, and give power to execute those laws, to restrain wicked and violent men, and compel them to obey the Government. You can have no Government without the power to make laws and the power to execute those laws at all hazards. I am not an old man. I have passed more than the middle of any human life, and I feel a sense of gloom come over me that I cannot avoid, when I see the disposition amongst men in high places to shield and protect those who violate the laws and sin against those restraints which the wise and just have imposed for the protection of person and property. These are my views upon this subject.

I will place no obstruction in the way of a reconsideration of this bill. A locus penitentie is within the reach of the majority who rejected it; but I can assure them that there are many who aided them in that work, who cannot be easily satisfied with any bill which gives the power to exercise wholesome discipline in the Navy. Nothing but disaster from insubordination will awaken the people to the erroneous legislation upon this subject. I am not responsible for any of it. I voted against the abolition of corporal punishments. This bill, approved of by the best officers in the Navy, and passed by the Senate, is worthy of a trial. The system of rewards, as well as punishments, is a good feature in its provisions. I am satisfied that it is our duty to provide for the evening of his life, when the gallant tar breaks down with service. His wages are taxed every month to sustain hospitals for his reception. So many perish by the perils of their avocation—so many sleep in an ocean grave—that our economical notions will not be greatly shocked by the expense of providing for deserving, meritorious men. This system of discipline restrains the vicious, encourages the deserving, and I believe will do all hoped for by its friends. I was anxious for the passage of the bill, because two squadrons are expected to leave in a few days for remote stations and a long time. I feel it due to the service and the country to establish regular discipline, and not leave the whole Navy to legalized confusion. Agreeably to the promise made my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman withdraw that motion for a moment?

Mr. VENABLE. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I propose to relieve the majority of the dilemma into which the gentleman from North Carolina seems to suppose they have involved themselves, by moving to lay the proposition to reconsider on the table. I move that the motion to reconsider do lie on the table.

Mr. ORR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the House adjourned to twelve o'clock to-morrow.

NOTICE OF BILLS.

Mr. THOMAS M. HOWE gave notice that he would, on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, ask leave to introduce a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to grant, under such restrictions as in his judgment the public interests may require, the right of way to the Pittsburg, Kintaning, and Warren railroad over the grounds held by the United States at the Allegheny arsenal, in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DOTY gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill with the following title: "A bill for the relief of Major Ephraim Shaler, late of the United States Army."

Mr. MACE gave notice that he would, on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, ask leave to introduce a bill to admit railroad iron free of duties.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BISSELL: The memorial of Cyrus Edwards and others, citizens of Illinois, praying Congress to interfere to prevent the destruction of the suspension bridge at Wheeling.

By Mr. HOUSTON: The petition of sundry citizens of Lauderdale county, Alabama, against the extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. LANDRY: A resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, asking for an appropriation from Congress to remove obstructions placed in bayou Lafourche by order of the United States officers during the last war with England.

By Mr. EDGERTON: The memorial of John Stewart, Jr., & Co., of New York, asking for the cancellation of certain transportation bonds.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: The memorial of Thomas J. Barton and others, of Columbia county, and State of New York, asking Congress to repeal the act lately passed in relation to the surrender of fugitive slaves.

By Mr. HENN: The petition of Anson Richardson and 134 others, citizens of Iowa, asking Congress to abolish the office of chaplain.

Also, the petition of Wm. H. Smith and 123 others, citizens of Iowa, asking for the establishment of a mail route from Linden, Missouri, via Gaston, Fairview, Florence, and Council Bluffs, to Kanecsville, Iowa.

Also, the petition of C. T. Gardner and 45 others, citizens of Iowa, asking a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Burlington to the Missouri river.

Also, the petition of 226 citizens of Monroe county, Iowa, asking for a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Burlington to the Missouri river.

By Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts: Petitions of Samuel R. Morse and others, of Worcester county, and of Joseph Adams and others, of Hampshire county, Massachusetts, against the extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. J. W. HOWE: The petition of R. J. Harper and 55 others, citizens of Mercer county, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against a renewal of Woodworth's patent planing machine.

Also, the petition of John McFann and 54 others, citizens of Crawford county, Pennsylvania, on the same subject.

Also, the petition of Samuel F. Dale and 50 others, citizens of Venango county, Pennsylvania, on the same subject.

Also, the petition of J. J. Livingston, late marshal for taking the census in Clarion county, Pennsylvania, praying Congress to make him an extra allowance or compensation.

Also, the petition of Alexander McKee and 103 others, citizens of the counties of Mercer and Crawford, Pennsylvania, praying Congress to discontinue the transportation of the mail on the Sabbath.

Also, the petition of H. McBride and 49 others, citizens of Pennsylvania and Ohio, on the same subject.

By Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania: A petition signed by a large number of the farmers and laborers of Pennsylvania, praying Congress to revise the tariff of 1846, and impose additional duties on iron, coal, and other articles.

Also, four petitions, very numerous signed by citizens of Pennsylvania, praying that slavery may be abolished and prohibited in all the Territories of the United States.

By Mr. CABLE, of Ohio: A memorial from John G. Baker and others, of Washington county, in relation to certain mail routes.

By Mr. FLORENCE: The memorial of Mary F. B. Levely, of Philadelphia, widow of Captain Henry Levely, praying for a pension.

Also, the memorial of John Prentiss, asking an appropriation, to test the improvement for giving shells and shot the rifle motion from the common smooth bored cannon of the United States Navy.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 30, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. CHASE. I desire to ask that the Journal of the Senate may be amended, by having my vote recorded on laying upon the table the motion to receive the second petition presented yesterday by the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD.] I was in my place, and answered to my name; but my vote is not recorded. I voted in the negative.

The Journal was amended accordingly.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SUMNER presented the petition of Chas. C. Little and eighty-two others, citizens of Boston; also, two petitions of B. F. Hallet and one hundred and thirty-eight other citizens of Boston and its vicinity, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SOULE presented the memorial of James Reed, praying the appointment of a tribunal to review the decisions of the late Board of Commissioners for the settlement of claims of American citizens against Mexico; which was referred to the select committee appointed on the subject.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of citizens of Buffalo, New York, praying an extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. RUSK. I have been requested to present the petition of about sixty individuals, who represent themselves to be stone-masons and laborers. They say that they were induced to come here with their families, at considerable expense, by the Government. They are now out of employment, and destitute of the means of support, in consequence of the failure of Congress to make appropriations for the continuance of the extension of the Capitol. I move its reference to the Committee on Public Buildings.

It was so referred.

Mr. BRADBURY. I present certain resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Maine, in relation to the abuses inflicted on passengers in the California line of steamers. I deem it necessary only to say that I have anticipated the action of the Legislature by the introduction of a resolution sometime ago calling attention to the subject, and a bill has already been reported from the Committee on Commerce designed to remedy the evils complained of. I move that the resolutions be received, read, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BADGER presented the memorial of Ignatius Lucas, Samuel James, Charles Tilley, and Thomas S. Bingley, watchmen of the Navy Department, praying Congress to grant them compensation for extra services performed in watching; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BROOKE presented certain resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, instructing the Senators and requesting the Representatives of that State to use their exertions to obtain an appropriation of a sum of money for the purpose of removing the mud or sand bar in the Gulf of Mexico, opposite the mouth of the East Pascagoula river; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented the memorial of citizens of Illinois, praying a donation of land to the State of Iowa, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Burlington to the Missouri river; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a memorial of inhabitants of Clayton, Iowa, praying that the transportation of the mails on Sunday may be prohibited by law; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a memorial of citizens of Lee county, Iowa, praying the appointment of commissioners to examine and settle all claims to land in the Sax and Fox half-breed reservations; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DOUGLAS presented a memorial of citizens of Macoupin, Illinois, praying that the bridges of the Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Company may be established as mail routes; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a petition of the officers of the Buel Institute, Illinois, praying the establishment of an Agricultural Bureau at Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. SHIELDS presented the petition of Hannah Dutton, one of the heirs of William Douglass, a revolutionary officer, praying to be allowed bounty land; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. ADAMS, it was Ordered, That the petition of James G. Bell, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That the petition of Pamela Preswick, for herself and the other heirs of William Wighton, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. NORRIS, it was Ordered, That the petition of H. L. Kendrick, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion by Mr. FISH, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Johnson Livingston and his associates, praying the establishment of a mail line between New York and Genoa, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

On motion by Mr. HALE, it was Ordered, That the heirs of Nathaniel Hobbs have leave to withdraw their petition and papers.

On motion by Mr. CLEMENS, it was Ordered, That the petition of Seneca G. Simmons, on the files of the Senate, relating to compensation for services as secretary to the Creek and Osage Commissioners, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion by Mr. SEBASTIAN, it was Ordered, That the memorial of the widow and representatives of Lorenzo M. Clark, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BORLAND, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of Raphael Semmes, a lieutenant in the Navy, praying compensation for services rendered in a survey on the southern coast, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. SOULE, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the petition of Samuel W. Chilson, praying indemnification for damages sustained in consequence of being discharged from duty as a mail agent, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the letter of the Secretary of War in relation to the purchase of ground for a military depot in California, reported a bill to confirm the purchase of a tract of land for a military depot at Benicia, California; which was read, and passed to the second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Henry L. Kinney, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to the second reading.

After a brief explanation, on the motion of Mr. SHIELDS, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the following memorials and report, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

The memorial of Brevet Colonel Mansfield, praying the action of Congress for the settlement of his accounts;

The petition of certain non-commissioned officers of the regiment of mounted riflemen, asking to be discharged from the terms of their enlistment, on the ground of violated pledges;

The petition of C. B. Brower, late a lieutenant in the Army, praying to be reinstated in the Army; and

The report of the Secretary of War in relation to the construction of a military road from Fort Dodge to Dubuque;

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of the merchants of San Antonio, Texas, praying that it might be made a port of entry, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce; which was agreed to.

Mr. FISH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of the petty officers and seamen asking remuneration for their clothing lost by the destruction of the steam-frigate Missouri, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAWSON. Some days since, I reported a bill from the Committee on Patents, to grant a further extension of the patent for a reaping machine invented by Cyrus H. McCormick. I now present the report, intended to accompany that bill, stating all the facts connected with the case.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLEMENS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Seneca G. Simmons, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief.

The said bill was read a first and second time by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being made, it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. DOUGLAS gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill, supplemental to the act, entitled "An act extending the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States to the lakes and the navigable waters connected therewith."

He also gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill, to change the name of a midshipman in the Navy of the United States.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill granting to the State of Wisconsin a donation of public lands, to aid in the construction of a railroad from the town of Sheboygan, on Lake Michigan, to the Mississippi river; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, by unanimous consent obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the counties of Des Moines and Dubuque, in the State of Iowa; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MEMPHIS FEMALE ORPHAN ASYLUM.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting to the Female Orphan Asylum, of the city of Memphis, a piece of land, owned by the Government, in that city, which was purchased for the use of the Government as an arsenal, but which has been abandoned and is not used by the Government for that or any other purpose.

ADDITIONAL COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. SOULE submitted the following resolution; which was read three several times and passed:

Resolved, That the select committee on memorials in relation to the proceedings of the Board of Commissioners on Claims against Mexico appoint a clerk, at the same rate of compensation as is allowed to clerks of other committees of the Senate.

REMOVAL OF SAND BAR.

Mr. BROOKE submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of removing the bar in the Gulf of Mexico, opposite the mouth of East Pascagoula river, in the State of Mississippi, and to report the probable cost of the same.

CLERK OF COMMITTEE.

Mr. BRODHEAD submitted the following resolution; which was read three several times and passed:

Resolved, That the clerk of the Committee of Claims be continued at the usual rate of compensation, and that he be allowed his compensation from the commencement to the end of the present session.

JUDGES OF DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. CHASE submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making the salary of each judge of a district court of the United States equal to that of any associate justice of the supreme court of the State in which the district may be established.

EXTENSION OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. BORLAND submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings be instructed to inquire how far, and in what direction, the grounds around the Capitol will have to be extended in conformity with the plan of extension of the building that has been begun; how much private property would be included in such extension of the grounds; and what amount of money would probably be required to purchase said private property, and make the necessary improvements of the grounds in consequence of the extension.

STRYKER'S ANNUAL REGISTER.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. SEWARD the 29th instant, relative to Stryker's Annual Register; and it was agreed to.

MILEAGE OF DELEGATE FROM OREGON.

On motion of Mr. DOUGLAS, the House bill to regulate the mileage of the Delegate from the Territory of Oregon was taken from the table, and referred to the Committee on the Territories.

GOLD AND SILVER COINAGE.

The following engrossed bill was read a third time, and passed: "An act amendatory of existing laws relative to the half dollar, quarter dollar, dime, and half dime;" it having first been amended, on the motion of Mr. HUNTER, so as to take effect from the first of June next, instead of the first of May.

COMPENSATION OF DISTRICT JUDGES.

The PRESIDENT announced the special order to be the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill increasing the salary of the district judge of the United States for the district of New Hampshire.

Mr. GWIN. I hope that will not be taken up now. I supposed the California dry-dock bill was the special order.

The PRESIDENT. This is the unfinished business.

Mr. GWIN. Then I move to postpone this bill in order to take up the California navy-yard bill. I do not make this motion from any feeling of opposition to this bill.

Mr. HALE. It will take but a moment to dispose of this bill. I think gentlemen talked as much about it yesterday as they intend to talk. Everybody but one Senator is in favor of the bill.

The motion to postpone was not agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ATCHISON. Understood yesterday, that the present salary of this judge is $1,000. I understood further from the Senator from New Hampshire that the chief justice of the court of appeals of New Hampshire receives $1,400. I am opposed to increasing the pay of the judges, and for this reason: these offices are more sought after than any other. The tenure of office is a matter of vast importance. Judges of the United States hold their office for life, or rather, during good behavior; and the very best lawyers in every State of this Union, greedily seek for the office of district judge of the United States, and that, too, at the present rate of salary. If the business of the United States courts in the State of New Hampshire, should increase, so as to require another judge, I should be perfectly willing to divide the State, and provide for the appointment of another judge, with the same salary of $1,000.

Mr. President, you find that every office in this Government, from the highest to the lowest, is greedily sought after; and that, too, by men competent to fill them; and more particularly in the judicial branch of the Government. If a vacancy should happen in this office, you would find perhaps, half a dozen or a dozen applicants—the very best lawyers in the State of New Hampshire—at the present salary. So it is in almost every State of this Union. So soon as an office is to be obtained, whether it be a judicial, an executive, or a ministerial office, in this Government, crowds of candidates annoy everybody, from the President of the United States down—particularly members of Congress—for their influence to obtain these appointments at the existing salaries. So soon as the office is obtained, day after day, session after session, you find applicants from every department of this Government for increased compensation. The clerks of the new census bureau, the marshals, the deputy marshals, whose pay was fixed mathematically, by the cube or square root, are all applying for an increase of pay. The officers of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives, also, are all applying for an increase of pay; and they get it, too.

Now, it is evidence, strong as holy writ, to me, that when there are crowds of applicants for an office, at the present rate of salary, (for this is the first thing applicants look after,) and obtain it, the compensation paid is a sufficient and adequate one. Why, I should not be at all astonished if, in the course of a very short time, there was a clamor raised in both Houses of Congress for an increase of the pay of members. You hear a low murmur now, particularly since the extra mileage has been cut off, that there is an insufficient and inadequate compensation for members of Congress. I think that whenever we shall have evidence that the salaries are insufficient, and when that evidence shall be furnished by the fact, that competent men refuse to accept these offices, it will be time enough to raise them. When a man holds an office, it is human nature for him to clamor for an increase of pay. It is done in the army; it is done in the navy; it is done in every department of the Government. For one, I am not disposed to gratify these persons.

Mr. HALE. I suppose that the honorable Senator from Missouri, when he speaks of what took place when there was a vacancy in the office of district judge of New Hampshire, speaks rather from his general impressions of what may have been the case, than from any knowledge of what did actually occur. If there was any such rush for that place as he speaks of, I confess that it has escaped my knowledge. I knew nothing of it. But the argument that these offices, generally, are sought after at the present compensation, and that it is evidence that the compensation is high enough, it seems to me, if it proves anything, it proves a great deal too much. Let me suppose, for instance, that the compensation of Senators, was stricken down from eight dollars to six dollars a day, would there be no rush then? Then, to carry the argument further, suppose the pay of Senators were reduced to four dollars a day, would these places then be unsought? Or, if they were put upon the same footing as seats in the British House of Commons, and no compensation at all, were paid, would there be no gentlemen of ambition, and patriotism, and means enough, who would be willing to fill these places? The argument, if it proves anything, it seems to me, proves a great deal too much; and the honorable Senator, in his zeal to vindicate the pure democracy of the question, has leaned over on the other side. I say that so far as the past experience of things goes, the argument is not true. It is not true that the compensation paid is evidence of the justness and accuracy of it. If it be, then the messengers of the Senate, earn more, and are entitled to more compensation than the judges of our courts.

Now, this question presents itself simply and plainly here: Is a thousand dollars such a salary as is adequate to the compensation of a man, whom, by law, you debar from devoting his talents to any other occupation? If it is, say so. If it is sufficient in New Hampshire, it is sufficient in other places. I do not think that it is much cheaper to live in New Hampshire than it is in Illinois, as my friend from Illinois [Mr. SHIELDS] yesterday suggested. I suppose that the materials that are necessary for the comfortable support of life costs quite as much in New Hampshire as in any other place in the Union, excepting always the large cities, such as Boston, New York, and Philadelphia. It seems to me, that because the gentleman who holds this office at present does not resign and throw it up, you are not to infer that he receives a sufficient compensation. Suppose he was to resign, and Congress should issue proposals to let the office of district judge for the district of New Hampshire to the man that would fill it for the lowest compensation, I do not doubt that you could get men who would come forward and contract to fill it for a dollar a day. I do not doubt that there could be found men who would come, even from the far West, who would leave the fertile valleys of the great West, to discharge these duties for a much less compensation. But they would be of a character such as was described by an honorable Senator from South Carolina, some time ago, when speaking of this class of men. They would be men who would resort to refectories and oyster-shops for their entertainment; they would be vulgar in their deportment, and unqualified, by their education, tastes, and habits, to discharge the duties of the situation to which they aspired. The fact that men can be found who are willing to take this office for a low compensation—less than what is actually paid—is no evidence that the compensation is adequate. We owe something to ourselves. We owe something to the character of the judiciary. We owe something to the reputation of ourselves and the men whom we call to these places. And what would comport with all these considerations, it seems to me, is the salary we should pay. But this matter was sufficiently discussed yesterday, and I do not wish any longer to take up the time of the Senate, but I hope we shall come to a vote.

Mr. ATCHISON. I desire to move an amendment to the bill. It is to strike out $1,600, and insert $1,400, which seems to be the compensation fixed by the Legislature—the law-making power—of New Hampshire, for the chief justice of the court of appeals in that State.

Mr. CLARKE. Allow me to say, that I think my friend from Missouri is wrong in his estimate of the salary which is required for this judicial officer of the United States. If the people of New Hampshire only give their supreme judge $1,400, we all know that the Government of the United States selects its own officers from the highest judicial talent which there is in a State. Now, sir, when the Government of the United States has made this selection in New Hampshire, and has appointed an individual, eminent for talent, capacity, and integrity, as district judge of that State, it leaves only to the people of New Hampshire to take him who is second to that individual; and, therefore, I think that the discrimination made by my friend from Missouri is wrong. We ought to pay the man, who is selected as being the best man in New Hampshire, a larger salary than the good people of New Hampshire themselves would pay to the individual whom they select, who is under their control, and whom, when he conducts himself improperly, they can displace. Under these circumstances, I think the Senator's position is wrong; and we are bound to pay for the talent we extract from New Hampshire, a larger salary than the people of that State give to the judge of their supreme court.

Mr. CHASE. By the resolution which I laid upon the table this morning, I indicated the general principle that would govern my vote in a case of this kind. I am quite willing that the judges of the courts of the United States shall be paid full and adequate salaries. I think that full and adequate salaries are necessary to command the proper talent for such stations. But, in forming my judgment as to what is an adequate salary, I shall be governed always, in some degree, by the action of the State Legislature in which the district is established. I learn from my friend from New Hampshire, that the associate judges of the supreme court of his State are paid $1,200 a year. We all know perfectly well that the duties of the associate judges of the supreme court of a State are far more arduous than those of a district judge can possibly be; and it seems to me that, if we place these salaries upon the footing, in all the States, of those of the associate judges, we will do quite enough. I agree with what was said by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BORLAND] yesterday, that it is not the business of this Government to give high salaries. It is our duty to give adequate salaries and adequate compensation; but it is not our duty, and, in my judgment, it is not expedient, to pay extravagant salaries.

I think, further, that it is not good policy for those who desire to maintain the sovereignty and independence of the States, and to draw round them the regards and honor of the people, to put the judges of the courts of the United States, or any other officers of the Government of the United States, at all above State officers. That is another consideration which will govern my vote. I will, therefore, move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Missouri by substituting $1,200 for $1,400. That will place this officer upon a footing with the associate judges of the supreme court of the State; and it seems to me that he ought to be content with that.

The PRESIDENT. The question will be first on the amendment proposing the largest amount.

Mr. HALE. I want to suggest to the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE,] that he could better meet his object, by putting his amendment differently. The associate judges of our county courts are paid by the day, and receive three dollars a day while the courts are actually in session. It seems to me that if the salary of this officer is to be razed down to an equality with State judges, it had better come down to that.

Mr. ATCHISON. I withdraw my amendment, and accept that of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CHASE. My friend from New Hampshire has misinterpreted my language, and his remarks might have the effect of placing what I said in rather a ludicrous aspect. I founded my remarks upon a statement made by him yesterday. He said, in answer to a question propounded by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND,] that the associate judges of the supreme court of New Hampshire received $1,200 a year. They have, perhaps, some little perquisites in addition, which we, of course, cannot take into consideration. I do not wish to put the district judge upon a footing with the associate judges of the county courts. I have said no such thing; but I say that action of the Legislature of the State which prescribes the compensation for an associate judge of the State supreme court—an office which requires quite as much talent in that officer, and imposes more labor than the office of the district judge—furnishes a proper rule for us in fixing the salary of the district judge.

Mr. RHETT. I suppose that the votes which we give on this bill will settle the principle as to our course upon all the other bills of a like nature which come up after it; and therefore our time can now probably be best applied upon this bill. Sir, I agree with the principle laid down by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND,] yesterday, reiterated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. ATCHISON] to-day, and also recommended by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE,] that the judges of the United States courts should not be paid higher than those of the State courts; but, in my opinion, they ought not to be paid less. Reflect, Mr. President. We make judges, not for the sake of paying judges alone. Judges are made to expound the law—to expound the law for the people, and to expound the law for the people of the State. A good or a bad judge affects the administration of justice in the area of his administration. That is the case amongst the people I represent, and is so amongst the people of all other Senators here present. I do not want such a rate of compensation established as will bring a man inferior in character, as well as inferior in legal acquirement, to adjudicate over the citizens whom I represent in a manner that is derogatory to justice; and thus fill our State tribunals with a higher order of talent and legal ability; in which case, citizens would leave the United States courts and flock to the State courts, rather than risk their cases in the former. I think it becomes us, as it becomes the United States, to be as fairly, as properly, and as efficiently represented in a judicial capacity in our courts, as the States are in their courts; and yet I know that in some States, lawyers have moved their cases out of the United States courts, upon the ground of judicial incapacity in those courts. I know the fact; and ought that to be? I think not, sir; and I think that when Senators object to a fair remuneration for the judges, they should recollect that it is not a mere douceur to the judges—that it is not for the benefit of the officers. I do not pay a salary to a judge for the benefit of the officer, but I pay for the benefit of the people over whom he is to administer justice; and I wish to have a judge who will preside with dignity, ability, and learning, that my people, over whom he is to administer justice, may have justice administered in the best way possible.

Sir, it is in vain for the Senator from Missouri to say, that because applicants come flocking for these places, that that is a reason why we should not raise the salaries. I believe that the lower you put the salary, the more applicants there will be; because few will aspire to the position, when the requisition is higher. There would be a self-respect among the bar, and the gentlemen who aspire to the position, when the salary was higher, and fewer would be recommended by the bar, and by those who are capable of judging in the States as to who should administer justice there; it would be a choice amongst the highest, and not amongst the lowest, who are the many. I think, therefore, that the United States courts should not stand in an inferior position to the State courts; and that we ought to raise the salaries of our judges, when they are inferior, at least to those of the State judges, in order that the judicial ability and integrity of the State may be always at the command of this Government, as well as at that of the State. I utterly eschew the idea of placing them above State officers and State judges. I would not assent to any such arrangement; but the principle which ought to govern us is this: to get the highest judicial talent and ability to administer in the courts of the United States; and in order to do that, the judges should be paid at least as high as the State governments pay their judges for the administration of justice. So far, I think, we ought to go; and so far I am prepared to go.

Mr. BRADBURY. I think the position assumed by the honorable Senator from South Carolina should be received with some modification. He makes the salary of the State judges the standard, from which he would not depart, in fixing the salary of the judges of the district court of the United States. I admit that to be an important element in determining the question of the amount of salary, but I think it should not control the decision in all instances. We all know that the tenure of office is different in different States. In some States the tenure of office is for a period of years, and, in some instances, for a very short period; while the tenure of the office of the judge of the district court of the United States is for life, or during good behavior. Another element to be considered is the amount of duty to be performed. In some States, the duties of the State judges are exceedingly onerous, and their compensation, therefore, is very high, while perhaps, in the same State, there would be a very small amount of business for the district judge of the United States. In that case, it would be doing more than justice to the district judge, to raise his salary as high as that of the State judge. In other cases the duty of the State judge may be comparatively light, while that of the judge of the United States court may be exceedingly onerous. This, then, is an element of importance to be considered in determining what is the proper compensation; but I do not consider that it would be exactly safe to prescribe that as a rule by which to fix the salaries in all cases.

Mr. BADGER. I have listened to what has been said by the honorable Senator from South Carolina, with much satisfaction, and think the positions which he has laid down are sound in their utmost extent; and I beg to add a word or two to what he has said, for the purpose of further illustrating the propriety of the rule he has laid down.

With regard to the judges of the court of appeals, or the supreme court of the State of New Hampshire, I understand that the chief justice has a salary of $1,400, and that the associate judges receive each $1,200. Now it should be recollected that the judge of the district court of the United States sits in a court by himself. So far as his tribunal is concerned, you must depend entirely upon his intelligence, his law learning, his character, and his firmness. In the next place, he sits in the circuit court, with the judge of the supreme court of the United States; and, there being but two judges, his opinion is sufficient in that court to equal and to outweigh the opinion of the chief justice, with whom he sits, in arresting the adjudications of the court. The jurisdiction conferred upon the courts of the United States, renders it peculiarly important that these courts should be presided over by men eminent for ability, and of most unquestionable character; and, as the Senator from South Carolina said, the people of the State for whom they are to administer justice are deeply interested in their possessing these qualifications. But that is not all. The circuit court of the United States, in which the district judge sits as one of the judges, which the district judge is competent to hold without a judge of the supreme court of the United States—the judges of the supreme court of the United States being now by law authorized to omit one of the circuits which they ordinarily hold without the assistance of another judge—that court, which is thus held, has special and peculiar jurisdiction of controversies between the citizens of other States and the citizens of the State in which the court is held, and is appointed under the Constitution, in order to insure a fair and impartial administration of justice between the citizens of different States, upon questions which would otherwise fall under the cognizance of the State courts. Now, when we consider the highly important functions which this judge has to discharge, we see at once the immense importance of having gentlemen of the character and attainments described by the Senator from South Carolina.

But that is not all. I suppose that the judges of the supreme court of the State of New Hampshire preside in the circuit courts. If one of them commits an error, it is easy to bring that error for reexamination before the supreme court of New Hampshire. It involves but little expense, and is done with ease and facility, and I believe it is not uncommon that cases involving small sums are reexamined in the supreme court of that State. But how stands it with regard to this judge? He holds—or he may hold, and I suppose he does hold, one term of the circuit court every year, without the assistance of a judge of the supreme court. In all civil cases, his judgment is absolutely conclusive, unless the matter in controversy amounts to the sum of $2,000 exclusive of costs; so that you have a single judge who may rule important controversies, not only involving great principles, but also large amounts of money without any means being provided for a reexamination of his adjudications. And when you can examine them, we all know that it is a matter involving great expense, and much delay to bring a writ of error, and have a reexamination of the case in the Supreme Court of the United States. But that does not present the whole difficulty. When that judge sits on the criminal side of his court, there is no appeal, there is no writ of error. If he sits alone he decides for good or evil every question—however grave—even though it may affect the personal liberty, or life of the party charged before him. Now, the question arises, what grade of capacity and intellect do we require in a man to fill such a station? I think with the honorable Senator from South Carolina, that the United States should give such a compensation as will enable them to select men from the very best who can be found; and that compensation, I think, in this case is clearly indicated as being the compensation paid to the chief justice of the supreme court of that State. The men who are to exercise this large jurisdiction over property to vast amounts, especially where no reexamination can take place, and even where in the largest amounts a reexamination is accompanied with large expense, and who decides on the liberty, or the life of the person who may be charged before him without any writ of error or of appeal, ought to be entitled to a compensation equal to that of the chief justice of the supreme court of a State.

Mr. ATCHISON. I was misunderstood, Mr. President, by the Senator from South Carolina. At all events, I did not intend to say what the Senator has imputed to me to have said. I did not intend to say that when a vacancy occurred in a judgeship a crowd of incompetent persons applied for it; I thought I stated distinctly enough that a crowd of the most competent men the State could present were applicants for it.

Mr. RHETT. It is not so in South Carolina. Mr. ATCHISON. That is what I intended to say, Mr. President. It is true so far as my experience extends. Why do men accept office? Why do they seek office? It must be for one of two causes: it must either be because of the profit attached to the office, or the honor that the station confers. Now, I am not one of those who readily believe in the universality of patriotism, though I have great confidence in it, and know that men possess it; but I cannot readily embrace the opinion that the candidate for the office of constable or sheriff, seeks that office on account of the honor it confers on him. I think it is on account of the profit attached to such offices that they are sought after. It never entered my mind that a candidate would present himself, and would resort to all the usual means to obtain such an office as a matter of pure patriotism—from a desire to serve the people in his beat or township. I think the Senator from South Carolina, as well as the Senators from New Hampshire and North Carolina, will concur in this proposition.

Now, the office of President of the United States—the patronage, the power, the station that office gives; or, perhaps, of a Senator of the United States, or of a member of the House of Representatives—many might and do seek those offices for the station or power attached to them, or from the fame which they imagine they will acquire. But there are hundreds—aye, there are thousands of persons who have filled offices under this Government, that never would have had their names enrolled as officers under it, but for the compensation connected with their official position; for it is impossible that they could do so. A poor man cannot discharge the duties of the office of the President of the United States, or of a Senator, or of a member of the House of Representatives, without compensation; but there are many persons possessing property who have acquired it, or who have inherited it, who, for the honor, the station, or the prospect of fame, would accept any of these offices without compensation. And, sir, it may be that gentlemen who have a peculiar kind of taste might accept the office of a district judge of the United States, or even a place on the bench of the Supreme Court, if the salary were reduced. I believe there are such men; but they are exceptions to the general rule; they are eccentric men.

Now, in regard to this increase of salary of the district judge of New Hampshire, I would ask, if it were increased even to $5,000 a year, whether it would add anything to his capacity, or his dignity, or learning, or to that of any other judge holding office in the United States court? I will readily admit that you can obtain a gentleman of a higher grade of talent, of more learning, and of as much integrity, on his retirement, if the salary should be increased; but, sir, it is a solemn truth, and is remarked by all connected with the Federal or State Governments, throughout the length and breadth of the land, that a judge seldom resigns. Now, sir, I would ask the Senator from South Carolina, if the gentlemen who have discharged the duties of district judges of courts of the United States, under the existing rate of salary, have not generally been men of dignity, learning, and integrity?—whether that is not his experience? I know that it is the case with us in Missouri. Our district judge is considered one of the best lawyers in the State, and was so at the time of his appointment. He is a man of integrity and learning, and I believe that his salary, with some additional duties that he has to discharge, as commissioner for the settlement of private land claims, amounts to but $1,500 a year.

Mr. President, I think the argument of the Senator from Arkansas yesterday deserves some attention; and it has been reaffirmed by the Senator from South Carolina to-day. It is: that the young men of the country, all who have a solitary spark of ambition in their bosoms, are seeking office under the Federal Government; and we contend (that Senator and myself, together with others, contend) that the legislative branches of the Government are every day usurping the powers that do not belong to them, and I have heard it whispered that the Supreme Court of the United States has done the same thing; that by a recent decision of that court, it has given admiralty jurisdiction to all the judges residing on the waters of the Mississippi. I have not seen the decisions. I do not keep up with the decisions of the Supreme Court; but so I understand it.

Mr. CHASE. It is so in the case of those residing upon any navigable waters.

Mr. ARCHISON. And it is said, sir, that this will greatly increase the business of the judges of the district courts of the United States. I have never heard a murmur myself in relation to this matter prior to these decisions. The judges of the State courts, in suits between citizens of different States of the Union, have decided in nineteen cases out of twenty of all cases brought in these States. I know that that is the case in the State of Missouri. There are very few suits brought by citizens of other States in the district courts in the eastern and central parts of our State; but where a debt is to be collected or a matter litigated by parties from other States, it is almost uniformly decided by the judges of the State courts, where they have competent jurisdiction; and there are few cases where they have not. I concur with the views taken by the Senators from South Carolina and North Carolina, that a very fair criterion as to the pay the district judge should receive, is the pay of the judge performing similar duties in a State. But, sir, even that will not operate equally. In some of the States—in Louisiana, for instance—I am told that the judges of the supreme court receive from four to five, or even six thousand dollars. Now, what does the judge of the district court receive? Twenty-five hundred dollars is the salary of the district judge in Louisiana. Well, I doubt not that in some of the States of this Union the salary of the State judges falls far below that of the district judge. Then that rule would not operate equally. I am willing to pay a judge what his services are worth; but I think the better policy would be, if the business is of such an extent, as it is said to be in this case, as to make it necessary to increase the salary on that account, to divide the State into two districts, and give the State another judge, because when overburdened, he cannot discharge the duties of a judge well. An increase of salary will not enable him to do more than he can do. If that be the case in New Hampshire, and the Senator from New Hampshire will introduce a bill providing for another judge, I will vote for it.

Mr. DAVIS. I will tell the Senator from Missouri how his plan works. We in Massachusetts have had some little experience in this matter. We have various courts there—a supreme court, and a court of common pleas. The court of common pleas is a very respectable court, and we pay the judges, I think, two thousand dollars a year; and I believe that within the last ten years that court has changed most of its members some two or three times, although the judge has a salary of two thousand dollars. The reason is probably this: Gentlemen of some learning and some reputation are esteemed to be necessary to sit upon the bench in that court; and, perhaps influenced by the considerations suggested by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. ARCHISON,] they are induced to accept an appointment of that description upon that bench, and they go on there, as the gentleman suggested, flattered with the honor and dignity of the station. But they very soon find that the salary which is paid does not compensate them—does not give them the support which their necessities demand, and they resign. The consequence has been, I believe, that the members upon the bench of that court have been for some years constantly passing through a revolution. In other words, you cannot command that high grade of learning and talent which it is necessary to have to discharge the duties of these offices, and which it is thought desirable to obtain; and you must descend until you can get a gentleman whose services are worth no more than two thousand dollars. That is the result to which you are brought in regard to the appointments in the district courts of the United States.

We have always, I believe, in Massachusetts, obtained good services at the sum which has been paid; men of high character; men of suitable learning; men in all respects qualified for the stations which they have occupied. But it must be borne in mind, that within the last fifteen or twenty years there has been a very great increase of the business, a great increase of admiralty business, occupying a very large portion of the time of the judge. And then there is another consideration, which is more important, to be considered in connection with this. During that time there has been a great increase, necessarily, of the expenses in supporting a family; and the gentleman who now holds that station under the same pay which was granted ten or fifteen years ago, is not put upon the same footing of equality with a gentleman who then held it, as the expenses are necessarily greater.

That is the condition of things in Massachusetts; and we have long since learned that, although we command the services of gentlemen of talent at the bar, yet we cannot by any means, obtain in our higher courts, the services of the eminent men which we would be glad to secure. I do not speak without some knowledge upon this subject. I have had the means of knowing that gentlemen of high character, and in large professional practice, go upon the bench of the highest courts in Massachusetts.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BRADBURY] says there are some elements to be taken into consideration, in determining the question as to the amount of compensation to be paid. I agree to that, but, certainly, with some pretty important qualifications. I know very well that in the district of New Hampshire, there is nothing like the service performed that is performed in some of the neighboring districts; but at the same time, it is quite apparent that if there be but a few cases there to be settled, you should have a man with the requisite learning, with the requisite talent, and suitable dignity of character, and as well qualified to decide these few cases, as if he had many. The parties who are engaged in those suits, though their number be not great, are as much interested in the question, and have as good a right to have a suitable man upon the bench, as if their number were legion.

There is another consideration which was adverted to by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] the operation of which has fallen, to some extent, under my observation. I have seen its effect; and that is where there is an inequality created between the character of a court of the United States and a court of a State. The honorable member from South Carolina [Mr. RHETT] says that some cases of this description have fallen under his observation. There was a period when it was notorious that in any State of this Union there was a constant struggle all the time to get into a court of the United States. Parties moved out of one State to another, for the purpose of gaining the requisite residence to enable them to come into a court of the United States. Well, sir, that is the converse of the statement made by the honorable Senator from South Carolina, and it only proves to you that whichever way you go, if you create, in any way, any considerable inequality between the State court and that of the United States, this principle immediately operates, and the parties will go into the better court, where justice is best administered—where they are convinced that the settled rules of law most prevail. That is the result of it.

Then, it is not a safe rule to say, that because the business is small, the parties shall have small compensation; or, because the business is great, that the pay shall be extended in proportion. There are considerations which go to make up the character of a judge, and the elements which constitute his right to a compensation. It is quite evident that since these rates of compensation were established, the expenditures in the larger towns have increased, and in many of them the business has increased; and it seems to me that these constitute a pretty fair claim for an increase of compensation. I hope this bill will pass, and that the other similar cases will be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. BORLAND. So far as my own position is concerned, in opposition to this bill, I will say nothing upon the principle I conceive it involves, in addition to what I said yesterday. I would remark, however, that the extended and elaborate arguments of the Senators who have advocated the bill, to-day, have not, in my opinion, been directed to the question before us for decision. The opponents of the bill have not, for a moment, controverted the position assumed by its friends that a high order of talents, learning, and integrity, is indispensable in a judge. So far from denying that, we all admit it as readily, and insist upon it as earnestly, as they do. It is not a point in dispute. And yet, all their arguments have been directed to that point—a point not in controversy—a point conceded—a point upon which we are all agreed. The real question presented by the bill is, whether we shall raise the salary of a Federal judge above that of the State judges in the same State—whether we shall fix a higher standard of value for the services of Federal officers than the State government has fixed for its own officers, of the same class, and of the same character and grade of qualification, in the same State, and where the duties both have to be performed? This, sir, is the question; and its answer must be the same, upon principle, whether the actual salary be high or low, and whether the standard of qualification be high or low; for, in respect to qualification, the standard must be the same for the Federal, as for the State judge.

The honorable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] instituted a comparison between the duties performed by the federal and the State judges, respectively, and assumed what he stated to be the result as the measure of the different compensation proper to be paid to the one and to the other; and as the standard, also, for determining the higher qualification to be required of the one than the other. He assumed that the Federal judge should have higher qualifications, because he had to determine questions of greater importance, and, in many instances, in the last resort; and that, even in cases where appeals did lie from his decisions, the expenses, and trouble, and delay, in carrying them to a higher court, were so great as to present an almost insuperable barrier to an appeal. But, sir, the honorable Senator seemed to forget that the necessary conditions of his comparison (or, rather, what he made quite a contrast) were not present in this case. The classes of judges between which he undertook to make this comparison, or, rather, to show a superiority of the one over the other, do not materially differ from each other in the several particulars of jurisdiction and duties alluded to by him. The State judge in this case, of whom he institutes a comparison with the Federal judge, is one of the judges of the supreme court of the State—the highest court known to the State laws—the court of the last resort, from whose decisions, within a wider and higher range of jurisdiction, whether of civil or criminal cases, there is no appeal. And of the judges of this court, he must recollect the Senator from New Hampshire told us, yesterday, the salary of the chief justice was but $1,400, and that of his associates was but $1,200 each per annum. In my own State, the salary of the chief and associate justices of the supreme court is $1,500 each, while the circuit judge receives but $1,200. The same difference exists, in other States, between the different classes of State judges; and if the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] had instituted his comparison between the duties and jurisdiction of the Federal judge, especially as a judge in the last resort, and those of the inferior judge of the State court, there might have been some plausibility in it as an argument in support of the position he has assumed, though of little force when tested by the true merits of the question. But it utterly fails when undertaken in a case where the judges are at least equal in dignity, duties, and jurisdiction, or if there be any superiority on either side, it is obviously with the State judge.

I would here make an inquiry of the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE.] How long has this gentleman held the office of United States district judge in the State of New Hampshire?

Mr. HALE. I believe he was appointed by General Jackson.

Mr. BORLAND. He was appointed in the time of General Jackson?

Mr. HALE. I believe so.

Mr. BORLAND. Then he has held office for a long time, and we have never heard of any application for an increase of pay before this.

Mr. HALE. You are mistaken.

Mr. BORLAND. The Senator from New Hampshire says I am mistaken; but I have never heard of any such application here before; although he has held the office since the year 1832. We may assume twenty years, then, he has held this office; and so far as we have evidence, he has, until now, been satisfied with the present salary. Now, sir, are his qualifications any better than they have been heretofore? Are his expenses any greater? or are his duties more onerous? I presume not. At any rate, I have no evidence that they are. And if they be not, why should we increase his salary?

I have thus touched incidentally on these few points. The other and more material ones were so thoroughly discussed yesterday, and have been to-day, by other Senators, that I shall trouble the Senate no more in regard to them.

Mr. BRADBURY. A remark made by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS] renders it necessary that I should say a word, lest I should be misunderstood. I objected to the principle laid down by the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. RHETT,] that the compensation of the highest State judge should be the rule, the inexorable rule.

Mr. RHETT. I beg to say that I did not say the inexorable rule. I said the principle. I had no such intention in my mind, as that of applying the principle as an inexorable rule. I understand that in Rhode Island the judge gets $500.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to know how the Senator from South Carolina understood that.

The PRESIDENT. There must be no interruption. The Senator from Maine is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BRADBURY. I was not calling in question the remarks of the Senator from South Carolina, but the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS] alluded to my remarks, and the course of argument adopted by the Senator from South Carolina tended to the same purpose. I desire to set myself right. I stated that the salary of the highest State judge should be one of the elements. I stated that there were other elements to be considered; and the principle which I would adopt is this: having reference to that salary, I would give such a compensation as should command adequate talents. Now, I have a case in my recollection. I understand that the State judges in Florida receive $2,000, and that is found to be an inadequate salary, to command the talents and services of an adequate judge in the southern district, who has to pass annually on property exceeding a million, and sometimes a million and a half of dollars. There are other cases in which the salaries paid to the State judges would be inadequate to procure the requisite talent and services of a United States judge. On the other hand, the compensation paid to a State judge is in some instances greater than would be an adequate compensation for the services to be performed by a United States judge; and hence, the whole scope of my remarks was, that this should be one of the elements in forming an opinion; but not that it should constitute the rule.

Mr. BADGER. I beg to say to the Senator from Maine, as he has referred to a remark which I made, that I did not understand the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. RHETT,] as laying down any such rule as he has stated, as being necessary to govern the decision of the question with regard to the salary of district judges. I understood him to furnish a general criterion by which we might determine what would be proper to command the services of a man of sufficient ability and talent to occupy the position of a judge in the United States court. I will say further, that I do not agree with the honorable Senator from Maine, that the salary of a judge is to be reduced because the business which he may be called to discharge is not great or pressing.

Mr. BRADBURY. The Senator is mistaken. I said no such thing.

Mr. BADGER. You call upon a gentleman of the bar to quit his profession in order to take a seat on the bench, and that puts him out of business in his former profession. I think, therefore, that rule should not govern the rate of compensation, or but in a subordinate degree, at least; because, if you have a court in which there are but few cases to be tried, when you select a gentleman to fill that place, you still make him dependent upon his salary, although he is withdrawn from his profession altogether. Of course his salary should be an adequate one. It would be a poor system to act upon, where there is but little business in the courts of the United States to have such small salaries, and consequently be obliged to fill these courts with incompetent men; because by-and-by, when business increases, or when questions arise, involving large amounts of property, or questions involving liberty or life, you will have men presiding in these courts whom every one would say were unfit to fill these places, and incompetent for the duties of the station. There may be instances in which there is such an immense accumulation of business, that a salary may be required beyond what other cases would require. But the salary should always be sufficient to insure the services of men competent to adjudicate on all questions that may arise.

Mr. BRADBURY. The Senator from North Carolina seems again to misapprehend me. I stated distinctly, that the amount of business was one of the elements. I said nothing about reducing salaries. He drew the conclusion that that was what I said, and then went on to argue from those premises. The proposition which I made was a general one; and now let me put a case. A judge may be constantly employed, like the judge of the district of Massachusetts, or the southern district of New York, who has an immense accumulation of business, almost sufficient to break down a herculean frame. I ask, if that is not one of the elements? That is the position I laid down; yet the honorable gentleman objects to it, and takes exceptions to it, as if I had confined it to that alone.

Mr. CHASE. The question now before the Senate is, whether the district judge for New Hampshire shall receive a salary equal to that of the associate judges of that State? I have taken pains to ascertain from the Senator from New Hampshire, the precise amount of that salary. It is $1,200. In the course of some remarks of that Senator yesterday, he stated that there was a sum paid to the associate judges, in addition to this, for the reporting of their decisions. If this sum were paid to them, I should feel inclined to add that amount; but, on inquiry of the Senator, I ascertained that that sum is not now paid to the associate judges of the superior court of New Hampshire. If, then, we give this judge a salary of $1,200, we give him precisely that which an associate judge of the highest court in the State receives. That, it seems to me, is the true criterion. The district judges are the associate judges of the courts of the United States. The circuit judge sits as presiding judge; and the district judge sits as an associate judge. If they receive the same salary as the associate judges of the highest court in the State, it seems to me it ought to be enough.

Mr. CLARKE. I listened to the honorable Senator from South Carolina with very great pleasure, and agreed with the sensible remarks which he made on this question. He had something to say, however, about a salary of $500 being paid to the judges of Rhode Island. Will the Senator have the goodness to tell me where he gets his information?

Mr. RHETT. I saw the statement in a newspaper. It gave an account of the salaries paid to the different officers of the States; and for Rhode Island, the Governor was put down at $200, and the judges at $500.

Mr. CLARKE. Now, I have read in the newspapers of this country, and I have believed some of them, that there were traitors to be found in various sections of the country; but I have never undertaken to allege anything of that sort, because it is found in the newspapers. There are a great many things published in the newspapers that are not true. A word, now, in regard to the State of Rhode Island. There are four judges of the supreme court of that State. They also perform circuit duties. The chief justice of the supreme court of the State gets $1,600 a year, and the associate judges have $1,200, and there are some certain fees attached to the office that bring them up to $1,400. It is totally and entirely a mistake to suppose that the State of Rhode Island pays her Governor but $200, and her judges but $500. Her judges receive the compensation I have named. The Lieutenant Governor of the State, who has very little to do, has $500. It will, therefore, be perceived that the Governor must have more. I cannot conceive why the State of Rhode Island should have been brought into this debate by the Senator from South Carolina, when he was in such an entire error as regards the salaries paid the judges there. I state it now, that the honorable Senator may know that he is in error.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The result of this discussion has been to convince me that I ought to vote for the salary of $1,400; which is what the highest judge in the State of New Hampshire receives. I therefore renew the motion to insert

$1,400, instead of $1,600; and I ask that the question may be first taken on that.

The PRESIDENT. The proposition was made by the Senator from Ohio, to strike out $1,600, and insert $1,200; the Senator from Kentucky suggests $1,400. If there were a blank to be filled, the question would be first taken on the longest time, or the greatest amount; but as there is no blank, the question must first be taken on the proposition of the Senator from Ohio, which was made before that of the Senator from Kentucky. If that be rejected, the question will come up on the proposition of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BADGER. I understand the Chair to say that the question must first be taken on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. ATCHISON. I think the rule is the other way. I think the question must first be taken on the largest amount.

The PRESIDENT. It would be so, if there was a blank to be filled.

Mr. ATCHISON. I see a reason for it at all events, whether such is the rule or not. Suppose the Senate should decide to amend the bill by inserting $1,200.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make any question of order?

Mr. ATCHISON. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT. If there were a blank to be filled, the question would be first upon the largest amount and longest time; but when a motion is made to strike out and insert, the question must be taken on it before any other motion be put except a privileged one.

Mr. ADAMS. Is a motion to strike out and insert divisible? If so, I should like to have the question first taken on the motion to strike out. If so, we can settle the question at once. I think a salary of $1,600 is little enough for a judge.

The PRESIDENT. According to the rules of the Senate, a motion to strike out and insert is not divisible.

Mr. BORLAND. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to strike out $1,600 and insert $1,200.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 28; as follow:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Borland, Brooke, Chase, Clemens, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Felch, Jones of Tennessee, King, Rhett, Rusk, Sebastian, and Wade—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Bell, Bradbury, Brodhead, Clarke, Davis, Dodge of Wisconsin, Downs, Fish, Foot, Gwin, Hale, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Miller, Morton, Norris, Pratt, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, and Walker—28.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I now move to strike out $1,600 and insert $1,400.

Mr. HALE. As a friend of the bill, I wish to state that I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BORLAND. I believe the question now is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RUSK. Before the vote is taken I should like to ask the honorable Senator from New Hampshire if he knows the number of days that this gentleman is employed, and the average number of cases he has to hear. It seems to me that he has been very still for twenty years with a salary of $1,000.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to occupy the time of the Senate, after it has taken up so much already on this bill. This judge is obliged to hold four terms of the district court and two terms of the circuit court annually in ordinary times. How many days he is occupied it is impossible for me to say. It is a very great mistake to suppose that he or his friends have always been satisfied with his compensation. The members of the bar of both political parties have repeatedly memorialized Congress representing the inadequacy of the salary, and requesting that it might be raised. I would state further to the honorable Senator, that in the State of New Hampshire there is a seaport, Portsmouth, where there is a fort and navy-yard of the United States, and there is great need for a district judge residing there. The district judge has never been able to reside within the vicinity of those establishments of the General Government, owing to the inadequacy of his salary. Representations have constantly been made requesting an increase of his compensation to enable him to reside in the vicinity of these establishments, so as to transact business with facility.

Mr. BORLAND. I desire to be understood in the vote which I propose to give. I shall vote against the bill, not because I undertake to say that the amount proposed to be given to this gentleman is too much, but upon the principle I assumed yesterday for the governing of my vote here—that I will never give a vote which will place a judge of the Federal Government of the same grade, requiring the same amount and the same character of duties, upon a better footing, give him a higher salary, and thereby recognize in him a higher grade of qualifications, and a higher degree of respectability, than the judges of the State courts. This bill as it now stands proposes to give this judge $200 more than the associate judges of the supreme court of New Hampshire receive. It puts him on a footing with the chief justice of the State. I am willing to put him on a footing with the associate justices, but I am not willing to put him upon the same footing that the State of New Hampshire places the highest judicial officer of the State.

Mr. RUSK. I shall vote for this bill as it is. If we give the individual a salary to hold this office, it seems to me that $1,400 is little enough, whether he has business or not. But I vote reluctantly for the bill, not on the ground that I think this is too high a salary, but because of the partial operation of the judicial system of the United States. If we increase the salary of the judge of one district, we shall have the judges of other districts electioneering for an increase of salary. There are a great many district judges whose offices are merely sinecures. There are others who have three times as much business as they can do, and suitors are delayed from year to year, because the judges cannot get through with the business. I doubt whether there is a civilized country on the face of the globe where there is such a partial system as the judicial system of the United States. We have one judge at $1,000; another at $2,500; another at $4,000. There are a dozen bills now before the Senate for the increase of the salaries of judges in different sections of the Union. One section of the Union has the benefit of circuit courts, while another section has not. It seems to me that patching up the system from year to year makes it worse. Hence, though I shall vote for this bill, I shall do so with great reluctance.

Mr. BORLAND. In order to show that I am not actuated by any feeling of hostility to this particular judge, I wish simply to say that I have pursued a similar course in reference to the United States district judge of my own State. He has applied to me to endeavor to get him an increase of salary, but I have declined to do so, and I have given him as a reason, that which I have stated here for my opposition to this bill, namely, that I will not for an increase of the salary of a Federal judge, beyond the salary of the judges of the State courts.

The question being taken, by yeas and nays, upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time resulted—yeas 34, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Bell, Bradbury, Brodhead, Brooke, Clarke, Davis, Dodge of Wisconsin, Downs, Felch, Fish, Foot, Gwin, Hale, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Miller, Morton, Norris, Pratt, Rhett, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Soule, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, Walker—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Borland, Chase, Clemens, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Sebastian, Wade—8.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. BADGER, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 30, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the unfinished business of yesterday, being the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill relating to the discipline in the Navy was rejected.

RESOLUTION FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. PENN, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution from the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, requesting Senators and Representatives from that State to obtain from the General Government permission in favor of the corporation of the town of Baton Rouge to inclose and use as a cemetery a portion of the grounds attached to the United States barracks in that place; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NAVIGATION OF THE OHIO RIVER.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I ask the unanimous consent to introduce a resolution. It was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be and is hereby requested to cause to be communicated to this House the original manuscript copy of the report (now on file in the office of Colonel Long, of the Topographical Engineers) of Captain Thomas C. Cram, on the best mode of improving the navigation of the Ohio river at the falls at Louisville, made 3d February, 1844, with the original maps accompanying the same, or a true copy of the said report from the said original, and certified by Colonel Long to be true.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky, that the Departments are expected to keep the original copies of such documents themselves. It may be better to call for a certified copy of the report.

Mr. MARSHALL. I will state to the gentleman from Alabama, and the House, that the original is now in possession of the topographical engineer, and is in Cincinnati.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not object to the introduction of the resolution.

There was no objection, and the resolution was accordingly introduced, and adopted.

RESOLUTIONS FROM THE STATE OF MAINE.

Mr. FULLER, of Maine, by unanimous consent, presented a preamble and resolutions from the Legislature of the State of Maine, setting forth the abuses alleged to exist in the conveyance of passengers in steam-boats between the Atlantic ports and those of California; and requesting the Senators and Representatives from that State to procure the passage of such laws by Congress as shall be best adapted to prevent these abuses in future; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. BEALE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a report from the select committee who were directed to examine the foundation walls for the contemplated extension of the Capitol. I ask that it may be read for information.

Mr. HOUSTON. Cannot the committees be called, generally, this morning for reports?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, but not otherwise. The Chair has already stated that the regular business before the House is the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill in reference to discipline in the Navy was rejected. That is a privileged question, and if any gentleman insists upon it, committees cannot be called for reports.

Mr. STANLY. I insist that the House proceed to the regular order of business.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a petition from the members of the Legislature of Ohio. I desire to have it laid on the table and printed.

Mr. OLDS. That is not a resolution of the Legislature of Ohio. It is a mere petition signed by the members of that Legislature, and can be presented under the rules as well as any other petition. I object to its introduction.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. Would it be in order to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order.

Mr. CABLE. I make that motion.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE] will waive his motion for the present. I desire the unanimous consent to report, and have immediate action of the House upon, a bill which proposes one single amendment to the present passenger laws.

I will state, that passenger-ships are constantly arriving in this country loaded with many passengers, and there are great violations of the laws passed for preserving the health of the passengers. This is particularly true in relation to emigrant ships.

There is now a bill upon your table which has been there almost from the commencement of the session, reported by the Committee on Commerce, but we have been unable to reach it. In the mean time, the Senate have perfected a bill which answers the same purpose. The whole purport of the bill is, to make the penalty which attaches to the violation of the law attach to the ship, and thus enable the law to be enforced.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. I ask, what is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE] moves that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES. It is not in order for the gentleman from New York [Mr. SEYMOUR] to make a speech upon that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York appealed to the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw his motion, and, by the unanimous consent, was proceeding to give his reasons for the request.

Mr. JONES. I object.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I desire to ask of the Chair whether, if this motion is voted down, the unfinished business of yesterday will not then come up?

The SPEAKER. That is the first business in order.

Mr. STANTON. Then I hope the motion will be voted down.

The question was then taken and agreed to—ayes 74, noes not counted.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HIBBARD in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The business before the committee is House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting to every man who is at the head of a family and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same for the period herein specified; upon which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FULLER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I ask the permission of my friend from Maine [Mr. FULLER] to make a single explanation?

Mr. FULLER. I will yield if the gentleman will not take up much of my time.

Mr. BROWN. Only a moment.

Mr. BROWN, then said that several days ago one of his colleagues (Mr. FREEMAN) asked leave to publish (without delivering) a speech in reply to one which he (Mr. BROWN) had made in this Hall. As the subject was one which did not interest the House, and as he did not desire to occupy an hour of the time of the House, he wished to give notice that, following the example of his colleague, he should publish a rejoinder to the speech referred to, if there was no objection. [Cries of "Agreed," "agreed,"]

[The speech alluded to will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. By the permission of the gentleman from Maine, I desire to offer an amendment to the first section of the bill. I ask that the first section may be read:

It was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That every man or widow who is the head of a family, and a native-born citizen of the United States, or who had become a citizen as required by the naturalization laws of the United States prior to the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, who is not the owner of any land, nor worth the sum of $500, and who has not disposed of his or her land for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the provisions of this act, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be entitled to enter, free of cost, one quarter section of vacant and unappropriated public lands, or a quantity equal thereto, to be located in a body, in conformity with the legal subdivisions of the public lands, and after the same shall have been surveyed.

Mr. JOHNSON. If I can get the ear of the House, I desire to offer an amendment to that section. It will be perceived that in that section there is a restriction which requires the individual entering upon the public domain, under the provisions of this bill, shall be worth a sum not exceeding $500. Now, I want to offer a section in lieu of that section, which permits a man to enter on the land without regard to property qualification, without any qualification save that he shall occupy the same for five years. I know there is a contrary of opinion in this House upon this point; and I want simply to test the two provisions, and have the judgment of the House upon them. I offer the following in lieu of the first section of the bill:

That any person who is the head of a family, and a native-born citizen of the United States, or any person who is the head of a family, and had become a citizen prior to the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be entitled to enter, free of cost, one quarter section of vacant and unappropriated public lands, or a quantity equal thereto, to be located in a body, in conformity with the legal subdivisions of the public lands, and after the same shall have been surveyed.

Mr. FULLER, of Maine, then proceeded to urge some objections to the principles contained in the bill, remarking that he regarded it as illegal, unjust, and partial in its provisions, and, if he were before a tribunal differently constituted, he would premise his remarks by a motion to dismiss this bill. This right of partition, for so he must term it, was introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON,] and reported back from the Committee on Agriculture with sundry amendments. He denied the title of these partitioners, either in law or equity, and the right of this Government to make partitions. He denied that this Government held the public domain by such a tenure as was susceptible of such partition as was here asked for. He asked by what right, by what title-deed, a certain specified class of persons, aliens, foreigners, or American citizens of limited age, of particular condition in domestic and pecuniary affairs, should come here and ask this Government gratuitously to assign and set out to them in severalty, by metes and bounds, any portion of the public domain, the common property of the people of the United States, to the exclusion of a much greater portion, having equal rights and equal privileges? Nay, more, a class of persons such as might casually happen to come within the provisions of this bill on the first day of January, 1852, and for the remaining three hundred and sixty-four days of the current year, there would be falling under each day a class of persons equally entitled to the beneficence of this Government.

If there was any subject of legislation on which the American people were more tenacious than another, it was against any principle of legislation which made an invidious distinction in the bestowment of governmental favors, pensions, and patronage. The axiom was true, and applicable to American citizens, that the blessings of Government, like the dews of heaven, should fall equally upon all.

He was opposed to the thousand and one schemes now pending before Congress, by which to rid the General Government, in the shortest possible time, of the public domain; and held that the old land system, which had been in force for thirty years past, was the best system which the wit and wisdom of man had yet devised.

He then proceeded to sustain the following propositions: First, that the public lands should be disposed of for the common use and benefit of all the people of the United States, as one people; second, that each State should participate in the common benefits, in proportion to the expenses of the Government which they are required to bear; and, third, that the public lands shall not be disposed of for any other use and purpose whatever.

Mr. CHURCHWELL, after briefly replying to the gentleman who preceded him in debate, said he had looked at the different plans to dispose of the public lands, in both branches of Congress, and none struck him with so much force and favor as that of his colleague, [Mr. A. JOHNSON.] It is calculated to advance the interests of the Government, of individuals, and of society, and elevate the moral nature of man. It is a liberal and benevolent system. He might be told that all will not need its provisions, and therefore it has an unequal operation. But is it not apparent to all that the wheel of fortune is constantly turning? A man to-day may be in sunshine, to-morrow in the shade. But this is a great scheme for the benefit of humanity throughout the world. To improve the moral nature and condition of man, give him a homestead, better his estate, and give him the independence of a landed proprietor, that he may look up with all the proud feeling of a man. He can cast his vote for whom he will. You do away, to a great extent, with the corrupting moneyed influences of the country. You put him on an equality with his more favored fellow-citizens; you better his condition in every sense of the word. And not only this, but you give him the means of supporting his family, and educating his children, and preparing them for all the ordinary duties of life. And, in conclusion, the honorable gentleman further showed the advantages which would result from the passage of this bill, in a commercial as well as defensive point of view.

Mr. GROW denied the position that the Government had any right to make the public lands a source of revenue, and argued to prove that every citizen had as natural a right to the soil, as he had to air and sunlight. Each person had a right to so much of the earth's surface as was necessary to his support. He contended that, as a question of revenue, it became important to the Government to make this donation of land, and that it would contribute to the increase of national as well as domestic wealth, to the defense of the country, and to commerce. He considered it the duty of Congress to hold out a reasonable inducement for the settlement of the public lands. Every consideration of justice and humanity demanded that they should be granted in limited quantities to actual settlers, and that man should have restored to him his natural right to the soil.

Mr. SKELTON gave the reasons which induced him to support the bill under consideration. He believed that the true principle of this Government is to afford the largest exercise of liberty consistent with the public safety. This distinguishes us from the Governments of other countries, where citizenship is swallowed up in nationality. On the basis of the largest constitutional freedom peculiarly rests the prosperity of our country; and this is directly opposite to socialism and aggrarianism, which he utterly repudiated. The time has arrived when some disposition of the public domain ought to be made to benefit our citizens generally, in view of the fact that there are projects of railroad companies pending, covering about thirty millions of acres of land. And a reason why he would vote for this bill was, that it would not only confer a positive good, but will prevent the passage of other schemes, hurtful in themselves. He expressed his surprise that some of his Democratic friends should advocate bills to build up such institutions. He then argued that the public lands are in the possession of the General Government, to be disposed of for the public benefit, and contended that this bill secures this desirable end.

[These several speeches will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. WILLIAMS obtained the floor, but yielded it to

Mr. FOWLER, who moved that the committee rise; which motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the homestead bill, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. BARRERE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled "An act to authorize the issuing of a register to the brig America;" and "An act to authorize the issuing of a register to the ship Kossuth;" which received the signature of the Speaker.

On motion by Mr. HOWARD, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the petition and papers of George W. McCeren from the files of the House, for the purpose of reference to the Secretary of War.

Mr. ORR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to have the bill for the punishment of misdemeanors in the Navy, which was under consideration on yesterday, printed.

There was no objection, and the bill for establishing discipline in the Navy was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to have the substitute proposed by my colleague to the bill under consideration in the Committee of the Whole upon the state of the Union to-day printed.

There was no objection, and the substitute was ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. FLORENCE, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Elizabeth McDougal be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. CLARK. I move the usual resolution, that debate upon the question now the special order in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be terminated within two hours after its consideration shall be again resumed. Pending which,

On motion by Mr. CLEVELAND, the House then adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 31, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. MORTON presented a memorial of citizens of Hillsborough county, Florida, remonstrating against the further extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, the memorial of Henry Johnson, asking the appointment of a committee to examine a machine invented by him for taking the yeas and nays; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. COOPER presented a petition of forty stone-masons, lately employed on the extension of the Capitol, praying to be allowed their daily wages for the time they have lost in waiting for an appropriation for the continuation of the work; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings.

Mr. FOOT presented a petition of citizens of Pittsfield, Vermont, praying that the public lands may be granted in limited quantities to actual settlers; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAWSON presented two petitions of citizens of De Kalb county, and of Hancock county, Georgia, remonstrating against the extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which were referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, a letter from P. K. Dickinson & Co., of the State of North Carolina, remonstrating against an extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, the petition of John James Flournoy, of Georgia, praying that the weight of single letters may not be restricted to half an ounce; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. DAWSON. I am also requested to present a petition from the same individual, remonstrating against the admission of Utah as a State into the Union, alleging that the Mormon religion, especially that principle recognizing polygamy, is not republican equality; and that the Constitution, in authorizing the admission of a State, demands that its constitution should in its form be republican. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

It was so referred.

Mr. PRATT presented the petition of Lucy Tate, widow of an officer in the revolutionary war, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of Dinah Mount, widow of a soldier in the revolutionary war, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the petition of Francis Dainese, United States Consul at Constantinople, praying to be reimbursed an amount expended for the relief of Louis Kossuth, and other refugees, in that city, during the years 1849, 1850, and 1851; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SEWARD. I present a petition of J. C. Phillips and others, citizens of New Jersey, protesting against the armed intervention of Russia in the contest between Hungary and Austria, and requesting Congress to express their reprobation of that violation of the laws of nations. I move that it be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOWNS presented the memorial of James Reed, praying the appointment of a tribunal to review the decisions of the late board of commissioners for settling claims of American citizens against Mexico; which was referred to the select committee appointed on the subject.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of one hundred and eighteen citizens of Boston, Massachusetts, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SEBASTIAN presented a petition of citizens of Arkansas, praying the right of way and a donation of land to the Mississippi, Ouachita, and Red River Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAVIS presented the memorial of Charles Stearns, praying indemnity for expenses incurred in defending a suit brought, as he alleges, without cause, against him and others by the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SPRUANCE presented a petition of citizens of Kent county, Delaware, remonstrating against the further extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. DOUGLAS presented a petition of seamen of the Navy, who have served both at sea and on land during the Mexican war, representing that they have shared the dangers and privations of the Army, without sharing the benefits bestowed upon it, and praying some emolument; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SEBASTIAN presented the petition of James Jones, praying permission to change the entry of a certain quarter section of land; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President, I have a memorial upon a very interesting and important subject from G. & J. H. Shoenberger & Co., of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and of Henry King & Alonzo Hitchcock, of St. Louis, Missouri. They represent that they have acquired the art or process of manufacturing the article known as Russia sheet iron. By the patent laws they cannot obtain a patent for it, because they use the same process which is used in manufacturing it in Russia. They ask that an act of Congress may be passed to grant to them, for a limited time, the exclusive right of manufacturing and vending this article, so that they may bring it into fair competition with Russia sheet iron. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BORLAND, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill allowing exchanges of, and granting additional school lands in the several States which contain public lands, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill to release from reservation, and restore to the mass of public lands, certain lands in the State of Arkansas, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorials of A. W. Paul and others, and of A. Anderson and others, praying the construction of roads from the Missouri river, and from Lake Michigan to the Pacific, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that they be referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals; which was agreed to.

Mr. GEYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Orris Crosby, praying an increase of pension; and the petition of the legal representatives of Lemuel P. Montgomery, praying a pension to which he was entitled, presented adverse reports thereon; which were ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the documents in support of the claim of Agatha O'Brien, widow of the late Major J. P. J. O'Brien, United States Army, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the memorial of the merchants of San Antonio, Texas, praying that that place may be made a port of entry, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

SETTLERS ON MEMONONEE PURCHASE.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred a petition of citizens of Wisconsin, reported a bill to grant to certain settlers on the Menomonee purchase, north of Fox river, in the State of Wisconsin, the right of preëmption; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. This case is a very urgent one. This bill met the unanimous sanction of the Committee on Public Lands, and I ask the Senate to do me the favor of allowing the bill to be read a second time now, so that it may be considered immediately.

There being no objection, the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that every head of a family, widow, or single man over the age of twenty-one years, who, on June 1st, 1852, shall be an actual settler and housekeeper, and who shall have made other improvements on any tract within the body of the lands ceded by the treaty of October 18, 1848, with the Menomonee tribe of Indians, shall be entitled to the same right of preëmption, and upon the same terms and conditions as are prescribed by the act entitled "An act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and to grant preëmption rights," approved September 4, 1841.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to have time to examine this bill, and I will therefore ask that it may lie over.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. When the bill is understood, I am very certain that neither my friend from Virginia, nor any other member of this body, can have any possible objection to it. It was drawn up by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and met the sanction of every member of the Committee on Public Lands when passed upon by them this morning. It simply proposes to extend the right of preëmption to certain settlers on a purchase from the Menomonee Indians, on which they went from a misapprehension. The settlers went on the land before they had fully a legal right to do so, and the bill proposes to relieve them from the effect of their mistake.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow. I hope the Senator from Iowa will consent to give me time to examine it.

Mr. DODGE. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the bill will be printed, so that we may have a chance to see what it is.

The PRESIDENT. It will be printed as a matter of course.

Mr. DAVIS. It cannot be printed if it is acted upon now.

The PRESIDENT. The proposition is to postpone it until to-morrow.

Mr. WALKER. A purchase was made by the United States, of certain lands from the Menomonee Indians. Under the preëmption laws, the settlers on that purchase cannot avail themselves of any preëmption right, for the reason that, under a misunderstanding, they went on the land before the Indian title was deemed to be perfectly extinguished. The treaty provided that the Indian title should be deemed to be extinguished within a year after the time notice should be given to the Indians to quit the lands. A notice was given on the first of June last, and the time will expire on the first of next June; but it appears that the notice has been revoked, and, as I understand it, under the last notification, the time will not expire until a year from the first of June next. Therefore, although these settlers have made improvements, they cannot avail themselves of any benefit from them. There they are. They have made improvements; they and their families live on the lands; and yet they can derive no benefit whatever. The lands have been surveyed; a public sale is soon to take place; and they will not be able to prove their preëptions before the sale does take place. Hence, the land on which they are settled is liable to be bid up and purchased by any person who may be attracted there by the improvements which have been made. It seems to me that, if there ever was a meritorious case, entitling the individuals to a preëmption right, it is this. They have gone there in good faith; they have improved the country in good faith; and they are willing to pay for the land. They have paid as much, and perhaps more, money in the same length of time as any other community, of equal numbers, in the United States. It seems to me that it would be a gratification to the Congress of the United States to pass this law for the benefit of these people.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. FELCH gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill to grant preemption rights to certain settlers on an island called the Grand Chenière, in the south-western land district in Louisiana, and for other purposes.

EXPEDITION TO JAPAN.

Mr. BORLAND. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to communicate to the Senate the object of the naval expedition recently ordered into the Indian ocean, and particularly to the coast of Japan, and copies of any instructions that have been given to the commander of that expedition.

I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider this resolution at this time.

Objection was made.

Mr. BORLAND. I would state as a reason why it should be considered now, that the naval expedition to which it refers, it is said, is about to sail. I saw it stated in a debate in the House of Representatives which occurred day before yesterday, that it was expected that the expedition would sail to-day. The object of the resolution is to ascertain, and I think it is important to the Senate, and to the country, to know the objects of that expedition, for I think it very certain, judging from other circumstances in other branches of the public service, that we shall be called upon to make an appropriation to pay the expenses of the expedition. Therefore, before the expedition leaves the country, I think it is important that it should be known what are its objects, in order that this branch of the Government may pass upon its propriety.

Mr. GWIN objected to the consideration of the resolution; and it lies over under the rule.

IMPORT DUTIES.

Mr. MILLER submitted the following resolution, which was read, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the paramount interests of the country require that the duties prescribed by the act entitled "An act reducing the duty on imports, and for other purposes," passed July 30, 1846, should be altered and modified so that while they may raise sufficient revenue to meet the wants of the Government, they may also give proper encouragement and protection to American labor, enterprise, and capital; and also to guard the Government against known abuses and fraud in the collection of its revenue.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. DOUGLAS, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill, supplemental to the act entitled "An act extending the jurisdiction of the district courts to certain cases upon the lakes and the navigable waters connecting the same," approved February 26, 1848; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHANGE OF NAME.

Mr. DOUGLAS, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill, to change the name of Joseph Lewis Breese, a midshipman in the Navy of the United States; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. BADGER. That is a bill to which I believe there will be no objection. I therefore ask that it may have its second reading now, by unanimous consent, and be put upon its passage.

The bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to change the name of Joseph Lewis Breese to Samuel Livingston Breese, by which name he shall be known and rated on the books of the Navy Department, the Navy Register, and elsewhere, from and after the passage of the act.

Mr. HALE. I want to know whether this individual is a resident of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BADGER. He is not.

Mr. HALE. Then what authority have we to change his name? I do not remember that anything of the sort has ever been done but once, and that was in the case of a foreigner, who came to reside in this District. If this individual were a resident of the District, there could be no objection to it. But it seems to me that if he lives in one of the States, this is a power which expressly belongs to the State Legislature.

Mr. BADGER. I think the honorable Senator is under a mistake. Whatever was the residence of the officer at the time he was appointed into the Navy of the United States, he lost that residence, of course.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no.

Mr. CHASE. Not at all.

Mr. BADGER. Of course he did. The Senator is also mistaken in regard to the exercise of this power. It has been exercised many times since I have been in Congress, in regard to officers in the Navy of the United States, whose names are on the books of the Navy Department; and Congress, in repeated instances, when applied to, has changed their names. There was the case of a man named Photius Kavasales, whose name was changed to Photius Fisk. It was a very singular taste, to be sure, to change his name from Kavasales to Fisk; but he desired it, and it was done—Congress taking the responsibility to grant his request. This case stands on the same foundation.

Mr. GEYER. Does the individual ask this?

Mr. BADGER. He does.

Mr. PRATT. It seems to me that this is a power exclusively to be exercised by the local Legislatures, in reference to citizens living within the limits of their jurisdiction. Certainly the Senator from North Carolina must be wrong, when he says that a citizen of a particular State, by being appointed an officer in the Army or Navy of the United States, loses his citizenship in the State from which he is appointed.

There is another objection to which I ask the attention of the Senate. I do not know that the States have hitherto exercised the power to change the christian name of an individual. It has never been done within my knowledge. That might depend, perhaps, upon the religion of the individual. It depends on the church in which he is christened. I do not know that the State Legislatures have ever exercised the power to change the christian name of an individual. I have known the surname of an individual to be changed by an act of the Legislature of a State; but, within my knowledge, I am not aware of a single instance in which a State Legislature has undertaken to change the christian name of a person. The object of this bill is to change the christian name alone, and not the surname of this individual.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The person whose name is proposed to be changed, is the son of ex-Senator Breese, who is known to us all. The reason why the application is made here, instead of being made to the local Legislature, is simply this: He is a midshipman in the Navy, and if the Illinois Legislature should make the change of the name, still the record here would not be thereby changed. Congress is the only power that can change a name on the records of the Department. We only ask for an act of Congress so as to authorize a change of name on the Naval Register, and have that conformed to the change which the family have made among themselves. It is only proposed to change the record. I understand that the precedents are in favor of this application. Senator Breese, in requesting me to make the application, referred to the case cited by the Senator from North Carolina as a precedent for this bill, and as showing the reason why the application was made to Congress.

Mr. BADGER. When I said that a person appointed to the Army or the Navy of the United States lost his citizenship in the State from which he was appointed, I did not mean to use the term in the sense implying that he lost any of those ordinary rights that belong to the citizens of the State in which he resided; but what I meant was, that he ceased to be under the jurisdiction of the local Legislature. And I believe I used the term residence, and not the term citizenship. When an individual is appointed to the Army or Navy, he is under the control of the United States. He is, and remains, where he is ordered to be. He is no longer the governor and director of his own residence. That is all I meant to convey.

In regard to the distinction in the surname, we know that every man may change his name as he pleases, and acquire a new name by reputation. But this young gentleman being in the service of the United States, his object is to have his name changed by an act of authority, by which the old name may be removed from the Register and the new name inserted. That is all.

Mr. BAYARD. Is there any precedent, of any similar law, on the statute-book?

Mr. BADGER. Yes, sir. There is the case I have mentioned. An individual, by the name of Photius Kavasales, had his name changed, by act of Congress, to Photius Fisk.

Mr. BAYARD. If it were done by act of Congress in that case, then I see no objection to this bill.

Mr. BADGER. It was done by act of Congress in that case; and I believe the individual was a chaplain in the Navy.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am against this bill, as at present advised; and I wish to make a few suggestions why I think it ought not to pass. This bill assumes a power which, it seems to me, cannot necessarily be exercised, in the execution of any of the grants of the Constitution; and it seems to me also, that it is interfering in a matter which belongs exclusively to the States. Although I am not generally charged with being very much of a State-Rights man, I do believe that I am as much a stickler for the proper division of powers between the General Government and the State governments, and the strict construction in reference to the grants of power to the General Government, as anybody else. If we begin to exercise a jurisdiction over a midshipman in the Navy, where is this to end? Will it not embrace all the postmasters in the country, all the army officers, as well as the naval officers, and every employee of the Government, who wants his name to be changed? I am against this, because I see no limit to the exercise of the power, if we once begin to assume it.

I am told that the case which is relied on as a precedent, was that of a citizen resident in the District of Columbia, and one who was not a resident of any of the States.

Now, I deny that an individual, by entering the service of the country, as an officer in the Army, or in the Navy, thereby changes his citizenship. I think that he continues a citizen of the State from which he was appointed, notwithstanding his entering into the service of the United States, as much so as a minister or consul, who is sent abroad, continues a citizen of the State in which he resided at the time of his appointment, although he exercises functions in a foreign country.

For these reasons, although it may seem to be a little matter, I am not willing to introduce a precedent which may thus enlarge the jurisdiction of Congress over a subject not connected, it seems to me, with our constitutional duties, and which may hereafter consume a great deal of time. If we save only time, it will be something gained by refusing to pass this bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I cannot perceive that this bill involves questions of citizenship. Some persons change their names to avail themselves of a bequest; others change their names at pleasure. I take it that every man has the right to go by what name he pleases; but sometimes it is desirable to have a record of the fact of a change of name, that a man may seem to have done it for an honest and proper purpose. All that this individual wants, all he desires, is, to appear consistent with himself, and to have an expression of opinion here which shall be matter of public record and go down to posterity, to show that when he assumed a new name he did it properly. He wishes to be able to identify his person, and go behind that change and show who he was. Now, inasmuch as he is an officer of this Government, it seems to me to be very appropriate, indeed, that this law should pass in order to enable him to maintain his own identity.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The point of my friend's argument is, that we should make records to gratify individual wishes, and thereby to perpetuate a fact in which the country has no manner of interest, merely for the gratification of a single individual. Why, if our time is to be taken up on business of this sort, for every individual of the country, we may have nothing on earth to do but to make these private records. I cannot consent to it for the very reason that my friend urges, that our time is to be taken up in making private records for individuals. If this individual gets his name changed by an act of Assembly, it will not change his commission. If that commission was granted to him under the name of A B, if he can get an act of Assembly changing his name to C D, he will still hold the office under the commission granted to A B. The act does not change his per-

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

FRIDAY, APRIL 2, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 59.

sonal identity. I do not see, then, the necessity of getting any record of the change of his name to enable him to hold his commission. I think we ought not thus to gratify individuals, at the public expense, by setting such an example.

Mr. BAYARD. If I could see any question of a division of authority in this case between the State and the General Governments; or if I could see that this was an authority belonging appropriately to the State government, certainly I should be unwilling to vote for this bill. But I cannot understand the ground of objection on the part of the Senator from Kentucky. I suppose a man has a right to change his name, by his own volition, when he chooses, without any legislative act, either of Congress or his own government; and that his rights are in no way impaired by it. If he is known by another name, a grant to him, or a grant from him, is as available under the new name as under the old. The right to change the name belongs to the party. It is very common for individuals to apply to their State Legislatures to authorize a change of their names; but I presume the basis of that, in all cases, is simply with a view to notoriety—nothing more.

Now, the reason why this bill is asked for here, is on account of the particular position of the party—in the service of the United States. It is to obviate an objection as to identity. The object of all names is, simply, identity. Then, in order to sustain his position in the service—having been appointed under another name than that which he now bears—he wishes to preserve on the record of the Department, the idea of his own individual character which attaches to him, notwithstanding the change of his name. That is the only object of the bill; and I can see no assumption of authority in it. If this party were not in the service of the United States; if he had no relation with any duties to be performed in the service, then I would say the application would be an exceedingly improper one, and that we should have nothing to do with it. But this individual holds a commission in the naval service. His object is to preserve the evidence of his identity on the rolls of the Department, through means of proof of identity. His name is changed, by his own individual act elsewhere. There is no harm in his doing that. He can do it for all practical purposes elsewhere; and he asks you to permit him to do it here, so that no objection may be made, arising from the fact of his having borne another name formerly. That is the view I take of it. Really, I think it is a very innocent transaction, which involves no question between the authority of the States and the General Government. The object of the bill is, simply to furnish recorded evidence of the identity of this party, his name having been changed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HUNTER called for the yeas and nays, on the question of engrossment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and, being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 18—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Borland, Brodhead, Brooke, Clarke, Clemens, Cooper, Davis, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, Hamilton, Miller, Rusk, Smith, Soule, Sprague, Sumner, and Wade—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bradbury, Cass, Chase, Dawson, Felch, Hale, Hunter, King, Morton, Norris, Pratt, Rhett, Sebastian, Seward, Underwood, Walker, and Welles—18.

BILLS PASSED.

The following engrossed bills were read a third time and passed:

An act for the relief of Henry L. Kinney.

On motion by Mr. BORLAND, the title was amended to read as follows:

An act to enable the proper accounting officers to complete a settlement with Captain Henry L. Kinney;

An act increasing the salary of the district judge of the United States for the district of New Hampshire; and

An act for the relief of Seneca G. Simmons.

NEW ORLEANS AND VERA CRUZ MAIL LINE.

Mr. SOULE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senate to deviate somewhat from the regular order of business of the body, to take up a particular bill. You know that I very seldom make an appeal of this sort to my brother Senators; but in this particular instance, I hope they will grant me the favor to postpone the special order of the day, and all other orders, for the purpose of taking up bill No. 191, being a bill to provide for a tri-monthly mail from New Orleans to Vera Cruz, via Tampico, and back, in steam-vessels. I feel assured that it will not consume much of the time of the Senate; and, as I intend to leave here in a few days, to be absent a short time, I shall deem it a special favor, if the Senate will take up that bill, upon which I desire to submit a few remarks, and act upon it. I am very sorry to interrupt the progress of the bill of my friend from California, but I hope he will not oppose my request.

Mr. GWIN. I am exceedingly anxious to have the California navy-yard and dry-dock bill considered and acted upon. It is the special order, and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CLARKE] has the floor upon it. I am very anxious to dispose of it; but I will leave it to the Senator from Rhode Island. If he gives way, I can exercise no control over it.

Mr. CLARKE. I have no choice about it myself. I would merely say, that I shall occupy the time of the Senate but a very short time; and it is a matter of no importance to me whether I proceed to-day or to-morrow. I should prefer to have the subject postponed until to-morrow, on account of the cloudiness of the day, as I find a great difficulty with my eyes—and if you live as long as I have lived, you will experience the same difficulty—in seeing and reading at the desk here on a day which is so cloudy as it is now. On that account, I should prefer to have the subject postponed until to-morrow; still, if it is the pleasure of the Senate to take up the California navy-yard and dry-dock bill, I am willing to proceed with my remarks. I leave it entirely to the discretion of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. I hope there will be no difficulty in gratifying the Senator from Louisiana. I am a member of the committee which reported the California bill, and am anxious to have it finally considered and disposed of; but, under the circumstances, I think it ought to be allowed to give way, to accommodate the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. DAWSON. Did I understand the Senator to say that he desired to leave here in a few days?

Mr. SOULE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWSON. That is sufficient.

Mr. BRADBURY. I feel bound to remind the Senate of the understanding that the bill providing for the ascertainment and satisfaction of French spoiliations would be taken up immediately after concluding the California navy-yard bill. I think it is time that that bill should be considered. If the friends of the measure desire that it should be postponed for every other bill, I can have no more objection than any other individual; but I have felt it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to the subject, because it was left, in some degree, in my charge; and it appears to me that it is time that it should be taken up. If I supposed the bill which the Senator from Louisiana desires to call up, would occupy no considerable time, perhaps we might take it up, and then go on with the bill which I have named; but if it is to involve discussion, I see no reason why those bills which are first in order should not be first considered. I certainly desire to interpose no obstacle to the consideration of the Senator's bill further than duty requires; but if it is taken up, I shall insist upon proceeding, the moment it is disposed of, to the consideration of the French spoliation bill.

Mr. CASS. I desire to make one inquiry, which is simply this: I would like to know what the subject of this bill is; for, if it can be acted upon to-day, I have no objection to taking it up; but if the discussion of it will go on, and occupy day after day, I shall object to it. What is the object of the bill?

The PRESIDENT. It is "to provide for a tri-monthly mail from New Orleans to Vera Cruz, via Tampico, and back, in steam-vessels."

Mr. CASS. Does it provide for a new line of steamers, and for a specific contract, and point out the names of the persons?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state its object from the body of the bill. It enacts that the Postmaster General be authorized and directed "to enter into a contract, for a term of five years, and for a sum not exceeding $100,000 a year, with W. C. Templeton, or, in his default, with such other person as may offer sufficient and satisfactory security for the transportation of the mails of the United States three times a month from New Orleans, via Tampico, to Vera Cruz and back, in steam-vessels, of not less than eight hundred tons burden, of the best form of construction, adapted to war purposes, and to the navigation of the southern waters—the same to be ready in the shortest possible time."

Mr. HALE. I am as much a friend of the French spoliation bill as the honorable Senator from Maine is, or can be. I believe it is the only matter of special legislation in which any considerable portion of my constituents have an interest. But I would rather lose it this session, and let it go over to another, than refuse to accommodate the Senator from Louisiana, who wants to take his bill up and make his speech. I hope the Senate will give him the leave for which he asks, as he is going to be absent from the Senate for some weeks, and wants to be heard before he goes. I would rather permit the French spoliation bill to go over to another session than to refuse him that courtesy. I hope the Senate will give it to him.

Mr. BORLAND. If it were merely a question of courtesy to the Senator from Louisiana, there is no Senator upon this floor who would concede it more readily than I would, and no Senator to whom I would concede it more readily than to that Senator. But this is evidently a question which must give rise to a great deal of discussion. Although it is a separate bill, it connects itself with a great system, in which this country now is, and has been, engaged, and which has much opposition throughout the country, and in this Senate; and whenever it is presented to the Senate, it will necessarily bring out a great deal of discussion, which will occupy a very considerable amount of time. I am generally opposed to leaving the regular order of the calendar, and taking up particular bills. When they require no discussion, however, I sometimes yield. But I cannot vote for this, not only because it disregards the rule, which we have generally agreed to follow, but because it will introduce a subject which must necessarily occupy a great deal of time, and bring out a great deal of discussion.

Mr. SOULE. In reply to the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND,] I would say that, although the object of the bill is to create a new line of steamers, the question which the creation of that new line raises is not a new one to the Senate. We had it before us last year, and we passed a bill granting what is asked in the present one. I do not apprehend that any of the difficulties which the Senator anticipates will arise from this; and, unless I am very much mistaken as to the disposition of the Senate—at least, so far as I can judge of it from the exhibition of it which we have had on former occasions—I do not believe that this debate will last more than half an hour. I hope the Senator will withdraw his opposition, and let me enjoy the favor, which I have so seldom desired, but for which, on this occasion, I have asked.

The motion to postpone all prior orders was agreed to. The bill to provide for a tri-monthly mail from New Orleans to Vera Cruz, via Tampico, and back, in steam-vessels, was read a second time, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SOULE. This bill, or rather a bill very much like this, has already been before the Senate, and its merits are familiar to every member in it.

I do not know, therefore, how far it is necessary that I should again state what, on a former occasion, I deemed it my duty to urge on its consideration in order to show the justice and the expediency of the measure for which it provides. It will not, however, be out of place, I imagine, that I should refer to some of the considerations which secured its passage when it first came before us.

The Senate will bear in mind that, while vast and numerous appropriations have been made for steam-ships plying between some port on this side of Mason and Dixon's line and foreign ports, not one has as yet been made for any communication that might immediately benefit a port south of that line. Yet, sir, the act which made provision for the transportation of United States mails between the United States and foreign countries had clearly in contemplation that a line would be established between the points which this bill proposes to supply with one. Through some mis-wording in the bill, however, the provision to which I allude was deemed obscure, and remained a dead letter. The consequence has been that our intercourse with Mexico has gradually diminished, and a commerce which, in 1835, amounted in imports to upwards of $9,000,000, is now reduced to something less than $2,000,000; while our exports, which were then of more than $8,000,000, had fallen, in 1850, to something over $1,500,000. Thus have the relations, which secured to us a valuable share in the interchange of commodities with our sister Republic, been so utterly annihilated, that our Government has been obliged to resort to one of its own steamers to carry dispatches from one country to the other. Thus has the bullion, which Mexico was in the habit of exchanging with our own productions, been diverted to other channels than those in which it had a natural tendency to flow. The British steamers now monopolize what there is of commerce in Mexico, and substract from it what of the precious metal would have come to our ports had a proper communication been kept up between the two Republics, and had the provisions of the act of 1845 been complied with as their spirit clearly required. What we have lost in consequence of so glaring a neglect on our part to attend exigencies which pressed themselves upon us so urgently could hardly be believed if I were to evidence it to figures. Sir, let us hasten to redress the past, and do something to restore our relations with that country to a more natural and healthy condition. Nor are the advantages which our commerce may derive from a closer and more friendly connection with Mexico the only consideration that should prompt us to the adoption of the measure proposed. There are other interests of no less grade and importance that will be subserved by it. Our intercourse with neighbors will and must unavoidably awaken them to a consciousness of the immense resources by which they are surrounded, and of their ability, by proper application and industry, to turn them to the improvement of their physical, social, and political condition. It will have, also, a tendency to strengthen those kind and friendly relations which it should be our wish, as it is our interest, that we should cultivate and extend. Our postal department will not be the last to receive benefit from the contemplated mail arrangement. The quantity of mailable matter which is being transferred every month from Mexico to the other parts of the world will, through the facilities afforded, soon increase, and seek the nearest and the cheapest channel through which it can be distributed throughout the globe, and in less than a year, perhaps, amply compensate the expenditure authorized by the bill. Sir, compared with the allowance made to other lines, it will be found that while the line from New York to Liverpool is paid at the rate of three dollars and ten cents per mile, that proposed by this bill requires but an expenditure of one dollar thirty-two and a half cents per mile.

In whatever light, therefore, you consider the measure proposed, it realizes but advantages to the country, while it demands but a comparatively small amount from the Treasury to enable it to go into operation. I hope, therefore, that the bill will not encounter opposition, and that it will be suffered to pass in the form in which it has been presented. You will remark, Mr. President, that no assistance is demanded of the Government to build the steam-ships, their construction will remain entirely in the charge of the contractors.

Though the bill names a contractor with whom the postmaster general may contract, it imposes upon that officer no absolute obligation to treat with him; he is left to decide under his own responsibility, who is to have the contract, not absolutely the person named in the bill, but on the contrary, whoever may tender better propositions, and offer as complete and sure guarantees that the contract will be faithfully executed. The suggestion of the measure came into this house through the memorial of the individual mentioned in the bill, and with the escort of the recommendation made of the same to the attention of Congress, by the able officer, who holds the chair in the Post Office Department, your committee to whom the whole was referred, could not but embody in its bill the memorial on whose occasion the measure which it provided for, had been referred to its consideration. The committee was aware of the opposition which the insertion in it of a named contractor would excite, and it was with a view to its avoidance that the bill leaves it facultative with the Postmaster General, to treat with him, or with such other persons as may present equal responsibility and equal ability to perform its requirements. Thus, sir, the main difficulty which might have arisen out of this specification of the individual with whom the contract should be entered into, being removed, the bill remains without any of those objectionable features that might have endangered its success. I hope, therefore, that it will pass.

Mr. CASS. I wish to say one word. I fully concur in the considerations urged by the Senator from Louisiana. I am entirely in favor of the measure, but I desire to have the name of the party with whom the contract is to be made struck out. I want to have Congress legislate, and not administer in making contracts. I wish to have the matter left so that the Postmaster General may be authorized to enter into a contract with any individual on due notice, not exceeding the given amount, and then hold him to the responsibility. In that way I will vote for it.

Mr. CLEMENS. I have prepared an amendment in accordance with the view of the Senator from Michigan, which will obviate his objection, which I beg leave to offer.

In lines six and seven, strike out the words "W. C. Templeton, or, in his default, with such other person," and insert the words "with such person or persons;" and in the eighth line, after the word "security," insert the words "after due public notice;" and in the ninth line, insert after words "United States," the words "upon the best terms for the United States." The bill will then read thus:

"That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to enter into a contract for a term of five years, and for a sum not exceeding $100,000 a year, with such person or persons as may offer sufficient and satisfactory security, after due public notice, for the transportation of the mails of the United States, upon the best terms for the United States, three times a month from New Orleans, via Tampico, to Vera Cruz and back in steam-vessels," &c.

Mr. DAVIS. I will suggest another modification. I am in favor of the general plan of the Senator from Louisiana. I would like, however, if it meets his approbation, to leave this an open question for contract. I would suggest not only that the names should be stricken out, so as to leave the matter open in that respect, but I would inquire of him whether there is any particular advantage in requiring that these vessels should be fitted for purposes of war, or that they should be of a certain tonnage. The question is, will it not be as well to leave the matter open and free to anybody and everybody who can furnish suitable and proper means; and suitable and proper vessels for the transportation of the mails. I say again—and the Senator knows it very well—that I am favorably inclined to his general plan, but I do not see the necessity of requiring these steamers to be fitted for war purposes, or that they should be of a certain tonnage, as the bill indicates.

Mr. SOULE. I had two objects in view in requiring that the steam-ships should be of a certain tonnage. The first was to make it certain that the mail would be carried in such vessels as would afford the best possible accommodation to passengers; and it was considered that, unless the tonnage specified in the bill were as required, we might be exposed to have the line served by such vessels as would neither afford security nor comfort to those who might wish to take passage on board of them.

The next consideration was, that we should also have an eye to possible contingencies when it might become desirable to transform the mail-vessels into war-steamers. The apprehension of that contingency was awakened in my mind by the occurrence which took place some time ago when two foreign squadrons made their appearance in the waters of the Gulf under circumstances well calculated to create our susceptibilities. Our present commerce in the Gulf is such that it requires constant, active protection. It may be, sir—and I am among those who confidently entertain the hope—that we may not see the day when dark forebodings may cloud the horizon, and give us occasion to apprehend difficulties, and perhaps collisions with any foreign Power. But still, sir, is it not the province of statesmen to provide for such contingencies? While we are not required to sacrifice anything by imposing such requirements upon those who may undertake to run this line, should we forego the advantage of being able, if circumstances should demand it, to employ these vessels as a means of protection and defense? Such were the considerations which prompted me to require that the vessels should be of the burden mentioned in the bill, and so constructed as to allow their being applied in case of necessity to war purposes.

Mr. RUSK. If the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Davis] is to be adopted—that is, that this matter shall be put into the hands of the lowest bidder, irrespective of the vessels in which the mails are to be carried—it will not receive my support; nor, indeed, would any of these steam lines under a proposition of that sort. Such a proposition, I am sorry to say, is entirely in character with a great deal of the legislation of this country, and in which it differs from all other countries since the discovery and use of steam. In money matters, we are economical to the last dime; but where human life is concerned, we are as lavish as we well can be. So it would appear, at least, if we put these contracts down at the lowest rate; and we thus offer a premium to reckless speculators to accept them and bring into the service vessels with rotten hulls, and in all other respects unworthy and unsafe, the result of which will be accidents similar to that which occurred at the mouth of the Columbia river a short time ago. Down would go the vessels, and the lives of the passengers and the crews would be sacrificed. That, sir, it appears to me, is one of the chief characteristics of this system; for we have comparatively no security for human life, so far as steam is concerned. It is true that we have a law upon the statute-book in relation to this subject; but it amounts to nothing. It is just the same as if that law were not there. Very different is the course pursued by the English Government in this respect. They have adopted every possible safeguard that science has thus far been enabled to suggest, and are yet adopting them; and no one is permitted to use steam without giving all possible security to prevent the destruction of human life. And what is the difference, Mr. President, between the bill as it is proposed and, the amendment which has been suggested? The only difference is—and the only benefit which the bill proposes, and which is to compensate for the increased expenditure—in the fact, that we shall have afloat on the ocean vessels in which men may venture themselves with perfect safety. I believe that in no case where contracts have thus been made has an accident happened by which human life has been lost; and the reason is, that the contractors were obliged to build vessels of sufficient strength. If, then, we are to carry on this system, let us at least be careful that we do not lead individuals into a policy, the result of which may be the reckless destruction of human life.

With regard to the main proposition embraced in the bill, it should be remembered that we are in the immediate vicinity of Mexico—a nation numbering eight millions of people, and they, too, a consuming people; and yet such has been our negligence and carelessness that, as the honorable Senator from Louisiana says, we have a commerce with them now not exceeding $2,500,000—a commerce, I believe, not so great as that which results from our intercourse with China. This bill asks a communication with one of the ports of Mexico and one of the ports of our own country which furnishes one half of the products which you export; and all that is asked for that purpose is an appropriation of $100,000. Who does not see that the whole country would be benefited much more than that? I have no doubt, sir, that what was said by the Senator from Louisiana in regard to it would be realized in less than a year—that the mail matter alone would more than pay the expense, independently of the increased facilities which would thereby be given to commerce. Is New Orleans, then, the only place which is to be benefited? Not at all. The people of that city would be benefited but very little comparatively with the benefit which will accrue to the country at large. Mexico will consume the manufactures of the Northern and Eastern portions of the country, and give us their silver in return. Who, then, is to be chiefly benefited? I know very well that it is said that particular localities in one section of the country can procure accommodations for the transportation of the mails, and other commercial advantages, which other portions of the country cannot obtain. And in view of that, I shall regard the vote on this bill as giving me an insight as to whether it is the disposition of Congress to encourage those most who are in circumstances of the greatest prosperity and leave the rest to contend with their difficulties. I hold, sir, that the benefits of the Government should be extended over the whole country, and not confined to any particular spot. Sir, I repeat again, that New Orleans furnishes about one half of your exports; and where have you a dollar of the money of this country invested to encourage that commerce which brings you the means that enables you to meet the balance of trade against you with other countries? It seems to me that there can be no question of the propriety of the adoption of this measure.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not think the Senator from Texas quite understands the view which I have of this question. In the first place, I believe the honorable member himself will hardly question that there may be other suitable means for the transportation of the mail besides in a war-steamer. He will hardly question that other and suitable means of transportation may be obtained in this country, answering all the purposes for the transportation of passengers and the mail that can be had in a war-steamer. I think we have some experience on that point, enough to justify the conclusion that it may be done. Far be it from me to desire that the Post Office establishment should place the mail in an unsuitable vessel; unsuitable in any respect, in dimensions, tonnage, strength, or in any other particular. I should wish that if the Department is clothed with the power to make a contract, they may be vested with authority to look into all the matters connected with the subject, and that they should make a contract with no one unless he should furnish a suitable and safe means for the transportation of the mail.

Nor have I any unfriendly feeling toward this bill. It is a new idea to me, that the transportation of the mail is a sectional question. I had supposed that New York had as much occasion to send letters to Vera Cruz as New Orleans, and that other places of trade and business in the country have as much interest in the establishment of a mail line between the ports of this country and the ports of other countries as New Orleans, or any other section of the country; and it would be rather extraordinary where these interests exist so extensively as they do in the portion of the country that I represent, if there should be any hostility shown to this line because the track lies through a certain section of the country. Sir, I repudiate all such thoughts on this subject. The mail is for the whole country; it is for the common benefit of all. It was for that reason that I have heretofore given my support to this measure, and I shall now give it for the same reason. I have felt no disposition to make any objection, and I only rise to make a single suggestion; I was influenced to make that for the reason which I have given, and I think my friend from Texas [Mr. Rusk] will agree with me after all. He does not wish any impediment thrown in the way of carrying this line into execution. I entertain the same opinion. I was forcibly impressed with that provision in the bill which requires the vessels to be made suitable for war purposes; because I think that by that, you throw an impediment in the way. The very terms employed to describe the vessel, imply that some extraordinary expense is to be laid out upon these vessels, and that, therefore, the expenses of the Government will be increased, and made greater than they otherwise need be. That is an impediment.

Then, how is it to be known that a vessel is suitable for a war-steamer? I will tell you how. In the case of all the lines for which you have legislated, you have reserved the right of placing over the builder a superintendent, an agent, to look into the manner in which the vessel is constructed, in behalf of the Government, to see that they are built in a manner satisfactory to the Government, as war-vessels.

Now, I apprehend this scheme contemplates no such thing as that. It does not propose to say of what particular construction the vessel shall be. The satisfaction which the Government requires is to be obtained in some other way. The Department is to be satisfied that it is a war-vessel. I think, as I said, that the honorable Senators from Texas and from Louisiana will be satisfied that this provision is an obstruction to the bill. I will not move to strike it out. But I think it is an obstacle to the carrying out of the contract; and that it would be better for him, and for all concerned, to strike it out.

Mr. SOULE. I am quite willing to strike out that part of the bill which requires the vessel to be suitable to war purposes; but I must insist on the tonnage, for unless the tonnage be specified by the bill, we shall have no security that the vessel will possess those accommodations which are needed, or afford the requisite confidence in its safety.

Mr. DAVIS. It is no part of my purpose. If the Senator from Louisiana thought it worth his while to persist in this, I did not mean to urge its being stricken out. I think, however, that the interest of his bill requires that it should be done; and, with these remarks, I will merely observe, that it is a matter for his consideration.

Mr. BORLAND. I agree with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. SOULE] in all he has said of the moral and commercial advantages to be derived from such a communication as this bill proposes to establish. And I apprehend there is no difference of opinion in the minds of Senators in that regard. But my objection to the bill lies mainly to the system of making by Congress, or under the immediate direction of Congress, contracts with individuals for the performance of any portion of the public service. There lies the foundation of my objection.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the Senator understands that this contract is to be made like any other mail contract.

Mr. BORLAND. As it is proposed to be amended, such is the case; but as the bill stands, it is not. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. CLEMENS] is, to throw the service open to competition, that the contract may be made in the usual manner, not as a contract by Congress, or under the immediate direction of Congress, specifying the individual with whom it shall be made, and all the conditions respecting it, but leaving the subject to the management under the general law and regulations of the Post Office Department, so that the Department may advertise for contracts, and enter into them, as it now does with all our interior mails throughout the country. The bill, if thus amended, will meet my views and receive my vote. But if it remain in its present form, all, or almost all, of the evils I find in the system of ocean mails, of which it must be regarded as a part, will require me to vote against it.

Mr. President, before the system of ocean mail steamers, of which we have now had some experience, was begun, great advantages, great benefits, great superiority over all other plans, were predicted of it, and promised for it. Sir, I was not able, in advance, to see that these promises would be realized. I did not then believe they would be. The result, after several years experience and observation, has not removed my doubts—has not changed my belief. But I have seen, mainly, what I expected, and that is, large expenditures of money by the Government for the benefit of individuals, and associations of individuals, who have been favored with a monopoly of the contracts, and a bonus to take them, without even the chance of that benefit to the Government in the way of saving money which might have been derived from competition. And have these mails been carried any better, more expeditiously, or more regularly than it is fair to suppose they would have been under contracts let out and entered into in the usual way? Look, sir, at our mail system upon the land, and upon our inland waters. All the service under that system is performed by contract, entered into after regular periodical advertisement, and open to unrestricted competition. Engaging in that competition we find almost numberless individuals, competent to an efficient performance of the undertaking, and prepared with ample security for their fidelity. To the lowest and best bidders these contracts are awarded. And we find that the service thus undertaken, (wherever the supervising authority exercises due vigilance,) is well performed; and that too, although under the influence of this free competition, the prices paid for the service grows less and less in amount every succeeding year. I apprehend, indeed I am sure, that an inspection of the bids of every annual letting of the mail service, will show that the prices paid are reduced every year. And there is a reason for it. The establishment of a regular and well-conducted mail line is a source of profit to the contractor, not to the amount of the compensation from the Government alone, but also from travel, if on the land, and from both travel and freight, if on the water. Multiplying his sources of profit, he is enabled, and an enlightened self-interest induces him, to reduce the rate of charging from each. In this way, while the increase of travel and transportation of freight is almost incalculable upon a well-conducted mail line, we find the reduction in the rate of bids for mail contracts both certain and decided every year. Why, then, shall we not have the advantages, on the score of economy, in our system of mail service upon the sea, as well as upon the land and our rivers? Sir, I repeat, I have been, and am, unable to see the advantages of this system over the other I have described. I am in favor of adhering to the one that works well at home, (or would, with some slight modifications of detail,) unless those who advocate a different one for our foreign mail service can show its superiority. This they have not yet done. Until they do, I shall vote against it, in whatever bill it may come up.

The considerations presented by the Senator from Louisiana, in favor of this line of communication, commend themselves to my favor most strongly, not only from the general advantages in a commercial point of view to the whole country, but his remarks appealed, and with little force, to that sectional feeling from which no man is entirely free, and of which I, perhaps, have as much as any one. He pointed out the advantages which would accrue from it directly to the Southern portion of this Confederacy, of which I am one of the representatives. I know but too well, and have cause to feel but too strongly, how well-founded is all he said on that subject; and, also, of all the Senator from Texas [Mr. Rusk] said of the inequality, so far, of the operation of this system. But, sir, the fault is in the system itself. Such a system must necessarily be unequal in its operation; and in that lies the main point and force of my objection to this bill; for there is no disguising the fact, that it is a part, essentially, as it will certainly be in practical operation, of the system I oppose.

Senators express great solicitude for the protection of the lives of passengers on these ocean steamers that carry our mails, and think it necessary to adopt such a system as this, in which the size and kind of vessels shall be prescribed as indispensable to great and desirable objects. The sentiment is a good one; it commends itself alike, and with equal force, to our feelings and to our interest. But, sir, why should their eyes, and their sympathies, and their solicitude, all be turned in one direction, and all towards the ocean? Are not the millions of our people who travel by steam, and along our mail lines, upon our great rivers, and great lakes, equally deserving of sympathy, and solicitude, and the protecting care of this Government, when it engages in legislation, and heavy appropriations of money for the protection of human life? Sir, I join them in the sentiments of sympathy and solicitude, on this subject, they so strongly manifest; but if they expect me to give them "material aid" in its practical manifestation, they must join me, also, in extending it to my people, as well as their own, by a system of legislation which shall be general in its principles, and equal in its operation, over all.

Now, sir, as to the importance of the proposed line, of which the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. SOULE] has so well spoken, and in respect to which I so fully agree with him, I undertake to say, and no one can successfully controvert, that the line of mail communication along the Mississippi valley is far more important, I care not in what relation you estimate it—whether in length of route, in amount of travel, or in value of commerce. Indeed, in all these respects, the importance and interest of the great valley, very far exceed our whole Atlantic commerce. But on the Atlantic, for fewer people, and for a smaller commerce, we are expending millions, by a system of monopolies, from which wealthy capitalists are deriving the chief benefit; while on the greatest of rivers, greater for us even than the ocean, for more people, and greater commerce, we are giving no care, no attention, no protection, no facilities, and scarcely a recognition, in the matter of either mails, or commerce, or navigation. Through this whole valley—at any rate, from Louisville, on the Ohio, and from St. Louis, on the Mississippi, to New Orleans, there is not a single mail line—not one—not even by the ordinary system of contract. Both those streams, wherever navigable, are, by the general law, “mail routes;” but, from Louisville, and St. Louis, downwards, to the ocean, there is not a single “mail line”—no, sir, not one! This may strike some Senators with surprise, for, indeed, it is a surprising state of things; but it is true. Instead of giving us a “line,” as other parts of the country have, the transportation of our mails, along that great thoroughfare, upwards and downwards, over thousands of miles, is made a weekly, or a daily jobbing out by agents at the several towns along the river, and on boats of any kind that may chance to offer. Such is the system with which we are put off, and have been forced to put up with for years; a system, or rather a want of system, from which no sensible man could expect anything better than irregularity and disappointments, and which proves even worse in its results than the least sanguine could have anticipated. In consequence of this wretched state of things, we have complaints from all quarters of the West, for all are interested in the business of the great thoroughfare, and all are aggrieved at its embarrassment. On our tables, now, are the resolutions of the Legislature of Tennessee, pointing out the evils under which we all suffer, protesting against their continuance, and asking for that relief which it is our duty to grant. And what, sir, is the kind and amount of relief thus asked for? Not that we shall engage in any new system of legislation—not that we shall make any special Congressional contracts—not that we shall build up any rich monopolies—not that we should prescribe the size or kind of vessels in which our mails may be carried, or engage to pay extravagant specific sums of money for the service. No, sir, none of this. The request is simply that you will place us on the same footing with other interior sections of the country, under the general law, for transportation of the mails, upon every other route of even ten miles length, whether on horseback, in stage-coaches, by railroads, or on steam-boats. Is not this request a proper and a reasonable one? Then, why should it be disregarded—why not complied with? Sir, when I first came here as a Senator, now four years ago, among the first matters of duty which claimed my attention, was the very subject of which I am speaking. I had not only heard, but I knew and felt, from personal observation and experience, all about the evils of irregular and insufficient mails in the Mississippi valley, the very root of which was this want of a “line” upon the Mississippi. Looking to the general law, I found that it was competent for the Postmaster General to extend to us all the relief we required, by simply advertising and letting the service out to the lowest and best bidder. I called upon him, and insisted that this should be done. But what was the result? Sir, my single voice, though it fairly represented the rights and necessities of five hundred millions of commerce, in these respects, and faithfully expressed the wishes of eight millions of American citizens, was disregarded—the request was refused. And upon what ground do you suppose, sir? Not that it was unreasonable—not that the evils complained of did not exist, and ought to be remedied. No, sir, none of that. But because the service required would cost one hundred thousand dollars! that having been the year before the lowest bid, when proposals for a contract had been advertised for. A vast sum, truly! for carrying the largest mail in the United States daily through the most important region of our whole country, and over a route at least fifteen hundred miles in length! To my repeated appeal, he responded that the revenue of the Department from the mails on the proposed route did not equal in amount the sum demanded for the proposed change of service. This I explained by facts—well-ascertained by competent persons, merchants, traders, and postmasters on the route—which were all in favor of the change. These facts were, that under the plan then and still pursued, the transportation of the mails were so irregular and uncertain, and often so slow, that private conveyances were in most instances resorted to, and, in consequence, not more than one tenth part of the mailable matter that passed up and down the route, was carried in the mails. Let the plan be but changed, however, as I proposed; let a regular line be established, and the mails be regularly and expeditiously carried, and all this would cease; the mailable matter would seek its proper channel, and the legitimate revenue of the Department from that source would be increased in a corresponding ratio. Besides this, I represented, what every one knows to be true, that the facilities for travel, and the transportation of light freight, which a regular and expeditious line of steamers, such as a mail contract (properly enforced) would require, would make the enterprise exceedingly profitable to the contractor, as a general business transaction, independent of the mail; and that, as a consequence, competition would become active, and that, although the first contract might be at a high price—even as high as a hundred thousand dollars—yet the bids at the next lettings would very certainly be reduced to a much lower sum, probably to one half—perhaps to one third, or even one fourth of the first. But, sir, this was all in vain. The refusal was persisted in. The head of the Post Office Department at that time, from considerations of an economy not, I fear, peculiarly his own, (and which may be not unaptly characterized as “penny wise and pound foolish,”) and of a fear expressed by him at the time, that he might seem to be extravagant, was proof against all facts, and insensible to all appeals. Then, sir, finding the Executive branch of the Government impracticable, or rather incorrigible, although under the law, fully competent to extend the relief so needed, and desired, and admitted by himself to be so, I brought the subject before this body. I proposed here that the Postmaster General should be required to do what was so obviously proper, and what he expressed himself very willing to do, if Congress would take the responsibility of ordering it—that is, to advertise for a contract to carry the mail upon the Ohio and Mississippi rivers upon the same plan then, and now, in operation everywhere else in the Union. But, sir, I was equally unsuccessful here. Hardly a vote could I get, in addition to my own, for a proposition against which no man can make a reasonable, or even a plausible objection. Then, as now, sir, no objection was urged to the proposition itself—no one questioned its justice or propriety. Some said leave it with the Postmaster General, it is his province and his duty. Others said, as I am told to-day, this is not the right time, nor the right bill on which to pass it. Sir, I have heard this so often that I should despair of ever finding either the right time, or the right place, if it were in my nature to despair of success when I know and feel that I have truth and justice with me. But, sir, at the very time the Senate was rejecting this measure, hundreds of thousands were voted away, almost without question, for an ocean mail line from a single Atlantic port to some point in Europe. Mr. President, why was this? Why is it now? An answer—a stirring, and a startling answer may, at no distant day, be given, even upon this floor, from other lips than mine, whose words will be more regarded, from lips which shall be moved by a power, coming up from a distance, which even this Senate will not be able to resist. In the meantime, let it be said here, and let it go beyond the country, that while the whole Mississippi valley, with its twenty thousand miles of river coast, its thousand steam-boats, its five hundred millions of commerce, and its eight millions of people, asks a single mail line, which is indispensable to its ordinary business, which will not cost $100,000, and which will more than pay back the money directly in revenue, and asks in vain: yet a single port on the Atlantic coast has but to ask for millions, and they are granted for the asking!

Mr. President, Senators make an appeal in behalf of the line this bill proposes to establish, upon the ground of equalizing the operation of the system of ocean mail-steamers. They say that the system, so far, operated unequally upon different sections of the Union; and this proposition is to make it equal. Sir, I know it operates unequally, and that is a main ground of my opposition to it. But when they talk of equalizing its operation, I think it would be well for them to extend their observations and regards somewhat more widely and generally over the country. I am as tired as they can be of the partial and unequal operation of this system; and for this reason, in all its bearings, I will give no vote here which shall contribute, in any degree, to its continuance. No vote of mine shall be given which shall not help to its discontinuance; which shall not insist that all parts of the country, whether near to this capital, or remote from it; whether on the Atlantic coast, or on our “inland seas,” shall be placed upon an equal footing in the eye of the law, and be equally cared and respected under its operation. Now, sir, to accomplish an object which all of us must acknowledge to be just, and proper, and necessary, is no difficult task in the important matter of our mails. It is to adopt one uniform rule, such as we find already in operation by our general law and regulations for the post office system, which, with some slight modifications in matters of detail, mostly of administration, is, perhaps, as good as we shall be able to adopt in this generation. It is to require the Postmaster General to place all routes which Congress shall have established, upon the same footing, and in procuring mail-service upon them, to advertise for contracts, to be given to the lowest and best bidders, with ample security for a faithful performance of duty. Let these contracts be made at stated periods, and under an open and unrestricted competition.

Senators seem to think that in this instance, as in other cases, of ocean mail steamers, it is important that we shall prescribe the size and character of the vessel. Why, sir, should this be required in respect to ocean mails, and not in respect to the means of transporting our land and river mails in the interior of the country? We know that in former years this requirement was made in regard to all our mail transportation, whether on land or water. But this has all been abandoned—doubtless for good and sufficient reasons—at any rate abandoned in regard to all interior mails; and now, the advertisements call for proposals to carry the mails, and are silent as to the means of transportation. Without pausing here to inquire into the propriety of this change, I would, however, ask if there be not an equal necessity and propriety in making this prescription, as to capacity and the kind of means of transportation, for our river and land mails, as for those on the ocean? Why not? If the convenience and safety of one portion of the people of the Union demand this prescription at our hands in one case, I hold that its advantages should be extended to all. If not required for all, I cannot understand the propriety, and do not recognize the duty, to give it to any, as a special favor, by special provision.

I think the whole system, which recognizes inequality and discrimination between different sections of the country, and different portions of our people, as this does, is essentially vicious, and ought to be repudiated and rejected in our legislation, no matter in what form it may present itself. I am against it in all shapes and all times, now and forever. I am for the amendment, but against the bill.

Mr. President, I did not expect this question would come up to-day, and, therefore, came here unprepared to discuss it. Sprung upon me as it has been, I could not avoid an expression of my views in opposition to it; though, for want of preparation, I have had to confine myself within narrow limits, and state very briefly and in general terms the reasons of my opposition. I regret this, on my own account, as I have some facts and views growing out of them in regard to the working of this system of mail steamers, which I would have been pleased to present to the Senate and to the country in a more regular and better arranged course of remark. Much, therefore, that I would have said, if I had anticipated this discussion, must now be omitted; and I will trouble the Senate no more at present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I rise for the purpose of obtaining information from gentlemen, if they will be kind enough to hear my difficulties, and solve them for me, particularly the gentleman at the head of the Post Office Committee, [Mr. Rusk,] and the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. Soule.] I want very much to facilitate the communication from the valley of the Mississippi to California and Oregon by water, and the mails in that direction. I want to furnish facilities both for travel and communication by means of correspondence. These objects are very desirable to my people and to the whole valley from which I come. I believe a large portion of the inhabitants, both of Oregon and California, have gone from the Mississippi valley. It is important that they should have ready access by means of correspondence, and also by travel, with their friends at home. I do not know (and this is what I wish to ascertain) whether the line from New York to Chagres, or the line from New York to the mouth of the San Juan Nicaragua, touches at New Orleans at all.

Mr. RUSK. The Chagres mail line of steamers do touch at New Orleans, but the Nicaragua line do not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am glad to receive the information, because I had some impression that that was the case. Now, if this line can be extended without much expense, so as to give us additional communication to the mouth of the San Juan or to Chagres, it would meet my wishes, and, I think, promote the interests of our people in a very great degree. If, however, the expense, in the opinion of those who have examined the subject more than I have, is too great, why, I will not make any effort at all to accomplish anything of the kind. Or, if the communication already existing, by means of the New York and Chagres line, touching at New Orleans, is sufficient to meet the wants of our people, I ask no amendment. I should like to know how often these trips are, and whether they are semi-monthly or monthly?

Mr. RUSH. Semi-monthly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hardly think that semi-monthly trips are sufficient to meet the wishes of the people of the valley of the Mississippi.

Mr. SOULE. I can satisfy the gentleman upon one of his queries. By granting this line you will actually create new facilities for the communication between the Pacific and the Atlantic. There is now in progress of construction a route through Mexico, which is confided to the enterprising industry of a gentleman who was once a citizen of the United States, but who has now become a citizen of the Republic of Mexico, and who expects before long to be enabled to carry mails from San Francisco to New Orleans in less than fourteen days. So that whatever facilities of communication we give between this country and any port of the Republic of Mexico, will actually afford new means of establishing speedier relations between the Pacific and the Atlantic coast. To extend this line to the places mentioned by the honorable Senator from Kentucky, would so considerably increase the expenditure that it might beget one of those insuperable difficulties which would defeat the prospects of the bill and make its ultimate passage impossible.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My object is accomplished.

Mr. GWIN. In addition to what the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Soule] has said, I have information upon this subject, having in my possession some facts in regard to it. I look upon this bill as one of the greatest importance in the view which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Underwood] has taken of it. It will cause a vast increase of intercourse between the western country and California, not only in carrying the mails, but in transporting passengers. I did not expect this bill would come up to-day, and have not before me some facts which I would like to bring to the notice of the Senate; but I have certain statements made by persons who are conversant with the subject which demonstrates that this will be a great emigrating route; one of the most important we can establish, over which the families of the western emigrants will go to their new homes. The men crossed the plains. The women and children will go by this route, to join fathers, husbands, and brothers. A sail vessel can go from the Balize to Vera Cruz in three days, and a steam-ship in two. From Vera Cruz there is a railroad through the drift sand and swamp land to Santa Fe, over which stages and team-wagons are carried on trucks. Stages make the journey from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico, in two days. From the city of Mexico to Quarnavaca, (fifty-four miles,) on the road to Acapulco, there is a daily stage line. The road is completed for carriages fifty-four miles further to Ponta-de-Istla, with the exception of two unimportant bridges. The remainder of the road to Acapulco, through the cities of Equala and Chilpausingo, is only a mule path; but great efforts are making by Alvarado, the present popular Governor of the State of Guerrero, of the South, to complete the road to the Pacific ocean. This is what is called the southern road. There is a due western carriage road passing through the important city of Guadalajara, on which a daily stage runs to Tepic, a distance of about eighteen leagues from San Blas, on the Pacific ocean. And it is expected that in a few months the road will be opened to San Blas for stages. The distance from Vera Cruz to the Pacific by Acapulco, is six hundred miles, while the route by San Blas is twelve hundred.

So energetic have the State authorities shown themselves since the adoption of the new constitution, that important public improvements are everywhere resumed, and the country is comparatively free from robbers—so much so that unarmed Californians travel along through the country without apprehension and without risk.

During the Mexican war the British Minister ran an express regularly from Vera Cruz to Mazatlan, in eight days, and is running the same express now. At that rate we can get from New Orleans to Vera Cruz in three days; from Vera Cruz to Mazatlan, nine days, and from Mazatlan to San Diego, four days; making in all from New Orleans to San Diego, sixteen days. The tri-monthly route to be established by this bill will connect on the Pacific side, at Acapulco, or San Blas, with the tri-monthly route preparing to start from Panama to San Francisco, so that there will be a constant communication three times a month, not only to New York, but to New Orleans; and the latter certainly will be one of the most desirable emigrating routes, as well as an important mail route. A company has been formed to establish a telegraphic line from Acapulco to Vera Cruz, which is encouraged and patronized by the Mexican Government. When established, the communication between California and New Orleans will be as follows: From San Francisco to Acapulco, six days; telegraph to Vera Cruz at once, and thence to New Orleans, three days, thus making the time of communication from eight to ten days.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am really very happy to hear all these facts. I had not turned my attention to the investigation of the subject, but it occurred to me that the people whom I represent had a vast interest in some more direct communication, both for travel and correspondence, than that now existing. It was this consideration which induced me to make the inquiries which I have made, and which have been so satisfactorily answered by my friends from Louisiana and California. It seems to me that we ought to adopt the amendment, and then pass the bill. If you intend to provide for Western interests—which I hope will receive the consideration of Eastern gentlemen—give us some opportunity to have speedy communication with our friends on the Pacific.

I am very happy to find that this route will afford greater facilities than I had supposed. When I first rose, my object was to inquire from my friend from Louisiana whether additional facilities could not be obtained, by extending his route either to Chagres or to the San Juan; but under the suggestions he has made, I am satisfied to take it as it is.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I suppose that this may be looked upon as the commencement of drafts upon the Treasury in favor of steam lines. Our expenditures under that head now exceed $1,400,000. If we grant the requests that are legitimately before us, contemplated by the committee, and favorably considered by them, they will in the course of a few days amount to about $2,000,000.

I was, a short time since, opposed to this very bill; but I understand now that the two principal objections have been, or will be, removed. The names of special contractors, I believe, will be stricken out, and the whole matter will be left open to fair competition. I also understand that the clause with regard to war steamers will be withdrawn. The objection to that is manifest. Most of the contracts which we have formed for ocean steamers have contained this identical clause, that vessels constructed under them should be capable of being used for war purposes; yet I believe that it is notorious to every man in the country, familiar with the subject, that there has not been constructed one vessel in accordance with the contract—that there has not yet been one vessel constructed which would be fit for war purposes to-morrow, if she should be called into service; that there is not one already constructed upon which the country would not have to expend $150,000 at least, before a battery could be put on board of her. I agree, in the main, with the remarks of the honorable Senators from Louisiana and Texas, as to the expenditure of this money in certain sections; and without wishing to commit my vote in support of steam lines generally, I may say that these two objections being withdrawn, I feel prepared to vote for this bill.

Mr. SOULE. I agree to the amendments proposed by the Senator from Alabama; and as soon as they are acted upon, I shall myself propose one or two other amendments.

Mr. PRATT called for a division of the question on agreeing to the amendments.

The first amendment, to strike out the words, "W. C. Templeton, or in his default, to such other persons," and to insert, "such person or persons," was agreed to.

The next amendment, to add, after the word "security," the words, "after due public notice," was agreed to.

The next amendment, to insert after the words "United States," the words, "upon the best terms for the United States," was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. The bill as it was originally proposed required that these steamers should be suitable for war purposes, and I was under the impression that there was an amendment striking out that provision.

The PRESIDENT. There has been no proposition to strike it out.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I move to strike out the words "to war purposes," so as to leave the bill to read, "the best form of construction adapted to the navigation of the southern seas."

Mr. CHASE. I shall vote for the adoption of this amendment, and after it shall have been adopted, I shall vote very cheerfully for the bill. It seems to me to be a measure eminently required by the wants of the commerce of the Gulf. Other gentlemen have said that they intend to vote for it from sectional considerations. I shall vote for it, because I desire those measures to be adopted which will benefit every section of the country.

Mr. BORLAND. As I am the only Senator, I believe, who suggested anything about sectional feeling or consideration, the Senator must, of course, allude to my remarks. I desire now to correct the mistake into which he has evidently fallen. I did not say that in any advocacy which I gave this bill, I was influenced solely by any sectional feeling. I said that in addition to the general views presented by the Senator from Louisiana, one of the considerations which would influence my vote, would be that sectional feeling from which no man was entirely free.

Mr. CHASE. I referred, undoubtedly, to the Senator from Arkansas, and also to other Senators, who assigned somewhat the same reason for voting for this bill. I have only to say that I think those honorable Senators themselves, on former occasions, have shown by their liberality, when their own sections of the country were not concerned, that they are not governed by that consideration in their own action. My friend from Texas, in the course of his remarks, adverted to the circumstance that the steam lines which have been hitherto established by Congress, plied on Northern waters, and that the benefits of such a system accrued generally to the North. I represent no Atlantic interest; but it is very obvious, and I think the Senator himself will be satisfied of it, upon a moment's reflection, that such must be the case. It is a law of nature, and therefore a law of God, as a distinguished Senator from Massachusetts once informed us—a law of God, that the great continents of the earth recede from each other as they extend southward. The shortest line of water transit always commands the commerce of the world; and the shortest line being from northern ports to northern ports, steam lines, obeying the law of the commerce they convey, must principally be there. But when there is a line proposed between two southern points, I trust that Northern men will be as prompt in voting for every proper measure for the benefit of Southern commerce as they are for the benefit of their own.

Mr. RUSK. I think the laws of trade are very much controlled by capital.

Mr. PRATT. I hope the amendment will not prevail; and I think that if the Senate will do me the favor of listening to a very few words, I will convince every one that it ought not to prevail. The proposition contained in the bill is, that we shall pay $100,000 for carrying the mail between New Orleans and Vera Cruz. We are to pay, in the language of the bill, a sum not exceeding $100,000 a year. I have never known a case where a maximum amount is placed in the bill, in which the contract is made for less. I have never known a contract made for less than the amount specified in the bill. I have, therefore, a right to assume that the proposition contained in this bill is to carry the mail from New Orleans to Vera Cruz for $100,000 a year. As the bill now stands, the Postmaster General is obliged to have vessels which are not only of eight hundred tons burden, but which are sufficiently strong, to be adapted to war purposes. We therefore get upon this line a superior route, and a boat of much greater strength, without the Government advancing one cent more than they would do if this amendment were not adopted, and vessels of any degree of strength provided, requiring only that they shall have the required tonnage.

I ask, why should this amendment be adopted? Is there any earthly reason for it, unless it be some motive disclaimed by the Senator from Louisiana, who has just taken his seat, that the South, in the only line which has been given to her, is to be placed upon a worse footing than the North? We have established lines of steamers for carrying the mails from New York to various parts of the world. They are war steamers, not only obliged to be of sufficient strength to be war steamers, but they carry guns to protect the passengers and the commerce, which are carried in them. Now, here is a line proposed to be established between New Orleans and Vera Cruz. Why should not the vessels be of the same strength? Why should they not have the same facilities, when it is to cost no more to the Government? We are only to pay $100,000, whether the vessel is sufficiently strong to be a war steamer or not. I ask, then, why should we adopt the amendment by which the people are to be accommodated in a less degree—by which no advantage is to be obtained by the Government, and which can have no earthly purpose, that I can imagine, unless it is to put this line upon a worse footing than the other lines of steamers which have been established for mail purposes? Why should we have weak vessels, when for the same price we can secure strong ones?

But, again, I have no doubt that the Senator from Louisiana is right in saying, that in less than two years the commerce of this country, the people of this country, will gain ten-fold more than we are about to pay for the establishment of this line. Would not that commerce be increased—would not the communication between two countries be increased by the security of having vessels of the required strength for war purposes? If the bill stands as it is, would there not be an additional security given to commerce, in the fact that the vessel is armed sufficiently to protect it against anybody who might attempt to take possession of it? The British steamers which ply between Mexico and Great Britain, are all armed steamers. They carry bullion; and they are, in the first place, of the strength which ours will be, if this bill passes as it is without being amended. If the bill passes as it is, our vessels will have the same armament which the British vessels have; and we shall be enabled to compete, at least, with Great Britain in that commerce. But if you send vessels there of only eight hundred tons burden, without any security whatever as to the strength of these vessels, Great Britain will still have that advantage over the commerce of this country, although we established the line. For my life I cannot see any good reason why anybody should propose such an amendment, when we are not to pay more for a vessel adapted for war purposes, than we are to pay for a vessel of eight hundred tons burden, no matter how weak it may be.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, a remark was made, I think, by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] in regard to what was paid for our ocean steam-vessels; and he said, that if this and some other proposed lines should be established, the annual expenditures under this head would amount to $2,000,000. I do not know what is the expense of the Navy proper. The annual appropriation for that service used to be something like $10,000,000 when I was accustomed to notice it; but it has been going up in an ascending series ever since, and I do not know how high it has got by this time. But I believe that the present Secretary of the Navy proposes to divide the expenditures, so that they may not appear to be quite so large; I believe he proposes to divide the items under different headings, so as not to have more than four or five millions under any one head; so that the naval expenditures may not seem to be quite so extravagant as they are generally supposed to be.

We expend, or at least propose to expend, some $2,000,000 annually for these steamers. I can see some possible, some probable—yea, some certain utility that may result from the expenditure of these $2,000,000. But, for the other ten millions, if you ask what earthly, what possible, what remote, what contingent advantage they can be to the Government or anybody else? echo will answer—what? If the Naval Committee will just reduce the expenses of what they call the Navy proper, as we increase the amount paid for these naval steamers, I think we should then be making progress. But if this is to be in addition to that expense, then it should not be incurred.

I am not particularly versed in the question which I see has been raised by some of those who are engaged in the mercantile service in our seaports, particularly New York. It is said that by creating these lines, we are giving an undue advantage to steamers—to the prostration of our other merchant marine. That is a matter which I have not examined, and I do not know what are the facts in relation to it; but I trust that it will receive the attention of Congress and the country. If the creation and support of steam lines by the Government is to have a tendency to prostrate the merchant marine; if in this way, by giving them this Government patronage, you are to give them such facilities for transporting freight and passengers as to drive the merchant marine from the seas, then I think the system is all wrong. But we have entered upon the scheme. It is now being tried. It is in process of experiment. I would not interfere to interrupt it until it is fairly tried. If the experiment is to be tried, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. If there is anything that can commend the employment of these mail steamers to the country, it is the fact, or the pretense—and the pretense is just as good as the fact, until it comes to be verified—that they are convertible into vessels-of-war whenever the Government wants them as such. That time has never yet arrived. We have not fully tried the experiment. We have proceeded on the idea that these vessels are convertible into war-steamers; and if we never have an occasion or an opportunity to prove that idea is not well founded, we shall be just as well off as if it were really so.

My friend from Kentucky says that he hopes we shall never have a chance to make the experiment. I hope so too. But if you are going to keep up these steamers, I do pray that you will not depart from the very idea to which they owe their origin; that is, that they are capable of being converted into vessels-of-war whenever that may be requisite. If it were not for that idea the system would never have been adopted, and these great lines of steamers would never have been established. The aid which the Government has extended to them would never have been given if it had not been based upon the supposition that the vessels thus employed and thus brought into the service by the use of money from the National Treasury, were convertible into vessels-of-war. If you give up that idea; if you abandon it to-day, you cannot justify this system before the country, and it will not stand. If you abandon the idea you must abandon the system; for the people of the country will never consent that the National Treasury shall be drawn upon to such an enormous amount upon an idea which is so utterly fallacious. If you abandon that principle in regard to this line, you virtually abandon it for all; because, if it is good for one line it is good for the whole; and if it is not good for the whole it is not good for any. If you abandon it in regard to this line, you abandon the whole foundation on which the steam marine exists.

I take it that these steamers are very much like the grants of public lands for railroads; they are a part of "manifest destiny." The manifest destiny of this country is to give lands to the West for railroads, and to establish mail-steamers for the different parts of the country; and I think it is the part of wisdom to bow to manifest destiny. I see that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] is not in his seat, and therefore I shall not trespass further on the subject of manifest destiny. If we are to have this line, let us adhere to the idea on which the system was started.

Mr. MALLORY. I hope this amendment will be adopted. The peculiar views of the Senator from New Hampshire, in relation to the Navy, may be judged of very correctly by the interrogatory he puts, of what utility is the expenditure of ten millions for the Navy? He assumes that to be the expenditure. With his views, no one can be surprised that he should like the idea of attaching all the steam lines to the Navy, and counting the expense of them under the head of Navy expenditures. It is that practice which has grown up among us—which has swelled the expenditures of the Navy, apparently to so enormous an amount. The Navy proper does not derive any benefit from the practice. Now, in reply to the honorable Senator from Maryland, as to whether this amendment should be adopted, I would remark briefly, that this clause in the contracts for mail-steamers, has been uniformly put in under the presumption that these vessels, when constructed, would be fit for war purposes. I know of no other war purpose than to fight the battles of the country on the high seas. I suppose that is the meaning of war purposes when applied to vessels. Well, the honorable Senator asks, what motive can exist for striking out this provision when it has been inserted in other contracts? As I understood him, he attributed it to the idea that the South was to have weaker vessels than the North. He seems to assume the fact, that because vessels are to be built for war purposes, they must necessarily be stronger than they would, if there was no such requisition; and that, if the clause be stricken out, the vessels to be constructed will necessarily be weaker. Now, that is all an assumption; because there is not one single vessel which has been constructed under these contracts, that is, at this day, fit for war purposes. I might appeal to every officer of our Navy—to the three old Commodores who are at the head of different naval bureaus in this city, to state the fact, whether they consider any one of those vessels fit for war purposes; or whether, if they were turned over to the Government to-morrow, there would not be a necessity for expending hundreds of thousands of dollars before a single battery could be put on board of them. This clause introduced into our contracts has induced an immense expenditure. It is the reason which is given for the expenditure of a greater amount of money. There is the shadow, but not a particle of substance in it. We have a steam-ship running on a most dangerous route, performing a great deal of sea service, making semi-monthly trips from Charleston to Cuba. That steamer was not constructed for war purposes; but it has met with fewer accidents than any ocean steamer afloat. It has probably carried as many passengers in the same time, and in as comfortable a manner, as any other steamer afloat. Yet, it was not built for war purposes. When I speak of war purposes, I have reference to warfare as it is carried on by maritime nations. I do not speak of those guns that are put on board every vessel for the protection of the passengers and commerce; but when I speak of the war purposes of vessels, I refer to their adaptability for warfare, as it is carried on by other nations.

It is a gratuitous assumption to say that $100,000 must necessarily be expended under this bill because that sum is mentioned in the bill. The bill requires that the Postmaster General shall make the contract on the best terms for the Government, not exceeding $100,000. Unless he is recreant to his duty, he will not set out with the assumption that he is to expend the whole of that amount. If that is to be so, then the restrictions of the bill impose no restraint, and might as well be stricken out. But he is to make a contract on the best terms to the Government, and $100,000 is the limitation which he cannot exceed. When he gives due notice for bids for this route, he fixes himself the character of the vessel. He determines what is to be the strength of the vessel. By striking out the clause requiring the vessel to be adapted for war purposes, he will be unembarrassed by a thousand offers which he would otherwise receive for machinery to be constructed below the water-line, and other things necessary in war-steamers. If you retain the clause, persons who construct engines, and new systems of paddles, and steam machinery, will make proposals more with reference to war purposes than to speed or the accommodation of passengers or the carrying of the mails. By striking out the clause you will have a vessel actually stronger than if you require one adapted to war purposes, because if a vessel is built for war she is strengthened in particular parts—her beams, and her knees, and other parts will be strengthened for the support of a battery. That is a perfectly useless expense for a vessel calculated for the transportation of passengers and the mails alone.

The vessels which have been constructed under previous contracts have never been tried in actual warfare. Reference has been made to the British steamers. The British steamers which bring the mails to this country are not war-steamers. No such design has been entertained in regard to them. British war-steamers, as they are now constructed, have their engines below the water line, and are, generally speaking, propellers. Under this proposed contract, whoever undertakes it will be called upon to specify the size of the steamer. It is limited to not less than eight hundred tons, which is sufficiently small to enable a vessel to navigate the dangerous coast of the Gulf.

Mr. HALE. I want to ask the Senator if he is correct in saying that the contract made by the British Government with the Cunard line does not prescribe that they shall be convertible into war-vessels; and whether they are not liable to be turned over to the admiralty at any moment?

Mr. MALLORY. I do not undertake to say what the contract may be, but I say what the fact is. The Cunard steamers are not adapted to war purposes; but the British Navy are constructed of an entirely different class of vessels for war purposes—steam propellers. I say furthermore, that if the opinions of experienced men in their profession be worth anything—if the opinions of old naval commanders were to be taken by this body, we should come to the conclusion that these vessels are not fit for anything in naval warfare but the transportation of troops, and as dispatch vessels. Now, for the transportation of troops and dispatch vessels you want an entirely different class of vessels. These steamers will not be fit for war purposes, strictly speaking; they will not be adapted to naval warfare, and therefore I say there is no necessity for having a clause in the contract requiring them to be adapted for war purposes. The expenditure of money on account of that clause is entirely useless, and for an object which will never be obtained.

I am in favor of this bill; I am in favor of this route; I am in favor of getting it at the very lowest terms—of expending the money in the most economical manner, and putting the money which would have to be paid under a contract having a clause requiring the vessels to be adapted for war purposes, to strengthen the vessel for passengers and freight where it should be strengthened.

Mr. BADGER. I do not mean to enter into the discussion in regard to this bill, though I am decidedly in favor of it, and as decidedly opposed to striking out the provision which is now sought to be stricken from the bill. But I wish to say a word or two in reference to a matter which the Senator from New Hampshire has, I think, somewhat unnecessarily dragged into this discussion, with regard to the Navy estimates, and the report of the Secretary of the Navy. The honorable Senator says he does not know what the naval expenditures are at this time; but that, some years ago, when he turned his attention to that matter, they were from eight to ten millions of dollars per annum, and that they had been regularly increasing since. He said further, that the Secretary proposed to make some division, or separation, or classification, in order that the expenditures of the Navy might not appear as large as they really were. Now, I find that for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1851, the actual expenditures which were made under the Navy Department, and which, therefore, in the aggregate, would appear to be proper to be counted as naval disbursements, amounted to $8,987,000; and in this sum is included, for steam mail service, $1,302,000—leaving out the fractions. So that, taking out that expenditure, which is an amount of money paid solely for defraying the expense for the transportation of the mail by steam-vessels, the expenditures of the Navy for that year would be about $7,600,000.

Now, what is proposed in the report of the honorable gentleman at the head of the Navy Department? Not, by an arrangement, or separation, to make the expenses of the Navy proper appear less than they truly are, but, by separating from the proper and appropriate expenses of that Department the $1,302,000, now charged to that Department, which are really expended for the transportation of the mails of the United States, to make the proper naval expenditures of the Government appear what they truly are. That is all.

I beg now to say a word upon the subject of striking out this clause of the bill. I think, with my friend from Maryland, that no reason has yet been assigned why the provision should be stricken out. What he has said is true. As a general rule, the maximum mentioned in an act of Congress for which a service is to be performed, may be set down as the sum at which the service will be contracted for. That, I think, is almost so uniformly the case, that it may now be taken for granted. Then the question is reduced to this: whether we shall obtain a vessel adequate to the present purposes for which we want her, with the additional advantage of being capable, in the event of necessity, of being applied to war purposes; or whether we shall have a vessel without this latter advantage? For my part, I can see no reason why the change which is proposed should be made. Let us have the vessels of the stipulated size; let us have them to answer the purposes of transporting the mails; and let us have them also so made, that, in the event of necessity, they may be adapted to war purposes.

It has been said, with a good deal of confidence, by the Senator from Florida, that none of the steam-vessels that have been built under these contracts, containing precisely this provision, are fit for war-steamers; and that if three old commodores were selected, they would all concur in that opinion. If they were selected, and if they were able to concur in that opinion, I should not think it was strictly a logical sequitur that the opinion was right. These steamers were constructed under the direction of the Navy Department, under the supervision of naval constructors, so as to be strong enough, and adapted to answer the ends of war-steamers, in the event of necessity.

Mr. MALLORY. I would ask the Senator from North Carolina whether there is not on the files of the Navy Department now, a report from some of our naval officers, stating that these vessels were not so constructed?

Mr. BADGER. The honorable Senator must go somewhere else to find out what is on file in the Navy Department. I do not know what is there; but the Secretary of the Navy does. These vessels have been constructed under the superintendence of that class of officers, whose special business it is to know how a vessel should be constructed for war purposes. Commodores are not naval constructors. You do not select a sea officer for the purpose of superintending and directing the arrangement of a ship in its construction for war purposes. That belongs to a particular mechanical branch (if I may use the expression) of the naval service.

These steamers have been constructed, as for war purposes, under the best and most capable supervision of the proper officers attached to the Navy Department. Now, until I see one of them tried, or until I hear that one of them has been tried, and been found incapable of answering this end, I shall presume that they are fit for war purposes.

We know that improvements in war vessels very seldom originate with military or naval men. They come from other quarters. We know, also, that there is generally a professional prejudice against every improvement that is made in the construction of vessels for war purposes. It seems to belong, somehow or other, to all professions and employments of life. It is said, that when Harvey discovered the circulation of the blood—and my friend from Arkansas [Mr. BORLAND] can correct me if I am mistaken—there were scarcely three physicians in England above the age of forty years at that time who believed in the existence of that discovery as he announced it. They held on with pertinacity to their old notions. So it has been with regard to this system of steam defense. At first, I think it was generally opposed. There was very little consideration given to it by what are called the "old salts."

Mr. CASS. "Old fogies." [Laughter.]

Mr. BADGER. Yes, sir; "old fogies." They had fought battles, won victories in sail vessels, and they took it for granted that these things could not be done in any other way. They spoke of steamers contemptuously, and said that instead of having ships carried by sails, and masts, and all that, a steamer was nothing but a vessel propelled by a tea-kettle of hot water. All these improvements have had to go through this ordeal. I believe these vessels will be found—if we shall ever have occasion to test them—fit for war purposes, and to be easily convertible into vessels fit for war purposes. But, at all events, I do not see why we should make any alteration in this bill to deviate from what has been the common course of Congress on the subject.

Mr. HUNTER. As the Senator from Louisiana is anxious to have a vote taken upon the bill, as I do not wish to protract this discussion, and as the subject can be discussed when it comes up again—although I moved the amendment—I will forbear saying what I intended to say in support of it. I will allow the vote to be taken without saying a single word upon the amendment. The question can be debated hereafter on other bills. The Senator from North Carolina believes that the system of defense by war steamers should be connected with the Post Office arrangements. I do not. The subject, however, can be postponed to another occasion. I will, therefore, say nothing about it now.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to state the reasons which will control my vote against the amendment of the Senator from Virginia. It was my purpose to have spoken upon this question, but I do not propose to go into a discussion upon it now. I think there is a distinction which may be drawn between the Senators who have spoken upon both sides of this matter. I am opposed to making any more steamers and connecting them with the Navy, and I am also, at the same time, opposed to making steamers to navigate the Gulf, the most dangerous of any navigation that we have, which will not be as strong as any vessels that may be built for naval purposes. If you keep in the clause proposed to be stricken out, it does not propose to connect the vessels with the Navy; it only proposes to make them as strong as naval vessels are made. It does not, like the old bills, propose to connect these vessels with and make them part of the Navy. For that reason I shall vote to keep it in.

Mr. BORLAND. I am in favor of the proposed amendment. I have listened very attentively to the arguments in favor of retaining that portion of the bill in its present form, and I have heard nothing that satisfies me of the propriety of doing so. It proceeds, it seems to me, upon what I have always considered a fiction, that the vessels in which we are carrying the ocean mails were to be so constructed as to be easily convertible into war purposes. I have looked into this matter, as well as I have been able, for sometime past, and I agree fully with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. MALLORY], that there is no reason for believing, but every reason for rejecting, the idea that they are fit for war steamers, or that that idea was present in the minds of the constructors. I never did believe it; but it was assumed, and necessarily assumed, as a foundation, and the only one upon which the system could rest, that it was to be a part of the navy. Otherwise, it was a clear contribution to individual speculation, to build up the fortunes of individuals by granting them monopolies, and paying them for the purpose of accepting those monopolies at the hand of the Government.

The honorable Senator from Maryland proceeded, in support of the bill, and in opposition to the amendment, on the ground that it was important on account of the danger which these vessels might encounter in the Gulf—not those of navigation, but the danger of encountering some force of an enemy—that they should be in a condition to defend themselves. Why, this bill does not propose to put the vessels in a condition to defend themselves against any attack. They will be as liable to attack and as defenseless with this provision in the bill, as if they were built only for commercial purposes. They are to carry no armament. The idea is, that they shall be built in such a way that they may, if Government requires them, be taken for war purposes, and without the expenditure of more money, be convertible into war steamers.

If we sustain the bill in its present form, we recognize, what I consider, a fiction, that these vessels are, or can be made by any legislation of ours, of such a character as to be easily convertible into war steamers. It is wise and proper for those who believe that to be true to vote for the provision as it stands in the bill; but inasmuch as I believe it all to be a fiction, I cannot vote for retaining it.

There is another objection to the bill. It provides that the vessels shall be so constructed as to be fit for war purposes. Now, what is the provision under which that shall be done? We require that it shall be done; we do not carry out the idea, as in those other contracts, and designate the mode in which the thing shall be accomplished, but simply require that it shall be done, and who is to do it. The vessels are not connected with the navy, and therefore it could not be done under the supervision of the Navy Department. Shall the Postmaster General undertake to construct a naval vessel—a war steamer? I apprehend that it would be imposing on him a duty which he has neither the means at his disposal to perform, nor the competency to do so if he had the means. If that is to be retained, the bill requires to be further amended, in my opinion, as to how it shall be done, and the manner in which, and under whose supervision, the vessels shall be constructed.

Mr. CASS. Does the bill contain a provision that the United States may take the vessel, after it is made, for war purposes?

Mr. CHASE. It contains nothing of that sort.

Mr. CASS. Then what is the use of the provision?

Mr. PRATT. The vessels will be made stronger if it is retained.

Mr. CASS. You have a maximum provided for in the bill. You are not to exceed $100,000 a year. You will not give that. As a matter of course, you are to give the lowest price. Now, if the man expends $50,000 in order to make the vessel fit for war purposes, he will charge more for profits; and if, as I am told, there has already been an offer to build the vessels for $75,000—which shows the propriety of this competition—it will bring the expenditures down so as to reduce the price, perhaps, to $60,000. Why say, then, for "war purposes," if it is not for war purposes? Build it as strong as you please. I agree with every word which has been said upon that subject; but do not let us go out of the way unnecessarily, and assume what we do not intend to do at all.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to say a word, and but one word. I care very little how this is disposed of; but if these vessels are made as strong and as heavy as you make a war vessel in the navy-yards of the United States, you have two results. In the first place you will have less speed and a greater draught of water; and that draught of water, if you are going to enter Tampico, may be a very serious inconvenience. I sometime ago asked a gentleman of some considerable experience in this business; how it was that a ton of shipping made for the steam service of the United States cost so much more than a ton of shipping, made in the best manner, in a private yard? His answer was substantially this: "If you could see the work going on, you would comprehend it. The proportion of metal which is put in a ship like the 'Mississippi,' or the 'San Jacinto,' is about twofold greater in a Government vessel than in one of those well-made Collins steamers." Now, if you are going to have a vessel of that description, I think you will defeat your own objects. But still, it is a matter which I have not at heart. I am quite willing to vote for this line, and take it with this qualification.

Mr. RUSK. If you put it down to the lowest bidder, and get such a contractor for that line as you have for the public printing, your object will be defeated.

The amendment was agreed to, there being, on a division—ayes 19, noes 15.

Mr. BORLAND. I offer the following amendment to the bill, as an additional section:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be required to establish a daily mail, by a regular line, from Louisville, Kentucky, by the way of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, to New Orleans, supplying the several post offices on the way, in the manner prescribed by existing laws and regulations; and that the service hereby provided for, shall be procured under the general laws and regulations in respect to mail service, by open advertisement and contract, provided the expense shall not exceed $100,000.

I have offered that amendment to the bill, in accordance with the views I expressed while speaking at first upon the question. Great stress was laid, by those who favored the bill, on the importance of regular and proper lines of communication between our country and foreign ports. I agree with all they said on that subject; but I deem it equally, and more important, that we should have a proper line of communication between different portions of our own country; and those who favor the bill, as we have it before us, I think cannot well object to this amendment, when it is simply extending the line of communication which they propose. The bill provides for a regular and efficient mail communication between New Orleans and Vera Cruz. This connects that with a regular line, from the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, to New Orleans. It is a natural and necessary connection; and I cannot see why we should reject the one, if we adopt the other. I have stated before, the difficulties which we have in getting the Post Office Department to establish this line. The expense has been objected to; although, two years ago, an offer was made in this city to the Post Office Department, to carry a mail line from Louisville to New Orleans, supplying the offices by the way, for $40,000 a year. It was rejected; it was said to be too much. Now, we have agreed to give as much as $100,000, for carrying the mail three times a month between New Orleans and Vera Cruz. This proposes to carry a daily mail from Louisville, Kentucky, by the way of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, to New Orleans, for an amount within $100,000; supplying the wants of a country, more extensive and more important in every respect, and certainly commending itself to our favorable consideration more strongly than any other I have heard brought before Congress this session.

Mr. CHASE. I hope my friend from Arkansas will be kind enough to accept an amendment to that amendment, to make the termination of the line Pittsburg, instead of Louisville.

Mr. BORLAND. I would have no objection to amending it in that respect; but I exclude Pittsburg and Cincinnati, for the reason that they have daily lines established on that route.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is a daily line from Cincinnati to Louisville.

Mr. BORLAND. And from Louisville to Cincinnati and Pittsburg. It is only extending to the lower Ohio and Mississippi, down to New Orleans, what the upper Ohio now has from Pittsburg to Louisville. It keeps up the line of communication, and I cannot see, for my life, why there should be any objection to it.

Mr. CHASE. There is a daily line, I know, between Pittsburg and Cincinnati. I was not certain whether they carried the mail through the whole extent of the line. I now understand that they do, and of course shall offer no amendment.

Mr. RUSK. I am not opposed to any proposition of that description; and if the honorable Senator will come forward at the proper time and designate the sort of boats in which he proposes that the mail shall be carried, I shall be prepared to vote upon it. He does not get any advantage by offering this amendment at all. This is not the place for it. It may embarrass this bill, but will not accomplish his object.

Mr. BORLAND. I am unwilling to embarrass the bill, for I am in favor of it; but I see no other opportunity to accomplish my object. This is a crying inconvenience; we are suffering under it daily; complaints come up from the Mississippi valley every day to Senators and Representatives from that region. I know the honorable Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] is in constant receipt of appeals to him, both from his Legislature and constituents, to aid in something of that sort. I think this is a good opportunity to do it, and I do not see that there is any necessity for the alteration proposed by the Senator from Texas, at least in my view of the case. There is none, because I would not prescribe the size or condition of the boats. We have struck out a portion of this bill, because it prescribed conditions in regard to the kind of steamers. I have based my amendment on the idea which I have carried out through all my remarks.

Mr. CHASE. I hope the amendment will be agreed to. It seems to me that if Senators would consider the great inconvenience under which the Western cities and towns labor in consequence of the want of river mails, they would not hesitate to grant this reasonable request. I shall not go into the inconveniences in detail, because I am unwilling to detain the Senate; but I assure Senators that they are very great.

The bill which it is proposed thus to amend commands my support upon the simple ground that it provides for a necessary mail route in the ordinary mode; and the amendment which is proposed by the Senator from Arkansas is nothing more nor less than extending this line to the port of Louisville. It is unreasonable, it seems to me, to ask that the details of the construction of the river steam-boats should be provided for in the amendment, when everybody knows the character of those boats. The Department surely may be left to its discretion in this matter.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is true, as my friend from Arkansas says, that this is a question in which we feel a very deep interest; and I am very sure that I should not acquit myself to my constituents, or to my own views, of what is due to the public interests, if I did not give my aid and cooperation to the proposition which he submits. But I have no disposition to embarrass any proposition of any Senator here; and as some gentlemen think this is calculated to have that effect, I would suggest to my friend whether it would not be best for him to withdraw his amendment, and let us throw ourselves upon the justice, upon the enlarged and liberal view of the Senate, in a separate proposition; and if we cannot demonstrate to every Senator here, that it is due to that portion of the country, that it is due to patriotism, that it is due to the convictions of justice and propriety, that we should have this service, I do not want it. I think that, with the aid of my friends from Arkansas and Ohio, I can satisfy every Senator here that our interests have been neglected, that our rights have been disregarded; and, with that conviction on my mind, I respectfully ask my friend from Arkansas to withdraw his proposition, and let us stand on our own merits. If we have not merit enough to sustain us, let us go down. I am willing to trust it to the generosity, to the liberality, and to the justice of the Senate. Let this proposition go for the present, and let us fight on our own hook.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If I thought that we could get an opportunity of testing the matter upon its merits, according to the suggestion of my friend from Tennessee, I would very cheerfully go with him; but I am afraid that if we let this opportunity slip, we shall never get another. The day is rapidly coming, if it has not already arrived, when there must be a daily communication to New Orleans from the mouth of the Ohio, in large boats, and thence spreading out through Illinois, by railroad, and up the Cumberland and Tennessee, by other steamboats, of a smaller size, if we cannot get a railroad communication. I have been trying for years to get something like a post office established near the mouth of the Ohio, which should be an office of distribution, in order to throw the letters for the western part of Kentucky through that country, instead of going to Nashville and Louisville for distribution, and thus delaying them for days. I admit that, if we could get at this in a separate bill, and have it attended to, and make provision for a large class of boats up to the termination of the Illinois railroad at Cairo, and small boats above that, it might be better; but if you adopt the amendment, it seems to me that the Postmaster General will be forced, of necessity, to make regulations which will accomplish these objects, and will have the means given him to make the proper arrangements upon the subject. When you require the duty, it communicates the means necessary to perform and execute it; and I think, if the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas is adopted, the Postmaster General will have the means granted for the purpose of executing these objects which I know, from years of experience, to be so essentially necessary to promote the correspondence of my section of the country. We suffer, to an enormous extent, the evils which I have mentioned, in having our letters sent to Nashville and Louisville for distribution; whereas, if we could have something like this communication, and an office established near the mouth of the Ohio, which is the nearest point of the Mississippi for a large portion of Kentucky, in communication with New Orleans, our great commercial emporium, it would be of immense value. These are the reasons which induce me to vote now for this amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. An appeal has been made to me by my friend from Tennessee, to withdraw my amendment. I am very unwilling to resist an appeal of that sort, coming from any quarter, and especially from a quarter in which so much interest is felt for the success of the very measure I have proposed. But I have been like the honorable Senator from Kentucky in that respect: I have been waiting so long; and when I made this proposition before, I was told, as I have been on this occasion, that it was the wrong time, and the wrong place. I despair of ever finding the proper place, if this be not the proper time and place. I know the very natural desire which the Senator from Louisiana, and all those who favor the bill—and I join in that desire—have to establish the line which he proposes. I go most cordially and earnestly for it; but that desire cannot be as strong as that which we who live in the Mississippi valley must feel in the establishment of the line which I propose. We have been put to this inconvenience so long, that we have become sore under what we consider the neglect and injustice of the Government. It is under that feeling that I have brought forward this proposition. No one pretends to advance any objection to it. I do not hear any objection urged to the measure itself; the only objection is, that it is brought forward at the wrong time. Here is a growing evil, which it is proposed to remedy, now we have an opportunity to put the remedy in this bill, which is about to go through, and go to the other House, and probably get through there in a short time. If we fail to do it now, we shall have to take up the matter from the beginning, go through all the regular forms of legislation, and be held to the rule of following the Calendar, and the close of the session will come before we have accomplished anything towards relieving ourselves of this crying evil. For these reasons, I do not feel that I should be performing my duty by withdrawing the proposition. I think it very likely, from the indications that I have seen, that it will be voted down, but my sense of duty will not permit me to withdraw it.

Mr. BROOKE. I would suggest to the Senator from Arkansas to increase the amount that he has specified in his amendment. I have been informed by persons who are conversant with the business of mail transportation that a daily mail cannot be carried from New Orleans to Louisville for that sum. It will require fourteen boats at a cost of from $15,000 to $20,000 each; and those boats could not depend much upon passengers, because, being compelled to stop at various places on the river, they would necessarily be delayed, and passengers would seek their passages in other boats. I wish the Senator would withdraw the amendment, because I feel as much interest in it as he does; and I am unwilling to risk a measure of such vast importance to the Mississippi valley as an amendment to another independent measure.

Mr. BORLAND. I would say to the Senator from Mississippi that I fixed the sum of $100,000 for this reason: As far back as 1847, in response to an advertisement of the Post Office Department, the proposal was made to take the contract at $100,000; and since that time, to my own knowledge, a competent and responsible individual has come to Washington and offered to the Department to perform it for $40,000, and give ample security for the faithful performance of the duty. But since it seems to be the wish of those who are as much interested in this matter as I am, and who desire it as earnestly as I do, I will withdraw the amendment.

The bill as amended was then reported to the Senate.

Mr. ATCHISON asked for a division of the question on concurring in the amendments made in Committee of the Whole, so as to separate the last—viz: to strike out "to war purposes and"—from the others.

The question being taken on all the amendments but the last, they were concurred in.

The question then recurred on the amendment to strike out the words "to war purposes and."

Mr. ATCHISON. I ask for the yeas and nays upon concurring in that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Borland, Bradbury, Brodhead, Brooke, Cass, Chase, Clarke, Davis, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fish, Geyer, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, King, Mallory, Mason, Miller, Sumner, Underwood, Wade, and Walker—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Clemens, Dawson, Douglas, Downs, Foot, Gwin, Hale, Hamlin, Jones of Tennessee, Morton, Norris, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Smith, Soule, and Spruance—20.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SOULE. I move to amend the bill by adding at the end of it the words, "not exceeding six months," so that it will read, "the same to be ready within the shortest time, not exceeding six months."

Mr. WALKER. I am inclined to think that that amendment ought not to be made; for if competition is to be invited, this may defeat the entire object, for there may be but one party, and that the party originally named in the bill, who can possibly be ready in six months. Hence this may defeat the object which we have in view in inviting competition.

Mr. SOULE. I withdraw the amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and then

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 31, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CLARK] to close debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the special order—the homestead bill.

Mr. COBB. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to submit an amendment to House bill No. 7—the homestead bill—merely with the view of having it printed and laid upon the table, so that members may have it before them when it is proposed to the bill. I hope there may be no objection. I will not detain the House by asking that it be read.

There was no objection, and the amendment was ordered to be printed, and laid upon the table.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to introduce a joint resolution in reference to an entirely local matter. It will occupy very little time.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am very sorry to object. There are many of us who want to introduce resolutions. I hope that an hour or two, by unanimous consent, may be devoted to the reception of resolutions.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I trust that the gentleman will not interpose objection. It is with regard to a matter entirely local, but of much interest to my constituents.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Well, I will not object; but I would, however, like an hour to be devoted to the reception of reports of committees.

Mr. HENDRICKS then introduced a joint resolution "Construing an act in relation to military land warrants," approved August 14, 1848; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. H. If there be objection, I will ask that it be referred; if not, that it may be acted upon.

There being objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOUSTON. We waste much time every morning by endeavoring to get business in out of order. Now, if we will all agree to let business come up in order, we will accomplish all we desire, and not consume half of the time that we now do in endeavoring to press in business out of order. We now, in truth and fact, accomplish nothing.

Mr. McCORKLE. I would inquire if it is in order to read lectures under the rules? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not lecturing the House. I only ask that we shall proceed in the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already announced the regular order of business to be the proposition made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. CLARK], to close debate on the homestead bill in two hours after the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall have resumed its consideration.

Mr. SWEETSER. I move to lay that resolution upon the table.

Mr. CLARK. I will (as the indication seems to be a desire to debate this question at length, which I did not anticipate,) withdraw my resolution.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask, then, that reports of committees be called for. The regular business in order, I know, is the bill in relation to punishments in the Navy; and, as the printing of that bill has been called for, I hope that it will not be pressed for a day or two, but that it will be informally passed over.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. To that I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] asks that, by unanimous consent, the House will pass over informally the regular order of business—which is the motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Jones]—to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the naval bill was rejected, and receive reports from the standing committees. Is that the wish of the House? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. STANLY. I should like to know if the proposition is to take up the report from the Committee on Public Lands, where we left off, and discuss that an hour, or receive reports generally, which will give rise to no debate?

Mr. KING, of New York. Let us have them in their order.

The SPEAKER. The proposition was to proceed to call the committees for reports.

Mr. STANLY. Did we not stop upon the last call of the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands, making a grant of lands for a railroad? What is the use of proceeding to call for reports? We cannot get in any other reports.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY], that we must rely upon the generosity of the Committee on Public Lands to let us pass on, and get to other committees. We cannot progress until we do; and I hope, therefore, that the House will pursue such a course as will let us get through.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House to pass by the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill providing for punishments in the Navy was defeated the other day? The Chair hears no objection that it shall be passed by informally, and come up in its order hereafter.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. Will it come up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It will.

NAVIGATION OF THE OHIO RIVER.

Mr. EVANS. I rise to a privileged question. The House, yesterday, on motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL], not now in his seat, passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be and is hereby requested to cause to be communicated to this House the original manuscript copy of the report (now on file in the office of Colonel Long, of the Topographical Engineers) of Captain Thomas C. Crum, on the best mode of improving the navigation of the Ohio river at the falls at Louisville, made 3d February, 1844, with the original maps accompanying the same, or a true copy of the said report from the said original, and certified by Colonel Long to be true."

Mr. E. I move to reconsider the vote on the adoption of the resolution. I do not propose to discuss it, as the gentleman from Kentucky is not now in his seat. I make the motion to reconsider, because the form of the resolution is unusual. No officer ever has been called upon to certify, on oath, an official document to this House. I will not discuss the motion now, because the mover of the resolution is not in his seat. I only make the motion because I may have no other opportunity.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, at a subsequent part of the day, said: I rise to a privileged question. During my absence this morning, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] moved to reconsider the resolution passed at my instance on yesterday; and at his suggestion I desire to strike out the words "under oath."

Mr. EVANS. I withdraw my motion to reconsider.

There was no objection, and the words indicated were stricken from the resolution.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. Reports are in order from the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion by Mr. COBB, ordered that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the following memorials and petitions, and that they do lie upon the table, viz:

A joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama, asking for an appropriation of public lands, to aid in the establishment of an hospital for insane persons, &c.;

The petition of citizens of Wyandott county, Ohio, relative to lot No. 7, section 29, township 2, range 14 east, in the Wyandott reservation;

The petition of citizens of Georgia, praying for a grant of land to the Alabama and Georgia railroad;

The joint memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama, asking for a graduation of the price of public lands in said State;

The petition of William J. Ross, of William Gantny, of the trustees of the East Alabama Female College, and of John Ashburn Ragan;

The petition of Illinois, asking for an extension of the time for which preemptions are granted; and

The petition of William Nelson, of Morgan county, Alabama.

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That leave be granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of the said William Nelson, for the purpose of reference to one of the Executive Departments.

On motion by Mr. COBB, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Frederick Dent, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of citizens of Wyandott county, Ohio, reported a bill to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the sale of certain lands in the States of Ohio and Michigan, ceded by the Wyandott tribe of Indians, and for other purposes;" approved 3d of March, 1843.

The bill was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. COBB. In accordance with the petition of citizens of Wyandott county, asking that the unsold lands in the Wyandott reservation be brought into market, the Committee on Public Lands have reported this bill. I desire to call the attention of the House for a moment to a few facts. When this reservation was made, the General Government required the property of the Indians in this reservation to be valued. The valuation, I am prepared to say, was excessively high, and the General Government authorized a sale of that tract of land at a less price than the valuation. A number of persons in that section of country petition that the land be sold at $2 50 per acre. The committee have had the matter under consideration, and directed this bill for the sale of the lands to be reported. The representative from that section of the country told me that the timber has been cut off those lands and sold, and that they are thereby much depreciated in value. Why not have this bill put upon its passage, and bring these lands into market? The condition in which these lands now are make them a great nuisance to the citizens of that section of the country. If the lands were sold at public auction, they would probably bring $10 or $15 per acre. The bill I have just reported, was prepared by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to effect that object. If the House will pass it, these lands will be brought into market at once. The bill is a short one, and I desire to have it read through, with the view of putting it upon its passage. The committee were unanimous in recommending the passage of the bill.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I have no objection at all to this bill being put upon its passage, more than any other. But I see it is inevitable that if the Committee on Public Lands are allowed to put all their bills upon their passage, as the gentleman from Alabama now proposes to do with this one, the balance of the committees will not be called during this Congress, and I therefore move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it be printed.

Mr. EDGERTON. I appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky to withdraw that motion. There is no real necessity for the reference. It is a very simple bill, authorizing the sale of certain lands in the State of Ohio. There can be no possible objection to it on the part of anybody.

Mr. STANTON. The Committee on Public Lands is the only committee that has reported for several weeks, and the reason is, that they endeavor to put all the bills they report upon their passage.

Mr. STANLY. Is not this discussion contrary to order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is laboring under a mistake.

Mr. STANLY. Is it not out of order, under the order adopted by the House?

The SPEAKER. The only order taken by the House was to pass, informally, the other business, and to call the committees in their regular order.

Mr. STANLY. I had not so understood it.

Mr. EDGERTON. If there could be any objection to this bill, I would not urge its passage now, but there can possibly be no objection to it.

The question was then taken on referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, on a division, there were—ayes 64, noes 37; no quorum voting.

Mr. ORR demanded tellers, which were ordered; and Messrs. ORR and WATKINS appointed.

Mr. COBB. I have no particular interest in this matter, but I am certain, and the committee are satisfied, that it is for the interest of the Government that this land should be brought into the market.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama how much of this land remains unsold?

Mr. COBB. One thousand and sixty-three acres.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think there can be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. COBB. It is the wish of the delegate from that district, that these lands should be brought into the market.

Mr. EVANS. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands whether there is any report accompanying this bill?

Mr. COBB. No, sir; there is no report, but it is accompanied by a letter from the Commissioner of Public Lands.

Mr. EVANS. I wish to know where this land is?

Mr. COBB. It is the Wyandott reservation, in the State of Ohio.

Mr. EDGERTON. I will state, for the information of the gentleman from Maryland, and also for the information of the House, that this land is in Wyandott county, Ohio, and was ceded to the United States by the treaty with the Wyandotts, in 1842. There were improvements upon the land, which were appraised, and sold to the United States at the appraised value. The lands were offered for sale at public auction, but the improvements had been appraised so high that they were not sold, neither have they been sold since, except in limited quantities. Since the treaty of cession to the United States, the improved lands have been occupied by squatters. The fences and the timber have been taken off, and yet the lands will not sell, neither will they sell at the appraised value. The Commissioner of Public Lands being apprised of the whole circumstances recommends the sale as a matter of interest to the country, and it is now proposed to offer the lands for sale at public auction, like any other property, provided that they shall not be sold for less than $2 50 an acre.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I would beg the gentleman from Ohio, when he has done, to move the previous question, and let us decide this question one way or the other.

Mr. EDGERTON. If the gentleman from Maryland will yield me the floor for that purpose, I will do it.

Mr. EVANS. I never wish to throw difficulties in the way of any bill, but I have seen so many instances in this House where wrong has been done, and where private rights have been interfered with, by this hasty action, that I must object to it. There has not been enough said as yet to satisfy me that I ought to vote for the bill. I will, however, call the previous question, and then other gentlemen can vote for the bill if they please, but I shall certainly vote against it.

Mr. SWEETSER. I wish to say a word or two in reference to these lands.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I submit that debate is not in order after the previous question has been moved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the previous question to have been moved.

Mr. EVANS. I moved it, but I will now withdraw the demand.

Mr. SWEETSER. I desire to say that these lands, to which my colleague refers, are within the range of my professional practice. I have known the country for more than thirty years, and am familiar with all the facts which my colleague states. I was among the persons who attended the sale of these Wyandott lands soon after they were ceded by treaty to the United States. They were withdrawn at that time for some reason which I did not understand. I am perfectly familiar with the present condition of the improvements which have been made upon those lands; and it seems to me that the interests of the Government, as well as the interests of the country where these lands are located, all conspire to make this measure expedient and necessary. I have no hesitation in saying, that if these lands were put up at auction, after reasonable notice had been given, they would bring their full value. They are in the very best part of Ohio, and are now in a condition to command as high a price as they probably will command for twenty years to come. I now move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered to be now put; and the question being put on referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the tellers (Messrs. ORR and WATKINS) reported—ayes 55, noes 70.

So the House refused to refer the bill.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and, having been engrossed, it was read the third time.

The question now being, Shall the bill pass?—

Mr. BRIGGS demanded the previous question; which was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was then taken, and the bill was passed.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Public Lands, then reported the following bills; which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed, viz:

A bill to authorize the school commissioner of fractional township No. 1, range 10 east, in Alabama, to locate one section of land for school purposes, in lieu of lands to be relinquished; and

A bill to authorize the States in which the sixteenth sections granted for school purposes lie, to relinquish such of those lands as may be comparatively valueless, or unfit for cultivation, and to select other lands in lieu thereof.

MEMPHIS AND CHARLESTON RAILROAD.

Mr. COBB. I regret that the fingers upon that clock point so nearly to the hour of one, for I have a very important bill to report to the House; and I wish we had more time to dispose of it. I ask the attention of the House while the bill is read. I ask that it may be read for information.

The bill having been read the first and second time by its title, was read through, as follows:

A BILL granting the right of way to the State of Alabama, and a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, to intersect the Charleston, Chattanooga, and Nashville railroads, in Alabama.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to the State of Alabama, for the construction of a railroad from Memphis, Tennessee, to intersect the Charleston, Chattanooga, and Nashville railroad, at a point in Jackson county, Alabama, with the right, also, to take necessary materials of earth, stones, timber, &c., for the construction thereof: Provided, That the right of way shall not exceed one hundred feet on each side of the length thereof, and a copy of the survey of said road, under the direction of the Legislature of said State, shall be forwarded to the proper local land offices respectively, and to the General Land Office at Washington city, within ninety days after the completion of the same.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, granted to the State of Alabama, for the purpose of aiding in constructing said road, every alternate section of land designated by even numbers, for six sections in width on each side of said road; but in case it shall appear that the United States have, when the line or route of said road is definitely fixed by the authority aforesaid, sold any part of any section hereby granted, or that the right of preemption has attached to the same, then it shall be lawful for any agent, or agents, to be appointed by the Governor of said State, to select, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose aforesaid, of the lands remaining to the United States in said sections, one half thereof in alternate parts, so far as may be practicable. And said agent or agents may, subject to the approval aforesaid, select from the lands of the United States most contiguous to the tier of sections aforesaid, and not more than fifteen miles from the line of said road on each side thereof, so much land in alternate sections, or parts of sections, as shall be equal to such lands as the United States have sold, or to which the right of preemption has attached as aforesaid, which lands being equal in quantity to one half of six sections in width on each side of said road, the State of Alabama shall have and hold to and for the use and purpose aforesaid, and said land shall be disposed of only as the construction of said road progresses, and shall be applied to no other purpose whatever.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the sections and parts of sections of land which by such grant shall remain to the United States within six miles on each side of said road, shall not be sold for less than double the minimum price of the public lands when sold.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted to the said State, shall be subject to the disposal of the Legislature thereof, for the purposes aforesaid, and no other; and the said Legislature be, and is hereby, authorized and required to dispose of the proceeds of the sales of said lands in the construction of said road, under such conditions, limitations, and restrictions, as will secure the benefits thereof to the people of said State, and the said road shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free from all toll or other charge, upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted to said State, shall be disposed of by said State only in manner following, that is to say: that a quantity of land not exceeding one hundred and twenty sections, and included within a continuous length of twenty miles of said road may be sold; and when the Governor of said State shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that said twenty continuous miles of said road is completed, then another like quantity of land hereby granted may be sold, and so from time to time, until said road is completed; and if said road is not completed within ten years, no further sales shall be made, and the land unsold shall revert to the United States.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the United States mail shall be transported over said road at such price as the Congress of the United States shall prescribe.

Mr. COBB. I deem it my duty to ask the attention of this House for five minutes, while I make a short statement in reference to this road.

Every man who is at all acquainted with the geography of the country, knows well that Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, is located upon the Mississippi river. Any man who is willing to trace the line of this railroad east, to connect with the Nashville and Charleston railroad, will see in a moment the necessity and importance of such a communication. To the Representatives from the State of Maine, who have been so formidably arrayed against the grant of lands to aid in the construction of railroads, I desire to say, "reflect for a moment upon the great national character of this road; that it is another of the great lines of railroad which is to connect the Mississippi valley with the great Northeast. A statement merely of the character of the country over which this railroad passes, is all that I intend to trespass upon the time and patience of this House, for the present, to give.

The road starts at Memphis, Tennessee, and is to be, when completed, about two hundred and eighty miles in length—I do not state precisely, but I think it is about that. From the State of Tennessee, it passes into Mississippi. And I will state for the benefit of those who may not be conversant with the state of things in that country, that although Mississippi is a land State, yet the land through which the railroad runs in that State, now belongs to the Chickasaw nation. When the land in that State was ceded to the Government, the Chickasaw nation reserved the proceeds of the sale of this land. It has most of it been sold under that reservation, and the rest belongs to them still. So, as a matter of course, no land can be taken from that State to aid in the construction of the road. I now follow the road to Alabama, where it strikes the Tennessee valley in one of the most fertile portions of our State, which has been in market for some forty or fifty years past, and nearly all of value has been sold. The timber, however, upon these lands may be valuable for some purposes. It then passes through this valley, and intersects the Nashville and Charleston Railroad, where it takes its turn round the point of the Cumberland Mountains. I could tell this House the exact number of acres which this road would get, but it would be trespassing upon their time and patience. I believe a question of so much importance has not escaped the notice and investigation of gentlemen here. I believe that when this bill comes up, there will scarcely be a man to vote for its reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I rely upon the intelligence of the members of this House to secure its passage. I believe that this is a question of so much importance, not only to the States through which the road passes, but to the whole country, that it must meet with the approbation of the House. I ask, will the House refer it? I trust not. If the question is not one which has merit enough to make it stand, let it go—let it be buried where it will certainly be, if referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. If it has not sufficient merit to demand immediate action, I do not ask that it shall be passed; but I desire that it shall now be put upon its trial. I tell this House and the country that if this bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it will be the last you will hear of it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Those of us who favor these measures are anxious to have some indication from the House of the course they intend to pursue in relation to these bills. I mean those bills granting alternate sections for the construction of railroads. If it is a fact that they are not to pass, then let us know it, and not continue this useless discussion upon them. I hope this indication will be given distinctly to us to-day. If it be a fact that a majority of this House think we have had debate enough upon these matters, and are willing to take bills that have been well-digested, and reported upon one system, by the Committee on Public Lands; if it be a fact that a majority of this House are ready to pass these bills without further delay or consumption of time, then the motion which I shall now make will be sustained by this House. I call, then, upon all those gentlemen who are friendly disposed towards this species of grant, to come up now and unite in sustaining the motion which I am about to make, which is to put the bill upon its passage, that you may either pass the bill or kill it at once.

Mr. COBB. It may be due to the House to state that this road is estimated to cost about $2,800,000, of which we have subscribed twenty-three hundred and odd thousand dollars. There will be ninety-two miles of this road in complete construction in the course of the year—I understand about the last of the year. So you can see we are in earnest about building it. This is all I think necessary to state in relation to this matter. The question of the propriety of granting the public lands for these purposes is one that has been thoroughly discussed in this House; and I am satisfied that to continue that discussion further, would only result in a useless consumption of time, and a waste of the people's money. I shall, therefore, not enter to any length upon the wisdom or justice of the action of this House in relation to this bill.

Mr. MEACHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I would be glad to accommodate my friend, but—

Mr. MEACHAM. I wish to know whether this bill has been printed? If not, how can we know anything about it, by only hearing it read by the Clerk?

Mr. COBB. I will state that this bill is a precise copy of the Missouri bill.

Mr. MEACHAM. That is not the question.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. MEACHAM. I wish to ask another question. How is it with the alternate sections?

Mr. JOHNSON. The alternate sections are allowed in this bill.

Mr. MEACHAM. How far on each side of the road?

Mr. JOHNSON. As I understand, they are allowed for fifteen miles.

Mr. MEACHAM. For six miles, certain? Mr. JOHNSON. Only for six miles certain, so far as the actual grant is concerned, but where a section happens to have been taken up, the appropriation thus lost may be secured within the limits of fifteen miles.

Mr. MEACHAM. Do you raise the price of the alternate sections after you have passed beyond six miles?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; we do not.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] has the floor. Will the gentleman yield to have the bill read?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will yield for the reading of the bill, but I do not yield my right to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, unless it is objected to.

A Voice. I object.

Mr. STANLY. Mr. Speaker, can I ask a question about this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. STANLY. I merely desire to say that I do not wish any vote that I may give upon this bill, in this state of it, to be taken as a test of my purpose to vote for or against it, as I have had no time to examine it, and wish not to vote against it. I have been generally in favor of these bills; but if I vote now to refer it to the Committee of the Whole, I do not want it understood that I am against the bill. I think, however, that I would vote for it, after I see whether we have an opportunity of doing justice to other sections of the country and with generous and liberal hands. I do not wish to confine myself to a particular bill, and would not be understood as being opposed to it—for I want an opportunity to examine it. That is all.

Mr. EVANS. I wish to say to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] that if he moves to put this bill upon its passage, I will vote against it. I do not think it is right to make it a test question. I might hereafter vote for it, or I might not, according to my judgment of its value in a national point of view; but I will not consent to take it unexamined.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the gentleman if this bill is not now put upon its passage, whether he will vote for it?

Mr. EVANS. I do not know. It is not sufficient to say that the bill is precisely like another bill. To judge of its full character, we must, for instance, know whether the road is located upon a proper route. There are divers circumstances to be looked into, besides the frame of the bill. I am not going to have this made a test question with me.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] if he ever voted for one of these bills?

Mr. EVANS. I voted against referring the Missouri bill to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am gratified to know it, and I should be exceedingly gratified to accommodate the gentleman still further, but I never saw the time when we could accommodate everybody in this House. We must have some fixed determination, and the friends of these measures now ask to know of this House something definite, as to what its temper is in regard to passing bills granting lands for the construction of railroads.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. If the gentleman will allow me—

Mr. JOHNSON. I will yield to the gentleman to make an explanation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I merely desire to say, that if my vote upon this bill is to be considered as a vote upon all the bills of this character which are to be presented to this House, notwithstanding I am favorable to it, and to the principle which it asserts, I must vote against this bill. I desire that every bill of that character shall stand upon its own merits; and I am opposed to any combination being formed in this House which will pass a bill that has no merits in it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I cannot let my friend make a speech on this bill. He must pardon me. He knows I would accommodate him as far, if not further than anybody else.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I merely wish to explain my own action upon this bill; but if the gentleman will not allow me, of course I will not press the matter.

Mr. JOHNSON. Go ahead.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I said, sir, that I was in favor of this system of making grants, which is fast settling down into a policy of this Government. But there are local objections to grants which are asked for by certain bills which will be presented to this House, and which I desire to explain when they come up; and if I am prevented from making such explanation, by a combination of votes that is to sustain the previous question upon me, I must be excused if I resist it with all the power and ability I possess.

Mr. JOHNSON. (resuming.) Now, I give notice that I cannot yield any more.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman allow me one moment for a question or two. I know he will.

Mr. JOHNSON. How can I refuse that reverend gentleman? [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] asks my friend here [Mr. EVANS] if he ever voted for one of these bills? Now, I wish to put a question to the gentleman: Has he ever voted for a bill to parcel out a portion of the public lands to the old States?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; and never will. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. Another question. It is well known that the old States are willing to give liberally to the new States. I am willing to vote for these bills, provided we can have something like reciprocity upon the part of the gentlemen from the new States. [Laughter.]

Another question I wish to ask. Will the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] go for some of these propositions to give to the old States, for internal improvements, a portion of the public lands?

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, sir, I have seen one proposition, in the hands of gentlemen, that I would support; but I do not believe that it can ever get into this House under favorable circumstances. But this is irrelevant, and I do not know that I should speak of it at all.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman tell us which proposition that is?

Mr. JOHNSON. It is one, the paternity of which is not claimed by any member of this House, but it goes on and provides for a given amount to each State, in proportion to her Representatives and Senators.

Mr. FOWLER. I say in reply, that I am not tenacious in regard to any one of these bills in particular, but I am tenacious of the principle, and I would vote for these bills on the ground that we should have what belongs to the whole country.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, the course I propose to take is entirely an inoffensive one. We wish to know if the House has settled, in their own mind, whether they will pass this class of bills or not; at least, to hear whether they will pass them now or not. If they refuse to sustain the previous question, which I shall call for in conclusion, upon the motion to put the bill upon its passage, then it is plain that this bill must take the course of others, and go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and thus lead to debate, to continue, it is impossible to tell how long.

It would seem to indicate, if that course is admitted after so much debate has already been had, that it is merely the old-fashioned method of accomplishing the defeat of a measure.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. One word. When the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHN-

SON] speaks of the debate which bills of this character have had in this House, I would ask him if we have ever been in Committee of the Whole upon any one of these bills? or whether we have had anything like a free and full discussion on the merits of a bill of this character? And I say this because the gentleman intimates that he shall regard the vote which may be given upon the motion which he is about to make, as a test vote upon this subject. For my part, I have felt that there are merits in some of these bills, and I have been willing to go into an examination of them in the Committee of the Whole, where we examine all bills of an important character, and where we ought to examine this one.

Mr. JOHNSON. I must get through with the few remarks I want to make. This bill is of the same class with all the others that are before this House, and which originated in this House. They have debated the subject of the public lands, as every gentleman is fully aware; they have debated one fixed system, and in one fixed set of words, such as compose these bills. If there is a gentleman in this Hall who is not well acquainted with these bills, it is solely because he has not given to the subject any particular attention, and could not have felt any interest in it. His vote is fixed, and his mind is made up.

Mr. MEACHAM, (interrupting.) You have declared that you are about to call the previous question, to close debate, and now you cast reflections—

Mr. JOHNSON. I have not cast reflections upon my friend from Vermont, [Mr. MEACHAM,] or anybody else.

Mr. MEACHAM, (interrupting.) You say we never examined these bills, because we would not, and you know that they have not been printed. We have not had any chance to do it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would be glad to accommodate my friend from Vermont, [Mr. MEACHAM.] I have not cast any reflections. I disclaim any such intention; and if the House considers that I did, the gentleman will take from me a most humble apology in the face of the nation. [Laughter.]

I want a vote upon the motion, and if it is not agreed to, I shall not regard it as the death of the bill, but as an indisposition of the House to pass it. If the House will not sustain the previous question, I take it for granted that they intend to refer it, and therefore we will have to refer all of this class that come up hereafter.

The Missouri bill, as I understand, was discussed nearly a month. The minds of the House ought to be made up, if they are not. I therefore move to put this bill upon its passage, and call for the previous question; and I call upon the friends of railroad bills to sustain it.

Mr. POLK. I believe the morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER. It has not quite expired.

Mr. POLK. Whether it has expired or not, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. COBB. In the event that the House determine to go into the Committee of the Whole, where will this bill go?

Mr. BISSELL. To the tomb of the Capulets.

The SPEAKER. It will go upon the Speaker's table, to come up in the fifth class of cases.

Mr. COBB. I would ask, if it is the pleasure of the House to go into the Committee of the Whole, whether—

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. Is that question debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. COBB. A gentleman has a right to appeal to the House for unanimous consent. I would say to the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] as this bill will go upon the Speaker's table, provided the House determine to go into the Committee of the Whole, if he will move to refer it, so that it may come up to-morrow, I will be much obliged to him.

Mr. JOHNSON. With the consent of the House, I will withdraw the motion for the previous question, and move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. POLK. I wish the gentleman to move to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and I will, therefore, withdraw my motion for the purpose of allowing him to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw the call for the previous question, and move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FLORENCE. Let the bill be also printed.

Mr. ORR. I renew the motion that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to make an inquiry. Did either the gentlemen from Alabama, or Arkansas move to commit the bill? The Chair heard no such motion, but the Clerk has made the question to the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I made that motion. I withdrew my call for the previous question, and moved that the bill be committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot make that motion without the consent of the House. The motion of the gentleman from South Carolina supersedes it.

Mr. JOHNSON. My motion was made prior to the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear it. The motion was then entered.

THE HOMESTEAD BILL.

The question was then taken on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order, the homestead bill, (Mr. HIBBARD in the chair.)

Mr. WILLIAMS being entitled to the floor, addressed the committee during an hour in regard to the earlier history of the slavery agitation, in which he showed that he had uniformly voted with General W. O. Butler against the reception of abolition petitions. He traced the history of the agitation down to the present time, and maintained that whatever might have been charged against Mr. Fillmore's legislative course on this question, he has been conservative in regard to it since his advancement to the Executive chair. He touched upon the subject of the Presidency and presidential candidates, and declared his intention to vote for no man for that office who was not sound on the slavery question—who was not in favor of the compromise measures passed by the last Congress. He did not believe that General Scott had yet given any expression in favor of those measures; and however that might be, he did not believe that if he were nominated for the Presidency, that he could possibly carry the State of Tennessee.

Mr. INGERSOLL next obtained the floor, and spoke an hour in defining the position of the Democratic party in Connecticut on the slavery question; maintaining that it occupied the conservative and constitutional ground. He criticised and commented, with some severity, upon the course of the representative from Massachusetts, [Mr. RANTOL,] upon that question. He touched upon the question of slavery in States and Territories of the Union, and denied that Congress had any power, under the Constitution, to interfere with it. He alluded to the doctrine of secession, and viewed it—whether as a constitutional or revolutionary right—as a mere abstraction, and as such, would not discuss it; but in a practical view, he questioned the power of the Federal Government to force a State to submission when once determined upon secession. He examined the question of slavery as it came up in the debates of the convention which formed the Federal Constitution, and showed that the New England States voted for the continuation of the slave trade, while Virginia voted in the negative. He argued that the course of the Abolitionists of the North had brought the Union on the verge of dissolution. He alluded to the conduct of England, in connection with the abolition question, and showed that her policy had been, after slavery had become unprofitable to her in the West Indies, to abolish it there, and to stimulate the agitation of the question here, to compass her designs against the peace and prosperity of this country. To strengthen his position, he called attention to the course of Thompson, the member of Parliament, who recently traversed the East, making abolition speeches. He alluded to the condition of the poor of England, and particularly in the district which Thompson represented in Parliament, and in Ireland; and showed, by way of contrast, that their condition was more wretched than any portion of the negro population in the United States. He concluded by expressing the belief that the people of Connecticut were sound on the compromise question; and read the resolutions of a public meeting held in his own district, in favor of sustaining the compromise measures, and against the agitation of the slavery question in any form.

Mr. FOWLER then occupied the floor an hour in defining the position of Massachusetts on the slavery question, contending that the great mass of the people there were opposed to the extension of slavery; and that they would at the proper time make it apparent. He commented upon the nature of the Federal Government, maintaining that its ultimate purpose was the enfranchisement of man. He discussed the policy of making grants from the public domain. He was in favor of making generous grants to the new States for the purposes of education and internal improvements; but upon a principle of reciprocity, he should insist that like grants be made to the old States in proportion to their representative population. He believed that it would be a wise policy also to make grants to actual settlers, for purposes of cultivation. In such form, he would support the bill. He touched upon the tariff question, and advocated the doctrine of protection to the labor of this country. In conclusion, he touched upon the subject of our foreign policy in regard to the doctrine of intervention, and saw no reason why we should change it. He also alluded to the rumor that a fleet had been sent to Japan to force her into commercial relations with this country. To such a policy he was opposed. He would be gratified at the extension of our commerce, but not by compulsory process; and should vote against all appropriations for naval purposes, until he was satisfied that this rumor was unfounded.

[See Appendix for these speeches.]

Mr. PORTER next obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. EVANS, who moved that the committee rise; which motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 7, for the promotion of agriculture, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. MILLSON moved that the House adjourn; which motion was agreed to.

So the House adjourned to meet to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

NOTICE OF BILLS.

Mr. STRATTON gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of John L. Cooper.

Mr. BARCOCK gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to provide for the erection of a marine hospital at Oswego, New York.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. MINER: The memorial of Levis Whitlock, asking remuneration from Congress for having discovered a remedy for the "potato rot."

Also, the memorial of Benjamin Nixon and 54 other citizens of Pittsford, Vermont, praying that the public lands may be granted to actual settlers.

By Mr. MOREHEAD: The memorial of Isaac Thacker and others, citizens of North Carolina, protesting against an extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. JONES, of Tennessee: The petition of H. C. Holman and others, citizens of Lincoln county, for the establishment of a post route from Fayetteville, Lincoln county, Tennessee, to Tullahoma, in Coffee county, of said State.

By Mr. GORMAN: The memorial of J. T. Moffatt and others, praying for a tri-weekly post route between Terre Haute, Indiana, and Bloomington.

Also, the memorial of R. L. Lackridge, assistant marshal of Sullivan county, Indiana, praying additional compensation for taking the census.

By Mr. FITCH: The petition of Henry Johnson, asking Congress to take into consideration a machine of his invention for recording the years and days.

By Mr. KING, of Rhode Island: The memorial of George W. Greene, asking the assistance of Congress for the publication of the correspondence and papers of Major General Nathaniel Greene, by subscribing for a limited number of copies thereof.

By Mr. ANDREWS: The petition of Thomas Frazer, praying for a pension on account of injuries received while in the military service in the war of 1812.

Also, the petition of John Glidden and others, praying for the passage of an act prohibiting the carriage of freight and passengers for hire, by Government steam-vessels.

By Mr. FITCH: The remonstrance of John Kistler, John Reynolds, and other citizens of White county, Indiana, against a renewal of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. FOWLER: The remonstrance of Rufus Clapp, James S. Briggs, and 110 others, citizens of Plymouth county, Massachusetts, against the reestablishment of flogging in the Navy.

By Mr. SIBLEY: The petition of J. W. North, Isaac Atwater, and 63 others, citizens of Minnesota Territory, praying for a reduction and modification in the rates of postage on newspapers and periodicals, so as to facilitate the diffusion of knowledge throughout the Union.

By Mr. COTTMAN: The petition of George Handy, John Dennis, Robert E. Wilkins, Levin Woolford, and 90 others, citizens of Somerset county, Maryland, praying Congress to pass an act to establish a port of entry for licensing vessels, at Deal's Island, in said county and State.

By Mr. MACE: The petition of J. S. McClelland, John Brown, and others, asking for a post route from Michigantown, Clinton county, Indiana, to La Fayette, via Frankfort, Jefferson, Winslow's Mills, and Dayton.

By Mr. PENNIMAN: The memorial of David Smart and 128 others, citizens of Michigan, asking a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Oakland and Ottawa Railroad.

By Mr. ROBBINS: The petition of A. M. Nixon, Patrick M. Glinchey, and 406 others, citizens of Manayunk, Philadelphia county, showing that the present depressed condition of their manufacturing and mechanical interest is caused by the operation of the present tariff laws, and they earnestly recommend a modification of said laws, so as to promote the general interests of the country at large. They state that, in the present tariff of duties, in many instances, the raw material pays a higher duty than articles manufactured from the same material. They also recommend that dye stuffs be admitted duty free.

By Mr. HENN: The petition of James A. Cunningham and 52 others, citizens of Iowa, asking a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Burlington to the Missouri river.

Also, the petition of A. R. Sparks and 16 others, upon the same subject.

Also, the petition of John Linden and 27 others, upon the same subject.

Also, the petition of William J. Cooper and 9 others, for the same object.

Also, the petition of C. C. Tinsley and 7 others, for a like object.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 1, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the Senate calling for information in relation to the expediency of repealing or modifying the act of June 30, 1834, concerning tonnage duty on Spanish vessels trading between the United States and the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of citizens of Hillsborough county, New Hampshire, remonstrating against the extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. SHIELDS presented the remonstrance of A. Schartz and other citizens of Illinois against the extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, a petition of citizens of Illinois, remonstrating against the extension of the patent of A. and Z. Parker for improvements in water-wheels; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. RUSK presented the memorial of John W. Phillips, praying indemnity for a vessel destroyed by the United States troops during the late war with Mexico; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. FELCH presented documents in relation to the claim of Christopher Knowlton to a pension for services during the last war with Great Britain; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWSON presented resolutions of the Legislature of the Territory of New Mexico, instructing their Delegate in Congress to procure the passage of a law authorizing two regiments to be raised for the defense of said Territory, and the establishment of arsenals therein; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FISH presented three petitions of citizens of Buffalo, asking Congress to pass laws securing a reciprocity of trade between this country and Canada; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, a petition of citizens of Buffalo, New York, praying the extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented the memorial of D. M. Smith, praying to be allowed the privilege of selecting pine timber lands for educational purposes on certain conditions; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MALLORY presented the petition of Charles G. Merchant, an officer of the Army, praying the settlement of his accounts in the Commissary Department on just and equitable principles; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SOULE presented resolutions of the Legislature of Louisiana, in favor of the construction of harbors, and the placing of buoys, &c., on the mail route from Mobile to New Orleans; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented a petition of citizens of Lee county, Iowa, praying the appointment of a commissioner, to settle claims to land in the Sac and Fox Half-breed reservation in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill to authorize the sale of the reserved cedar lands in Clarke county, Alabama; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Thomas J. Page, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Eliza Ann Ellison, only child and heir of David Lund, praying a pension for the services of her father in the last war with Great Britain, submitted an adverse report thereon.

RAILROAD TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. RUSK. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the memorial of Asa Whitney, asking a grant of land to enable him to construct a railroad to the Pacific ocean, have had the same under consideration, and a majority of the committee have instructed me to report a bill. Although I do not fully concur in the bill which I am instructed to report—the principal objection which I have to it is, that I believe a bill more likely to receive the sanction of Congress, and effect the object of building the road, could be framed—after the bill is printed it is my purpose to ask the attention of the Senate to it at an early day, as a matter of vast importance to the whole country, and more especially to the frontier section located upon the Pacific ocean, at which time it is possible I may offer some amendments.

The bill was read a first time by its title and ordered to a second reading. It is a bill to set apart and sell to Asa Whitney, of New York, a portion of the public lands, to enable him to construct a railroad from Lake Michigan or the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean; also, to set apart and sell to Samuel L. Selden, Robert T. Scott, and their associates, a portion of the public lands, to enable them to construct a railroad from a point on the west bank of the Mississippi river, not north of the neighborhood of Memphis, Tennessee; to run thence to the Rio del Norte and the Pacific ocean, at Santiago or San Francisco, or other point suitable for the purpose.

Mr. GWIN. I give notice that when that bill comes up for consideration, I shall move to strike out the name of Asa Whitney, and of every other individual named in it.

Mr. RUSK. There is an error in the title of the bill. The latter part of the bill provides for a route south, and has no names in it at all.

ADDITIONAL MEMBER OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire, if it is in accordance with the rules of the Senate, to ask that an additional member be appointed to the Committee of Claims, in consequence of the protracted illness and consequent absence of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. WHITCOMB,] who is a member of that committee. I do not know what the practice or usage of the Senate, in a case of this kind, has been; but there is a great deal of business before the committee, and the illness of the honorable Senator from Indiana—which we all so much regret—prevents him from serving upon it. If it is in accordance with the practice of the Senate, and it can be done with propriety, I would be greatly pleased; and I am directed by the committee to express their desire for it, if the Senate would give us an additional member. If in order, therefore, I move that an additional member be appointed for the Committee of Claims.

The PRESIDENT. It is in the power of the Senate, at any time, to increase the number of which a committee is composed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I move that the Chair appoint the additional member.

The PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent.

No objection being made, Mr. ADAMS was appointed by the Chair.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. HALE gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a joint resolution for the relief of those mechanics who have come to the city of Washington for the purpose of building the extension to the Capitol on invitation of the officers of the Government of the United States, and who have been for a long time out of work by the neglect of Congress to make appropriations therefor.

Mr. MALLORY gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to grant preemption rights to lands on the Florida Keys.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FELCH, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to grant preemption rights to certain settlers on an island called the Grand Cheniere, in the southwestern land district in Louisiana, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SHIELDS, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Thomas Flanagan; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

USE OF CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BY DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. RHETT asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a joint resolution authorizing the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives to grant the use of the books in the Library of Congress to the justices of the circuit court and criminal courts of the United States for the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time. It provides that the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the time being, be authorized to grant the use of the books in the Library of Congress to said justices on the same terms, conditions, and restrictions that members of Congress are allowed to use them.

Mr. RHETT. I would merely say that I have consulted with several gentlemen, members both of this and the other House, and I think there is no objection to imparting to the justices of the circuit and criminal courts of this District the privilege of our Library. It is now extended to the judges who are here, as well as to the Solicitor of the Treasury, to the heads of departments and bureaus. If there is no objection, I hope the resolution will now be read a third time and passed.

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE. I want to suggest to the Senator that, as the resolution stands, it will have to be renewed every Congress by the President and Speaker; whereas the privilege might be granted permanently.

Mr. RHETT. The Senator will find by examining the resolution that it is intended to be permanent; the leave is to be granted from time to time.

Mr. HALE. That is my objection. I wanted to know why we should not make it permanent.

The PRESIDENT. It does provide for the privilege being permanent.

Mr. CHASE. It seems to me that this resolution ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary, and receive their consideration.

Mr. RHETT. Committee on the Library.

Mr. CHASE. Well, I have no objection to that reference. I move to refer it to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

SALARIES OF DISTRICT JUDGES.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, which was submitted by Mr. CHASE, on March 30:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making the salary of each judge of a district court of the United States equal to that of any associate justice of the supreme court of the State in which the district court may be established.

Mr. FISH. I would suggest to the honorable Senator from Ohio to strike out the word "associate." In the State of New York we have no associate justice of the supreme court; they are all justices. Our superior court is one of local jurisdiction. I presume the Senator intends the highest court in the State.

Mr. CHASE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is also the case in several of the States. In my State, the oldest judge acts as chief justice, and I believe it is so in several of the States. I would suggest that the alteration which is named should be made.

Mr. RHETT. It is the same thing in South Carolina. Judges below sometimes act in a higher court. They are judges of appeal as well as of circuits. Therefore the resolution of the Senator from Ohio would not touch our State at all.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not think it makes a great deal of difference as to the wording of the resolution now. It will be a matter for the Judiciary Committee to consider. They are instructed to inquire into the expediency of doing what is named in the resolution. States differ very much as to their judges. In my State we have three judges of the supreme court; one is called the chief justice, the other associates; yet the salary of all is alike. You will find hardly any two States agreeing in that respect. This will be a matter for the consideration of the Judiciary Committee; and I do not see that it will make much difference as to how the resolution is worded.

Mr. BADGER. We have nearly the same case in North Carolina. Our supreme court has three judges, who are elected by the Legislature. They are elected as judges of the supreme court; and they select from among themselves the one who is to be called the chief justice.

Mr. CHASE. I attach no especial consequence to the precise wording of the resolution. It is merely one of inquiry, and of course was worded with no special design but to refer the subject to the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee will undoubtedly take into consideration all the circumstances which have been presented by different Senators, and will probably, as the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BRADBURY,] who is a member of the committee, suggested the other day, adopt some general rule. The object of the resolution is to direct their attention to the establishment of a general rule. That may be the consequence, or it may not be the consequence. The resolution can do no harm, as it is simply one of inquiry. I trust it will pass; it merely gives the subject to the committee.

The resolution was adopted.

ADDITIONAL COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. DOWNS submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to appoint a clerk.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed a bill entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for the sale of certain lands in the States of Ohio and Michigan, ceded by the Wyandott tribe of Indians, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1843," which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

BILLS PASSED.

The following engrossed bills were read a third time and passed:

An act to provide for a tri-monthly mail from

New Orleans to Vera Cruz, via Tampico, and back, in steam-vessels; and

An act to change the name of Joseph Lewis Brees, a midshipman in the Navy of the United States.

EXPEDITION TO JAPAN.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the following resolution, offered by Mr. BORLAND on the previous day:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to communicate to the Senate the object of the naval expedition recently ordered into the Indian ocean, and particularly to the coast of Japan, and copies of any instructions that have been given to the commander of that expedition.

Mr. BORLAND. At the suggestion of Senators, I desire to amend the resolution in one or two respects. In the first place, I propose to amend it by striking out the words "Secretary of the Navy be directed," and insert "President of the United States be requested;" and at the conclusion, to add the words "if not incompatible with the public service." The resolution, as I propose to amend it, will then read:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate the object of the naval expedition recently ordered into the Indian ocean, and particularly to the coast of Japan, and copies of any of the instructions that may have been given to the commander of the expedition, if not incompatible with the public service.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANGUM. I very much question the policy of adopting this resolution at all. As to the latter portion of it, including the amendment which has just been adopted, I think it tends to make it more exceptionable. Suppose the Navy Department should be called upon for all these instructions, and the answer should be, that to furnish them was thought, by the President, to be incompatible with the public service, would it not produce the impression on the public mind that the expedition is a hostile one? I think so. I apprehend that we all perfectly understand it, and what may be its object. I suppose the great leading object is to extend the commercial relations of the United States. It is perfectly well known to every gentleman who has kept his eye upon this subject, that when we have had a vessel wrecked on the coast of Japan, the sailors and officers have been treated in a most extraordinary and barbarous manner. Now, sir, if conciliatory measures shall not change this course of practice, I will say that I would like to see ten times the force sent there, and then a few of what are called "American remonstrances."

Sir, you have to deal with barbarians as barbarians. These people, who are isolated from the world, not only socially but politically, are not expected to be regulated by the motives that govern the civilized portion of mankind. I think it a very laudable object to endeavor to extend our commercial intercourse so far as we can; and in doing so, I think the exhibition of our power there will command respect, and that is what I think this resolution will not do. I think it will require no great stretch of confidence to leave this matter to the proper Department—the Executive portion of our Government.

To be sure, we may gratify an idle curiosity by getting some report, and having a very well-written document from the Department displayed here before the Senate, and published to the world; but I do not see how it will advance the interests of the Government at all. As surely as the Executive shall reply that it is supposed to be incompatible with the public interests to give the information that is asked for, so surely it will be set down by every antagonistic paper in the country as an open act of war, as a design to make warlike aggressions upon an innocent people. I doubt very much the policy of the measure, and I can have as little feeling upon a question of this sort as to the manner in which it may affect the parties in this country, as any gentleman who may address you on this subject. I think they are pretty much dislocated and broken in the middle now. The truth is, I am gradually becoming pretty much an "outsider;" but I will give a proper and constitutional degree of confidence to any administration, as I have to the last, and as I hope to do cheerfully while I have the honor of occupying a seat on this floor, humble as I am. I know not who is the mover of this resolution.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MANGUM. I hope the mover of it will let it lie over a few days, that we may have a little further opportunity to consider it, for really I have no very fixed and decisive views upon the subject. In the suggestion which I have thus made somewhat hastily, I have been influenced exclusively by a regard to the commercial interests of the country.

Again, suppose the answer to this resolution should be, that it is not incompatible with the public service to give the information? will that not put upon the qui vive the whole of the commercial nations of Europe who are our competitors over the globe? Will they not be ready to thwart any attempt on our part, if we give such an emphasis to this project? The embroilments which may result from it will be very dangerous in many aspects, besides the thwarting of our commercial views.

However, we, the men of America, care not for danger. That is the national spirit, and I fear that spirit will become so strong, ultimately, that it will seek danger in that Quixotic spirit which controlled the illustrious Spaniard in seeking it—for the purpose of setting all mankind right, according to our notions.

I hope the honorable Senator will consent to let it go over till a future day. I should like to know more about it. I doubt extremely the policy of the measure. All matters connected with the policy of the country cannot be touched with too much caution and too much care. Even words, sounds, mere air that vanishes, and is not remembered even for a day, may very often produce a sufficient impression upon the world to lead to results of the most disastrous character. This may do it much more. It seems to me that it is obvious to every child, even from the first-form up to any one at the head of a college, that our destiny, if we guard properly our resources at home, our own power, our own institutions, are at last to ascend to the very apex of human grandeur. And as surely as we shall dissipate our forces upon every wild, outlandish, and distant country, and distant interest, so surely we shall at last be regarded as having failed to rise to that height.

I regard this expedition as purely commercial in its character. It may, by possibility, involve something beyond that. Suppose our naval force should be assailed in those eastern seas?—which I think is no improbable supposition—it is not the character of the American sailor to receive a blow without returning it. And if we had fifty ships-of-the-line there, and one of them should be treated inhospitably, it would give more emphasis to our power to send a few American remonstrances, as an exhibition of American power, than all the diplomacy of a Talleyrand could effect, or even that which has been said to control the affairs of the United States. However, I am pretty indifferent about the matter; but I would prefer that it should lie over for the present.

Mr. BORLAND. I certainly did not expect any opposition to this resolution when I offered it; and I do not think, that since I have served in this body, I have heard opposition to such a resolution. I doubt whether, in the history of the proceedings of the Senate, a resolution asking of the Executive Department of the Government information on a matter of importance to the public service, has ever been rejected or opposed. I confess my great surprise at the opposition which has now been made. No one, it seems to me, could have inferred from the terms of the resolution itself, that any reflection was intended to be cast upon the conduct of the President of the United States, or to raise even the suggestion that he was doing anything wrong in sending out this expedition.

Mr. MANGUM. I did not allege anything of the kind.

Mr. BORLAND. Such certainly was not my intention in offering the resolution. I did not charge, nor intimate, nor believe, that injury was intended, or likely to result to the country from this expedition. If any such impression goes out in connection with it, it will surely be solely attributable to the complexion that the Senator from North Carolina, as a friend of the Administration, has given to it. He has gone on to suppose that such and such might be the state of affairs. Sir, I have supposed no such thing. I saw announced in the public newspapers, and find it stated in the House of Representatives by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that a large and important naval expedition was about to sail for the Indian Ocean; that it was to sail yesterday. If I had heard of this expedition earlier, I should have offered my resolution in time to obtain the information before the time of sailing arrived. But I saw this announcement by the chairman of the Committee of Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives the day before yesterday; and I came here immediately, and offered my resolution.

Now, Mr. President, I may be wrong in the views which have governed me in this; but I have always held this, even before I had a seat on this floor, and that opinion has been confirmed since I have been here, that it is not only not necessary, but that it is highly improper that any act of this Government, or of any branch of it, either legislative or executive, should be done in secrecy or concealment from the public eye. I do not care what the purpose may be; I do not care whether the act relate to our commercial, or diplomatic, or any other interest, or whether it be our action here on the nominations of the President for office; I have always believed that it was proper that all these things should take place in open daylight. It might have done very well at a certain period of the world's history, or may now do upon the European continent, for all diplomacy to be carried on secretly. The history of the several countries of Europe shows that it matters but very little to the people, who have no voice in the Government, whether they serve one master or another. Nor are their real interests or condition affected by arrangements which those who govern them may enter into. It might have done very well, and it may do now, for the monarchs of those countries to operate in secret, and carry out their own objects without the knowledge, and without regard to the interests of the people; lest some of their brethren who wear crowns upon their heads should take occasion to intervene and defeat them. But, sir, here we have nothing of that kind. The people of the United States are the governors and the government. We are but their agents and representatives here, whether in the White House, at the other end of the avenue, or in either House of Congress; and I hold that we have no right to take any step whatever in any important respect affecting their interests, which, from the beginning to the end, and in all its parts, is not fairly before the people. I do not believe that any injury can result to the public interest, by a free and full exposition of all that we do, and of the motives with which it is done.

I have no design to assail the Administration, or to charge it with anything wrong; certainly not to intimate that I believe it is about to commit an act to the injury of the country, either purposely, or as the natural consequences of the act now in question. But we are responsible, to a certain extent, for the conduct of every department of this Government. We are told every day—and were told here only a few days since by the Senator from North Carolina himself—that whatever of extravagance and impropriety had been practiced by this Government, even in its Executive branch, was justly chargeable to the majority in the two Houses of Congress, and not to the President. Ay, sir, that we hold the purse-strings—the real means of control over all Government action, whether legislative or executive; and that if we failed in the duty of exercising this control, we, alone, were responsible. Sir, I agree with the Senator fully in this. I take his own position, and now ask him to stand upon it with me. He was right, sir; the responsibility of every act of this Government, whether done by Congress or by the Executive, rests on the shoulders of the majorities of the two Houses of Congress. As one of the majority, in this Senate, I am not only willing to take that responsibility, which is a fair and legitimate one, but I court it. The Senator from North Carolina, as a friend of the Administration, need not so anxiously seek to shift it from the President upon Congress. We are very willing—we are desirous to take it; and for that very reason, I offer the resolution: for, along with the responsibility for the President's acts, I want also information as to what those acts are. One is necessary to the other.

Hints have been thrown out by the friends of the Administration, as to the probable results of this expedition. Not only commerce and diplomacy, but war has been shadowed forth. If these intimations are well founded, and the probable results are to be as important as we may expect from the responses of the oracles, surely, we ought to have more certain and definite information, in order to make preparation for them, and for their consequences—one of which last will be 'beyond all doubt, a heavy bill of expenses which will come upon us to pay.' And for this, however large it may make the appropriations, we are told, already, by the organ of the President, and by his friends on this floor, that we shall be held responsible before the country. Now, sir, if we are to be responsible for the consequences of an act, have we not a right—is it not our duty—to know what it is? If it be a proper act, in our estimation, to give it the proper 'material aid;' or, if to us it seems to be wrong, in order that we may exercise our legitimate authority to arrest and forbid it. These are my reasons for offering this resolution.

Mr. GWIN. I am entirely opposed to this resolution until I obtain some information as to the bearing it is intended to have upon the country. I think that if the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BORLAND] will take into consideration the importance of the trade now going to the Pacific, he certainly will justify the Administration in sending an expedition to explore those seas. I will suppose a case, and then I think the Senator will see that it is important that these seas should be explored. Suppose that part of the instructions given to the commander of the fleet was to explore these seas for the purpose of finding an island in which coal might be obtained, in order that we might have a depot to supply vessels: is it proper to make it known to all the world, that some other power may go and take possession of it? But I will go further. Suppose that this expedition is intended to commence commercial relations with a people with whom we have no intercourse at present—for instance, such a people as the Japanese: is it proper that we should make such a design public, and especially to a certain nation in Europe, to enable them to interfere against us, and to keep up that monopoly which they now hold? I think it eminently proper that every movement of this kind which is peaceful in its character, and especially any movement, the object of which is to establish a depot in the Pacific—if that is part of the object of the expedition, and I do not know that it is—should be kept secret. I for one am willing that the Administration should send out such an expedition, the object of which is undoubtedly in relation to the commerce of the country; and I take it for granted that the Executive will not involve the country in those enormous expenses, fears of which are sometimes expressed by Senators upon this floor.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have recently received a letter from California which satisfies me that some expedition of this kind should go out forthwith; and I take this occasion to state that the writer, who is an officer in our service, states that some time ago they picked up about fifty Japanese who were wrecked on the coast of the Pacific, and that they are in California now, and are pining to return to their own country. I have this letter, and I am glad that I can bring this matter to the notice of the Administration. The people of California have no means of sending these men home, and there is something of apprehension on the part of merchant vessels to approach their coast. This officer begged that I would lay the matter, as quickly as possible, before the Department, hoping that if this expedition goes to Japan these men may accompany the expedition as an introduction. In my opinion this would be an excellent piece of policy, by which some advantage might be gained. But whether or not, it would certainly be an act of humanity to convey these men to their native land, provided we have any public vessels going there.

The Senator from California stated the truth when he said that the trade of Japan might become a matter of great importance to this country; and if we can open a peaceful intercourse with that country, I think it may be greatly to our advantage. I am, therefore, inclined to think that the resolution of the Senator from Arkansas, at this time, would have an injurious effect.

Mr. HALE. I am not in favor of passing this resolution, Mr. President, for I think it would imply a degree of vergency in the Senate to pass it, of which I should not like to see it guilty.

I think that if the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Navy, were to answer us with candor and truth, without any diplomacy, preface, or apology, he would say this: "If you look at the Naval Register, gentlemen of the Senate, you will find it filled up with the names of sixty-eight captains, a majority of whom are waiting orders. Nearly one hundred commanders are in the same condition, 'waiting orders,' so are lieutenants, midshipmen, and passed-midshipmen innumerable. And you would find that you appropriate for the naval expenses about nine millions a year, which is about twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars a day, or about eight hundred thousand a month. It requires a great deal of ingenuity to devise ways and means to employ those officers and spend that money."

We cannot, Mr. President, keep these officers unemployed; and if you look to the report of the Secretary of the Navy, made this very session, it will be seen that he recommends the building of an additional number of small vessels for that most excellent, worthy, praiseworthy, and patriotic reason, that it will bring into employment a number of worthy lieutenants, who have now nothing to do. Now, when that is the situation of the Navy Department, to ask the President what is the object of sending this expedition to Japan, would be worse than idle. We have got these ships, and we have got these men; but we have nothing on earth for them to do. They are "waiting orders." We are paying them a higher compensation for their services than is paid by any other nation on earth to officers of the same grade; and it appears by the Register, furnished to you, that more than half of the two highest grades of officers are unemployed, and have been so for years. If we look about us, then, it is apparent that this is simply a means of employing some of the ships and some of the men, and of expending some of the millions that are appropriated daily for the Navy.

It is a worthy, a praiseworthy object. But the objection that I have to the resolution, if I have any at all, is, that I apprehend the President, if he were to answer as I should suppose he will be likely to answer, will give such an answer as he did when, having sent a portion of our troops down South, (perhaps, however, it would not be delicate to mention the circumstance, as it occurred when the Union was in danger,) application was made to know what the object was in sending the troops to a certain port—

Mr. CASS. Was the application made by Congress?

Mr. HALE. I do not recollect whether it was or not; but the President answered that he was Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, and that he did not see fit to subject the reasons that influenced him to calls of this character. Now, I suppose it would be peculiarly decorous if the President were to say, in answer to this application, that "He did not see fit to subject the reasons that influenced him to calls of this kind."

Mr. RUSK. Will the Senator from New Hampshire inform me when the President returned such an answer? or when such a resolution of the Senate was sent to him?

Mr. HALE. I did not say that there ever was any such resolution of the Senate. I only go upon the newspaper reports. I believe such was the fact; that was the answer the President gave to a very respectable application: that he was the Commander-in-Chief, and that he did not see proper to answer the question. And, sir, I think he was very right; and should not be surprised if he were to say to the Senate, "You are a very wise set of gentlemen, and if you would confine yourselves to the discharge of your constitutional duties, and allow me to attend to mine, we would get on a great deal better."

There is no doubt that he might send such an answer; it would be perfectly constitutional. For that reason, I am not disposed to acquiesce in this resolution, and because it is a matter within the exclusive jurisdiction of the President, over whom we have no control, and to whom it would be improper and indecorous to send such a resolution. I think it is well that the expedition has been got up. I think that while we appropriate nine or ten millions a year for the naval establishment, and while we insist on keeping it filled up with twice as many officers as are wanted, and have to build ships to keep them in employ, it is a piece of querulousness we ought not to indulge in, to ask the President why he has made arrangements to keep some of them in employment. Perhaps this may be of a piece with one of the most gigantic humbugs for which an appropriation was ever made by any nation on earth; I refer to the "Exploring Expedition," the results of which we have not got at yet, and the accounts for which are not yet settled. It may have been a very good thing for the book-makers, and picture makers, and printers; but for the country, it was certainly the most gigantic humbug ever undertaken.

Whether this is, or is not so, it is within the jurisdiction and sole control of the President, and we ought not to interfere.

Mr. BORLAND. My purpose seems to be very strangely and very greatly misapprehended. I am not opposed to this expedition, and I have not uttered a word against it. I admit that all that the Senators from California and from Illinois have suggested in regard to its probable value and importance may be true. I know nothing to the contrary. I am not denying that value or that importance, for I do not know anything about them. And it is because I do not know that I propose this resolution of inquiry to enable me to know. If, as has been suggested, the object of the expedition be to establish new commercial relations for our country in the far East, or if, as has been hinted here, it is likely to involve us in warlike collision with another nation, surely it is not only our right, but our duty, to know all about it. Our connection with it, and our duties in consequence of it, must be as close and as important and as necessary as those of the President can be. Why, then, conceal its character and its objects from us? Sir, I am always suspicious of secrecy and concealment. If a thing be good, it need not fear the light. If it be bad, the welfare of the country demands that it should be exposed to view. I have deemed it proper to call for this information, because I consider it necessary to enable us faithfully and efficiently to discharge our duties.

As to the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] if I could regard him, in giving utterance to them, as the representative of the President of the United States, I might be disposed to give them a serious response. But as no such call as he has spoken of has ever been made by either House of Congress—

Mr. HALE. I did not say that such a call was made by either House of Congress.

Mr. BORLAND. Nor if any such call had been made would the President have returned such an answer as the honorable Senator from New Hampshire has suggested. Our position would, indeed, be a strange one—would require, indeed, something more from us than a "resolution of inquiry," if to our call the President should ever undertake to say to us, "I am Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, and exercise my authority independent of Congress." But, sir, no President ever has assumed, or ever will assume, any such position. We have not come to that yet, and we never will come to it. Such an answer, were it possible, which it is not, would find us in doubt how to act. We have the power, and we would exercise it, too, to compel an answer in conformity to the imperative and reciprocal obligations of every department of this Government. But, sir, on this occasion, at least, I cannot recognize the Senator from New Hampshire as the representative of the President. No, sir, the President, whatever else he may think or do, neither has assumed, nor will assume, any such position as that; and no such answer either can or will come from him to any call of the Senate. I would ask of him nothing which our right and duty did not warrant, and doubt not his answer would be in accordance alike with duty and propriety.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator from Arkansas says that there ought to be nothing secret in the Government; that the people of the United States are the sovereigns and governors of the country; that the affairs and transactions of the Government are theirs; that the interests and effects are theirs; and that we are but their agents in managing and carrying on this Government by them and for their benefit; and that, therefore, all the transactions of this Government, whether in the executive or legislative branches of it, should be always open to the public inspection, that the people may have an opportunity of seeing and understanding all measures in their initiation and in their progress, as well as in their conclusion; because the measures are the measures of their Government, for their interest, and intended to subserve their advantage. Now, Mr. President, let us examine this subject a little further.

Supposing it to be true that we are to consider ourselves a large family, and all of us to be engaged in endeavoring to ascertain what is best to be done to promote the benefit of that family, the Senator from Arkansas must at once perceive that there is this difference between this fanciful and vast family of twenty millions of people, and an ordinary family, consisting of a dozen members. It may be quite proper that family affairs should be discussed in the family.

It might be desired by some that the affairs of the whole people of the United States should be discussed before the whole people of the United States; but here is the difficulty: if everything is to be published that is initiatory to the people of the United States, it must also be published to the whole world. The Senator says he has no objection to that. Perhaps not; but I think a great many people in this nation would object to introducing the whole world into our family. A man may be perfectly willing to talk over a subject, and discuss it at his breakfast table, but there are very few persons who would wish to speak of their family affairs before the whole neighborhood. And although it is true that everything is to be done here for the interest of the whole people, and that we are their agents, their interest requires that we should not promulgate to the world the measures we have taken with this object in view. We have secret sessions in regard to our treaties, and we also have secret sessions in regard to nominations by the President. As to the treaties, it must be manifest to every one that if they were to be published to the world in consequence of being sent here for our deliberation, that that branch of the public business could not be transacted without great detriment to the public interest.

Now, if it be true, when the President is about to send an expedition to Japan, and to give instructions to the men who are to command it, in regard to the object of the expedition; and if that object is to be exposed, and all these things are to be published to the world simultaneously, I think it is manifest that, however beautiful such a scheme might be in theory, it would be vastly inconvenient in practice, and would render government impracticable.

The Senator also says, that since he has been a Senator upon this floor, he has never known a resolution of this sort objected to. But, sir, I ask him if he ever knew a resolution of this kind to be offered? I have been here longer than he, and although my memory may not be perfect, and though I may not be a very attentive observer of what takes place, yet I must say that I never knew a resolution of this kind to be offered in the Senate. If ever such a one was offered, it must have escaped my notice, or have strangely glided from my memory since. Sir, the President has been in the habit, for years and years, of sending squadrons of ships to the East Indies, to the Mediterranean, to the Pacific, and the Brazilian coast, and to such portions of the world as he deemed necessary and advisable, so as to make our Navy answer its great purpose of affording adequate protection to our commerce; and I ask if any instance has ever been known before, of a call being made by either house of Congress upon the President of the United States, to advise them in regard to the instructions which he may have given to the commanding officer of such expedition? No, sir; and no argument, therefore, can be adduced in favor of the proposition before the Senate, on the ground that other propositions have not been objected to, unless propositions of a similar nature have been brought before the Senate. I remember no such instance. It seems to me that no injury can arise by allowing this proposition, which is of an entirely novel character, and which, as far as I can perceive, can do no good, and in various contingencies may be productive of evil, should be allowed to rest a few days, until we can have an opportunity of sufficiently considering its consequences.

Mr. CASS. One of the most important naval expeditions that ever went out from this country, the papers say, is about to go out for some purpose unknown to Congress. Now, I ask, what

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 60.

reasonable objection can there be to our knowing this object? What reasonable objection can there be, when we have to make the appropriations for carrying out the expedition, to our knowing its general objects? It is stated—not upon any general principle—that there may be secret objects connected with it, that should not be disclosed. There may be; and, if so, I have not a word to say. If there be such objects, then the case is precisely met by the resolution, which puts the reply wholly within the power and discretion of the President, asking for nothing which it is not proper to communicate.

Now, how does it stand? You ask for information. The President says it is not proper to communicate it, and it is not communicated, of course. Then, if you now refuse to pass this resolution, you create the necessity for the inference that you are not entitled to proper information, or that the resolution calls for that which it would not be proper to give. One or the other horn of the dilemma must be assumed. Let me say, before I remark further, that I have no doubt, as to the general object of the expedition, that it is quite proper that it should be sent out. I have not heard a word from the Senator from Arkansas against the object of the expedition. I think it is proper; and I think it is equally proper that the general objects of it should be known to the American Congress and the American people. Some strange ideas, as it seems to me, have been advanced. The Senator from New Hampshire has said, that as the President is the Commander-in-Chief, we have no right to ask him anything about the expedition. There are one or two questions connected with maritime and military expeditions: the one chiefly of a military or maritime character, and the other of a politico-military character. You cannot issue an order to the chief commander, while in battle, for it is his prerogative to act there; but where your officers of the Army or of the Navy shall go, you must know, in order to determine what are the requisite appropriations.

Let us suppose a case—which we know will not happen—that the President should choose to order a large number of forces to the Banks of Newfoundland; is it not proper that Congress should ascertain the reason for the order, that they might know on what ground they should grant supplies? Whenever any Administration comes before you and asks for an appropriation, it states the reason for making the grant. If in any case a call were made upon the President for the reason, and he should refuse to answer, or give an answer not satisfactory, would you go on and grant the supplies? If the President, as Commander-in-Chief, instead of having ten thousand men on the frontier, should have them in the city of Washington, would you be likely to grant the same amount of supplies? Certainly not. This power of withholding supplies is one of the great checks upon abuses in the Government, when the reasons for asking the appropriation are not satisfactory. It is your great legislative check. You want to know, when the President asks for a certain species of force, what he wishes to do with it, in order that you may know what must be done to maintain that force.

The Senator from New Hampshire says that the President has refused to reply to an application made to him for information, and would do so in this case. No, he has never refused to reply; and no President who ever sat in the presidential chair ever sent such an answer as the Senator from New Hampshire has spoken of. Because the President chose to refuse to reply to an individual application for information, does it therefore follow that he will refuse an application coming from the Congress of the United States? Never, never. Never have we had a President who would refuse to answer such an inquiry. If there are any peculiar reasons which would justify him in making a certain movement, and not giving his reasons for it, he will state so frankly in his answer to Congress. The resolution, therefore, commits him to nothing, and does no injury. I agree with the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN,] that we want such an expedition. I do not know the object proposed in this case, and do not know the amount of force. I think it is quite proper that we should know how many vessels, how many steam-ships, and how many men are to be employed in it. All these are matters for which we shall be called upon to make appropriations; and we all know that when the subject comes up upon these appropriations, the matter will be thoroughly discussed, and that Congress will be required to know, upon its responsibility, what the expedition is for, with a view to make the requisite appropriation. I do not conceive that the resolution casts the slightest censure upon the President of the United States. I think, also, that it comes fairly within the scope of our legitimate duties.

Mr. SEWARD. I do not know that, after due consideration, I shall have any objection to the passage of this resolution. I can only say, that, so far as my own views are concerned now, I am not prepared to vote for it to-day. The subject is new here; and I think there is a possibility that some injury may be done to the public interest by passing such a resolution hastily, while no possible evil can result from letting it lie over a few days—at least, for a day or two.

The honorable Senator from Michigan has said very justly, that he could conceive it very proper that there should be such an expedition to Japan. There might be many reasons—I think I could imagine very many reasons—which might well exist, why such an expedition might be very proper, which reasons it might be very proper for the Congress of the United States to understand, and yet which reasons it might not be very wise for the Government of the United States to communicate to the world at the very moment of the transaction. When I look at the position in which we stand in relation to the Pacific and the East, and consider that we have advanced our posts to the coast of the Pacific ocean; that the trade of the East is in the hands of European Powers, who have been for two hundred years engaged by commercial treaties, by naval expeditions, and by armed power, in securing and parceling out the vast trade of the East among themselves; and that one nation alone has a monopoly of the trade of Japan, I think that, instead of inquiring why an expedition is now ordered by the Government of the United States to Japan, the question naturally arises, Why have not the United States before sent an expedition to the East? But, as I said, I am not prepared to say that I should vote for the resolution to-day. I may be to-morrow; and I therefore would suggest to the honorable mover that, as I find many others are in the same situation as myself, it would be probably wise to let the resolution lie over for a day or two.

Mr. BAYARD. I move to amend the resolution, by striking out the words, "and copies of any instructions that have been given to the commander of that expedition." I cannot conceive a case in which it would be proper to call for the instructions given to a military or naval officer, antecedent to the consummation of the duties intrusted to him. It seems to me that they must necessarily be confidential. Therefore, you are calling on the President for information which he ought not to give. To the remainder of the resolution I can have no objection, because it is left to the discretion of the President to communicate such matters as are consistent with the public welfare. I make the motion to strike out that part of the resolution calling for the instructions, because I can conceive of no case in which, of necessity, from the relations which exist between the Commander-in-Chief who is the instructing power, and the commander of a naval or military expedition, while the expedition is in progress, the circumstances must not be confidential.

Mr. BORLAND. I think there would be great force in the remarks of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] but for the concluding words of the resolution. The information to be communicated is, after all, left to the discretion of the President. If there be any portion of the instructions, or anything in regard to the objects of the expedition which he may deem it improper, in view of the public interests to communicate, he will, of course, under the very terms of the resolution, withhold it. If any portion of the information be of such a confidential character that it would be improper to make it known to the world, or would be prejudicial to our interests by being known, then, of course, he would withhold it. This was my purpose in adding those words to the resolution; leaving it entirely to his discretion. If he shall determine in his discretion that even the whole of it ought to be withheld, of course it is competent for him to withhold it, with perfect respect to the resolution and to the Senate. In such a case he would simply have to say to the Senate: It is not, in my opinion, compatible with the interests of the public service that any of the information called for should be communicated. Let this be so, and let the President say so. Then the whole expedition will be his, and the responsibility will be his—all, save the payment of the expenses; and that, of course, will fall upon us, and, according to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MANGUM] and the Republic, will be our portion of the responsibility. It will be what, when the time comes, we will have to assume; for the debt incurred, no matter how, or for what, or for how much, will, doubtless, have to be paid, and that, too, out of appropriations to be voted by us, and on our responsibility—not the President's.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] seems to have entirely misconceived what I said, or what I intended to say, as to precedents. I certainly did not mean to say that resolutions had ever been adopted of precisely this character. I apprehend that there never has been an expedition of this precise character fitted out in this country before. But I did mean to say, and I think I did say, that no resolution calling upon the President for information in regard to any branch of the public service, had ever been opposed upon this floor. I did not refer particularly to naval or military expeditions. I said that I had never heard of opposition to an inquiry into the condition of any branch of the public service; nor have I ever heard of a President who refused to answer such a call, unless upon such a suggestion as will be found in the resolution—that the information called for could not be communicated without detriment to the public interests. For these reasons I shall vote against the proposed amendment, to strike out that portion of the resolution calling for the instructions which have been given to the commander of the expedition. But I do not consider it as a matter of much practical importance whether it be stricken out or retained.

Mr. HALE. I hardly suppose that the Senator from Arkansas was serious in the suggestion which he made when he asked if I spoke for the President of the United States. I suppose he did not entertain any such idea as that, and therefore I will let it pass. But I want to say a word in regard to the remarks of the Senator from Michigan, because I know that what he says falls with great weight upon the country at this time, and a great many think that in a short time, probably, it will fall with vastly greater weight. Therefore, I feel that there is great importance attached to what the Senator says. He knows that I can say nothing of him which is not kind and respectful; but I think he has advocated a very dangerous doctrine, and one that I want to guard against, in order that he may not be embarrassed in any action which he may be called upon to take hereafter, provided the wishes of his friends shall prevail; and that is, that the Commander-in-Chief of the Navy and of the Army may not order a division of the Army, or a portion of the Navy to any particular duty without the object of that order, and the instructions given by the commander, being a legitimate subject of legislative inquiry. I deny that utterly and entirely. I do not expect to be President of the United States very soon. [Laughter.] Therefore it is from no selfish motive that I speak. If the Constitution of the United States means anything at all, it means that the power of issuing orders to the officers of the Army and the Navy is a matter which is exclusively entrusted to the discretion of the President of the United States; and when you make a call upon him for those orders, he may, with perfect propriety, and with perfect decorum, say to the Senate: "Gentlemen, you are traveling out of your record." If I am not exceedingly mistaken, when a resolution was introduced by an honorable Senator from Maine, [Mr. BRADBURY,] calling upon President Taylor to give the reasons for the removals which he had made from certain offices, which were exclusively within his control, some of the soundest lawyers in the Senate—I do not now refer to the Senator from Michigan, for I believe he did not coincide in the opinion—expressed their conviction that if the Senate should pass the resolution and send it to the President of the United States, he could tell them that they were at perfect liberty to pass the resolution, but that he was at liberty to answer it or not as he saw fit. It was said that he would not probably answer it—that he would not give his reasons—that the Senate had no right to ask him—that it was a jurisdiction exclusively conferred on him by the Constitution, for the exercise of which he was responsible to the people. That was the ground taken by the whole body of the friends of the late President Taylor, upon the discussion which took place here upon that resolution. This resolution not only inquires the object of sending an expedition to Japan, but also calls for copies of the instructions which have been given to its commander. The Senator from Michigan, if I understand him, contends that this is a fair and legitimate matter of legislative inquiry, and that we have a right to have these instructions submitted to us. I do not want to argue the question at all. At present it is rather an abstraction than anything practical, and I do not want to deal in abstractions. I simply wish to say that such are not my convictions, and with all the respect I have for the honorable Senator—and nobody has a more kind regard for him—I must repel the idea, so far as my own action is concerned, of being governed by any such theory of the Constitution as that which he has laid down.

Mr. CASS. One word more, and I shall have done with the subject. The honorable Senator from New Hampshire says, that on a call being proposed to the President to state his reasons for certain removals, they were not required. Now, let me ask the honorable Senator from New Hampshire what parity of condition there is between such a question and the one now before the Senate? The President makes a removal and appointment. That is his constitutional prerogative, and all we have to do is to confirm or reject that appointment. But how different is the case here. We expend some fifteen or twenty millions a year for the support of the land and naval forces of the United States. We want to know what is done with the money. The President directs the movement of these forces, of course, but he cannot get along without money. Who is to supply the money? It will not do for him to shelter himself from his proper responsibility, and say, I will do as I please with these troops. We want a reason for levying this tax on the American people. We may disband the Army and Navy to-morrow, if we think the President does not send them where the interests of the American people require them; hence, as I have said before, we have a right to know what is to be done with them. There are two questions here; one strictly military, and the other, if I may use the term, politico-military, embracing other considerations besides mere military ones. It is not only a question of how much force, but why that force should be sent to a particular port, and why it should be kept there? I repeat, we have to act. Congress has, in the first place, to make the appropriations; in the next place, to continue them; and, in the third place, it has the power to disband the Army and Navy altogether, if the troops are not properly applied by the Executive. We shall never fulfill our duty as the great supervisors of the Administration, unless we look to this. I am not positive, but I have a strong conviction that this question was fully argued over thirty years ago, during Mr. Monroe's administration, on some question in relation to the removal of troops to Council Bluffs; and I believe it was conceded on all hands that Congress had a right to enter into the question. I think it was discussed for some time, but from my present indistinct recollection of the circumstance, I cannot say whether the power was contested. At any rate, it was determined then that Congress had the power.

Mr. DAWSON. The whole of this controversy seems to have arisen from a newspaper publication; and an alarm is attempted to be created throughout the country that an expedition is being, or has been, fitted out for some vastly-important purpose. Why, have we not invariably kept our squadrons afloat on these seas? Have not squadrons started from our ports and found their way into foreign seas for the protection of our commerce? When has there been a time since they have been afloat that our squadrons have not been in some of the Eastern oceans? And why is it that there is so much fuss made because a squadron is fitted out for a particular section of the world, not under estimates called for, but under appropriations made to keep our vessels afloat? This is a peculiar period, as has been hinted by several gentlemen; we are on the eve of a presidential election; the common routine of our Government, and the manner in which our commerce is to be protected, is to be thrown broadcast upon the country, and the insinuation is raised, that the Government is about to involve us in foreign controversy. When the question is asked, wherefore all this? the answer is, that somebody has seen something published in a newspaper. Seen what? That a military expedition was about to be fitted out? No, sir. That a squadron was to be sent abroad for the purpose of chastising some savages? No, sir.

Mr. BORLAND. Surely the Senator did not hear me, or he would not say that there was no information beyond a mere rumor in the newspapers, that this expedition was to be fitted out. I stated distinctly that I based my resolution upon a declaration made by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, in his position as chairman of that committee, in the House of Representatives, two days ago.

Mr. DAWSON. I understood the Senator perfectly.

Mr. BORLAND. That statement thus officially made, I conceived was information to be relied upon as a proper basis of action.

Mr. DAWSON. But how do you know that the expedition is being fitted out for war purposes? That is the question. Have not squadrons been fitted out before this? Therefore, I ask, why is it presumed that this expedition is fitted out for a warlike purpose?

The design of this resolution can be but one of two things—either to ascertain the precise object intended on the part of the Government, or to arrest, by the power of the Congress of the United States, this expedition. Suppose, now, that the expedition shall be fitted out for a military purpose; is there any gentleman on this floor who believes that the President would communicate the object of a military expedition to such a distant place? Would it not be inconsistent with the policy and the interests of the Government to do so? Certainly, it would. Suppose it is fitted out for the advancement of our commerce and the extension of our mercantile interests, would it be politic, would it be wise, to lay before the world the very instructions which are intended to consummate the object of the Government, and let foreign nations see our object, and thereby intercept the very purpose we have in view? Looking upon it as a question of expediency, as a question of policy, I can clearly see the impropriety of this resolution. Suppose it is designed to check the progress of this squadron. The Senator who moved this resolution has already told us that the squadron sailed yesterday.

Mr. BORLAND. I said that the chairman of the Naval Committee of the House stated that it was to sail on Wednesday, (yesterday.) What time it will sail I do not know. I have heard that it will not sail so soon; and I will add now what I ought to have said before, that not only did the chairman of the Naval Committee make this statement in the House, but he gave it as a reason for the passage of a bill pending. He connected it with pending legislation in the other House. He stated it positively as a fact (which, of course, he obtained from the Administration) necessary to be known in order to secure the passage of a bill there pending.

Mr. DAWSON. That is a very strong reason why the Senator from Arkansas should entertain no alarm. The chairman of the Naval Committee in the other branch of Congress is probably nearer the Naval Department than the chairman of our committee, because the appropriations originate in that House. We all know who is at the head of that committee—a gentleman who is not a friend to the present Administration. When he asks before the country that a bill shall be hastily passed, because of this expenditure, is it to be presumed that that expedition is fitted out for the purpose of doing any injury to this country in any point of view? This is a reason why the Senator from Arkansas should have no alarm, and should not ask for a publication, the result of which he cannot himself anticipate.

The great objection that I have to this proceeding is, that it is founded in a want of confidence in the various departments of the Government. It is unkind and ungenerous to indulge a belief that any one of the departments of this Government would act improperly. It is admitted by everybody that the President is the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy; and if a squadron is set afloat by his order, the presumption is, that it is for the good of the country, and for the interests of the nation. We should never call for the instructions given to an expedition of this character unless we have some foundation upon which to raise a presumption that there is an impropriety in its being sent out. Until that is the case we ought not to infer that it is so. My own opinion is, that Congress has the power at any time to demand of the Executive the objects he has in view in a particular action, but that demand should always be exercised with prudence and with caution. I believe further, that it is always detrimental to the public interests to announce to the world what we are about to do. As was suggested by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] what is fit to be spoken around the fireside in the family circle, around the family table in relation to domestic affairs, would not be suitable in a court or in a Parliamentary Hall. Domestic objects which the Administration has in view are intended for the good of the country, and should not be made the subject of general observation here. We should never raise an imputation and send it out to the country unfavorable to any head of a department unless there be some ground, some reason to sustain it. In this case there is none. The Government, I believe, is acting wisely and for the good of the country. I have no doubt that if any Senator here would go to the head of the Department and ask for this information, he would receive it all, and even be allowed, as a member of the Government, to look at the instructions. Then after doing that, if any gentleman thought the objects of the expedition were inconsistent with the public interests, he could come here and make this call and put it upon that ground.

Mr. RUSK. I do not know that there is much in this matter, and I care very little about it; but if we are to judge from the character of the debate, it would seem that there was some great, stupendous secret matter going on here for the benefit of the country. I can see no sort of objection to calling on the President to inform us why he sends an important expedition to a country which we have not been in the habit of visiting. One gentleman rises, and says that our seamen, who have been shipwrecked upon that coast, have been badly treated, and that we ought to have somebody out there to punish the inhabitants of that country for it. Well, the protection of our seamen is as much devolved upon Congress as it is upon the President, and I do not know that there is any necessity for any very great secret operations, when the question of protecting our citizens in a foreign country is concerned.

Another gentleman says that the object of the expedition is the establishment of commercial relations of high importance with another nation. Now, just as much responsibility devolves upon Congress as upon the President, in this respect; and I should apprehend that Congress could judge just as well about it as the President. I can see no mischief in adopting this resolution. I do not know but that we may be called upon to foot a very large bill for the expenses of this expedition.

I know that we have been called upon to pay large bills for some expeditions of this description; for we have had some of them. We recently had an expedition to survey the boundary line between this country and the Republic of Mexico; and the last I have seen of their movements was, that they were sending an immense amount of bugs and lizards, and animals of that sort, to be transported here at the expense of the Government, for which we have already been asked to pay $80,000. Here is an expedition, the precise object of which nobody knows, except the President; and why should not we, a coordinate branch of the Government, have this information? I think it is perfectly proper to call for the information. It is respectful to the President. I do not think it contemplates anything injurious to the country, and I think the President will have no difficulty in answering the resolution.

Mr. BORLAND. The discussion on this resolution has, I repeat, been very unexpected to me; for, really, I could not have anticipated any serious objection to its immediate adoption. If I were disposed to suspect the Administration of anything wrong, to attribute bad motives, to cast censure, or draw unkind, ill-natured, or disrespectful inferences, from the course pursued by its friends upon this floor, (all of which I disavow and have disavowed from the beginning,) I might remind the Senate, in the language of Scripture, that "the guilty flee when no man pursueth." Now, I have charged no impropriety upon the Administration. I have said repeatedly that I introduced the resolution in good faith, and upon the ground that we should know what is the object of an expedition involving the public interests, I do not say whether injuriously or advantageously; for I do not know. I think what I have said will bear that construction, throughout the discussion, and that the resolution itself will sustain it. Why, then, should the friends of this Administration make such opposition to it? If the objects of the expedition be good, why should it be kept concealed from the country? If it be bad, surely it will not be said that we should not know it, in order to arrest it before it has time to do mischief.

I have no disposition to be inquisitive—certainly not inquisitorial—in the affairs of this Administration; but I do insist that I have a right here—not beyond the walls of this Capitol—not in my individual capacity, but as the representative of one of the States of this Union, whose interests are involved—to ask for this information, and to receive it. If I were to go to the Department, as suggested by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. DAWSON,] and make inquiry—as it seems was made in regard to sending of troops into a Southern State, to which the Senator from New Hampshire alluded—it might very well be said to me by the head of the Department, "As an individual, you have nothing to do with it." I do not choose to put myself in that position—one that I would have no right to occupy; but I am exercising here my legitimate functions in my legitimate place. I but exercise my right, and, as I conceive, perform my duty. I am sorry that the friends of the Administration are unwilling for it to be interrogated. I feel that I need this information. I believe other Senators here also need and desire it. It is a question that can be easily settled. If the friends of the Administration are unwilling that we should know what the Administration is doing, and desire to keep its acts in the dark, and concealed from the people and the people's representatives—I care not for what reason—they will, of course, vote against the resolution. If a majority of the Senate agree with them, of course the resolution will be rejected, and we shall not get the information. That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. BADGER. As to the purpose and objects of this expedition, as it is called, I know nothing.

Mr. BORLAND. Nor do I.

Mr. BADGER. In relation to the subject-matter of it, I never exchanged a word with any member of the Administration, and I knew nothing about the resolution offered by the Senator from Arkansas, until after the adjournment of the Senate yesterday, when some one mentioned to me that such a resolution was laid upon the table. I have opposed the resolution, because I think the proceeding unbecoming; because it is without precedent; because it can do no good, and may do harm. The honorable Senator seems to suppose, that because some of us have opposed this resolution, it may raise an implication of ill-design somewhere, of which he had no knowledge, and which, before, he did not intend to attribute. He quotes the expression that "the guilty flee when no man pursueth." Now, none of us have fled yet; and I must be permitted to say that we have been very hotly pursued, and that the honorable Senator from Arkansas, who has been pursuing us, is very much of a "man," to say nothing about the friends who have supported him on the present occasion. So that, in every point of view, I do not see that the proverb exactly applies to the case in hand.

Mr. MANGUM. I had very little expectation, when I presented an objection to this resolution, that it would open a running debate to the extent which we have witnessed. The honorable Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HALE] has remarked that our naval officers need employment; and so, to keep ourselves employed, we are carping at any—even the smallest—subject which comes up; and if our time is consumed, it is very well done; but as to the public interest being promoted thereby, that is entirely another matter. I, too, know nothing about the objects of the Administration in fitting out this expedition, except, as I think, it is apparent to everybody who has reflected upon the subject, that it is commercial, purely, and is designed, in certain contingencies, perhaps, to be something more. I should judge so; I think it ought to be so. I know nothing about it, however. I have had no communication whatever with any member of the Administration upon the subject.

I mean not to detain the Senate any longer; but I wish to move, that for the present, the resolution lie on the table. I have no disposition to oppose its being taken up at a future period, if gentlemen shall desire it. I want a little more time to consider it. I have indicated no decided hostility to it; but it is an unusual and unprecedented thing, as far as I know. I think doctrines have been advanced here wholly incompatible with the genuine and true spirit of our system. Instructions, it may be, of a military character have been issued; and it is said that the Senate has a right, in its official capacity, to have them unfolded to it by the Executive. Sir, suppose it had been known that we were to strike a blow at Cerro Gordo, at Vera Cruz, or elsewhere, during the Mexican war, and the rebellious and factious Whigs of this body had called upon Mr. Polk to inform us what were the objects of the expedition, where he meant to strike next, and what were the orders from the War Department to the General: is it imaginable that there is a single intelligent Democrat in the body who would not have scoffed at and scorned it? I think not; and any man who would have made such a requisition upon the Administration would have shown that he was acting, not only against all precedent, but against all the principles, in my humble apprehension, of good common sense. I move that, for the present, the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the gentleman permit me to say one word?

Mr. MANGUM. If you will renew the motion.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will renew it. My only objection to the resolution is because it calls for the instructions. I think the honorable Senator from Michigan laid down the principle very correctly, that the general force and general object of the expedition is a legitimate inquiry; but the instructions ought to be confidential and secret in a case of this kind. I shall, therefore, vote against laying the resolution on the table, for the purpose of amending it, as suggested by the Senator from Delaware, by striking out the instructions, and calling only for the general force and general objects of the expedition. I now, according to my promise, renew the motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. BORLAND. So far as I am concerned, I will agree to striking out that portion of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on laying the resolution on the table.

Mr. BORLAND asked for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. CASS. Do I understand that the provision respecting the instructions has been stricken out?

The PRESIDENT. It has not.

Mr. CASS. I understood that the honorable Senator from Arkansas agreed to an amendment to that effect.

The PRESIDENT. He could not do so.

The question on laying the resolution on the table, being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Brooke, Clarke, Cooper, Dawson, Fish, Foot, Gwin, Hale, Mangum, Miller, Morton, Seward, Smith, Underwood, Upham, and Weller—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Borland, Bradbury, Brodhead, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Hamilton, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Norris, Rusk, Sebastian, Shields, Spruance, Sumner, and Walker—24.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. RUSK. I desire to apologize, under the rebuke administered by the honorable Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MANGUM,] for entering into this debate. I am sorry that I followed his example; but if the Senate and the Senator will excuse me, I will not follow it again. [Laughter.]

The amendment to strike out that portion of the resolution relating to the instructions, was agreed to; there being, on a division—yeas 22, nays 11.

Mr. SHIELDS. I now propose an amendment, to insert the words "force and general," so that it will read "communicate to the Senate the force and general objects of the expedition."

Mr. BORLAND. I would suggest to leave out the word "general."

Mr. SHIELDS. Very well. I merely want to get at the size and character of the expedition. I am willing to leave out "general."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I saw recently an order passed by a legislative body, in one of the States of the Union, asking one of their officers why he had done a certain thing. The answer he made was, that he had never done anything of the sort. It seems to me that we are putting ourselves in that position. We ask the President why he has ordered a naval expedition to the coast of Japan? Does anybody know that he has done it? Has any order, any communication, to that effect been published? Are not the Senate undertaking to go entirely in the dark? and would it not be as well to find out first whether any such expedition has been ordered, before we ask the President why he has ordered it? If we do not, we may be subjected to the mortifying response from the President, "I have not done any such thing." I should not like to put myself in such a position.

The PRESIDENT. The question is now on the passage of the resolution as amended.

Mr. BORLAND. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, I regret very much that the condition of my throat, to-day, has precluded the possibility of my expressing my opinions on this question. It was the more important from the fact that I have found it necessary to differ from those with whom I am politically associated, and that I have found myself thrown among those with whom I have not ordinarily been politically associated.

If any Senator will rise in his place, and say that he has any good reason for believing that this expedition has been fitted out under the orders of the President of the United States, for an improper purpose, or that that expedition is calculated to operate against the public interests, I will vote for this resolution. For my own part, I cannot see what good can result from this information, even if it be transmitted to us by the President. It is true, that by the terms of the resolution, you have left it discretionary with the President. He is to communicate the information, "if compatible with the public interests;" but the very moment the President of the United States announces to the Senate that he cannot give that information, compatibly with the public interest, that moment you have advertised to the whole world that you have a secret expedition, and that you dare not disclose the motives and intentions by which you are actuated in sending it out. In that way, you operate seriously against the public interests. I have long thought that there was too much publicity given to our public negotiations. At this age of the world, when there is a rivalry between the nations of the earth for the commerce of the world, it is oftentimes important that your adversaries, or those who are contending with you for the supremacy, should not be enabled to comprehend your movements until they shall have been made. I am satisfied that serious inconveniences have resulted from giving too much publicity to negotiations; and if I were an older member of the Senate, I would propose that your rules should be so amended that propositions calling upon Departments of the Government for information in regard to negotiations, should be considered in secret session, when we could speak our sentiments freely, and as one family, and when we could disclose the objects of these missions so far as they were understood. Now, I know nothing of this, as I have before remarked, excepting that I suppose one of the objects of the expedition is to obtain, if possible, access to Japan; to open commercial negotiations with that country, and to transport the unfortunate Chinese who have been confined now for nearly a year in a revenue cutter in the bay of San Francisco, one of whom, I doubt not, has long since paid the debt of nature, having considered himself, for twelve months, as being in the custody of an officer under the law; in other words, that he was imprisoned. If it is well understood by Senators here, that this is the general object of the expedition, I ask what advantage can result from obtaining the particular instructions which may have been given to the officer in charge of it? Do you propose to found any legislation on that information? Does any Senator suppose there is anything wrong in the instructions? Let him say so, and I will vote for the resolution. But you are compelled, from the very necessity of the case, to place some confidence and reliance upon those who have been selected by the people of the United States to occupy the Executive chair. You are compelled to rely upon the judgment and upon the integrity of an Executive officer while he is acting in strict conformity with the law. Sir, I have, perhaps, no more confidence in this Administration than the gentlemen with whom I have been politically associated; but they have been placed there by the people; and so long as I am satisfied that they are pursuing the course which their duties require them to pursue, I shall not complain. If any Senator will say that he has any reason whatever—whether founded upon public rumor, or upon newspaper allegations, or upon the declarations of some chairman of a military or naval committee elsewhere—to believe in his conscience that there is anything wrong going on, or that this expedition is fitted out for any other than a purpose which is right, proper, and lawful, I will vote for the inquiry, and not till then.

Mr. BORLAND. In response to the remarks of the Senator from California, I can only say, that I have not charged, nor have I supposed that the President was engaged in any expedition, intended or calculated to inflict injury upon the interests of this country; but have we not as much right, and is it not as necessary and proper for us, to have information with regard to proper and legitimate expeditions and operations of the Government as improper ones?

Mr. WELLER. We cannot get it without the whole world having it; and I do not choose that other nations shall have it.

Mr. BORLAND. But the Senator is also mistaken as to the instructions. That part of the resolution has been stricken out. We do not now ask for the instructions, but merely for the force engaged, and the objects of the expedition; and then we leave it to the President to say how much of the information, even in respect to this, shall be communicated. There is no charge or intimation of impropriety; but I would ask for the information as soon, and I desire it as much, if the expedition were for a purpose that I knew to be proper and beneficial to the country, as I would if I knew it to be an injurious one.

Mr. GWIN. This question may have an important bearing upon the State which I have the honor to represent in part; and I think it would be better to let it go over, so that we may proceed to the consideration of Executive business. We have important Executive business to transact, and I hope the Senate will agree to go into Executive session. I therefore move to postpone the further consideration of this resolution until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to by a vote—on a division—of 23 yeas to 16 nays.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 1, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, House bill No. 229, granting land to the State of Alabama, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Memphis, in Tennessee, to intersect the Charleston, Chattanooga, and Nashville railroads in Alabama, which was reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman from Arkansas made the motion to refer; I do—

Mr. CLINGMAN. I insist upon the regular order of business.

Mr. SIBLEY asked the gentleman from North Carolina to withdraw the motion, to enable him to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the establishment of a military post at some eligible point on the waters of the Upper Minnesota river; and that said committee report by bill, or otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was demanded.

Mr. COBB. I think it was afterwards withdrawn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to make the motion that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. KING, of New York. Let us refer the land bill first.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COBB. The suggestion I was about to throw out was this: I wish to be fair in reference to this matter; and had I the control of the question, I would, according to the dictates of my own judgment, while there was a member of the House dissatisfied in relation to the matters connected with this bill, and desirous of discussing it upon its merits, protest against the calling of the previous question. The general principle involved has already been fully discussed, and I presume that further debate with regard to the principle is not now desired. If there is a solitary member of the House anxious to discuss the merits of the bill, I will not call the previous question. Is there one? [No response.]

Well, there is none. Yesterday it was suggested by some of my friends, that, before the bill was passed, it should be printed. Through the kindness of Mr. Rives, the publisher of our debates, the bill has been printed, and may be found in the Supplement to this morning's Globe, which is upon every member's desk. I had it printed to obviate the objection to which I have alluded.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman from Alabama seems anxious that this bill should be discussed and understood. In order to effect that object, I suggest to the gentleman that he should submit the motion to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union before he calls for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. That motion is now pending.

Mr. COBB. If there are gentlemen desirous of discussing the merits of this bill, I should like to hear from them.

Mr. STANLY. The gentleman asks a question, and I suppose he wants an answer. I have heard more than half a dozen gentlemen express a desire to discuss the merits of this bill, and the principle involved.

Mr. COBB. Then I will not call for the previous question.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not understand the gentleman from North Carolina as intimating that gentlemen wanted to discuss the bill during the morning hour.

Mr. STANLY. No at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then the previous question only secures against discussion during the morning hour.

Mr. STANLY. I want it referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. KING. I hope we will take the question upon the reference. No one wants to discuss this bill, and there is no need of calling for the previous question. I call for the question.

The question was then put, and decided in the affirmative.

Mr. COBB. The bill has been referred.

The SPEAKER. Almost unanimously.

So the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. Reports from the Committee on Public Lands are still in order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. As there is nothing before the House, I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. COBB. I am before the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a point of order. I wish to speak to a point of fact. My colleague [Mr. COBB] is now upon the floor, for the purpose of reporting from the Committee on Public Lands, as the Chairman announced reports from that committee were in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so announced, but no member rose and addressed the Chair. Under the circumstances, the Chair thinks the gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. My understanding is this: The Chair put the question upon the reference of the bill. It was referred. The gentleman from Alabama made an inquiry, and the Chair responded that the question had been put and the House had referred the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, almost unanimously.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman from Alabama then appeared to be examining in his drawer for papers, or something else, when I addressed the Chair, he not having done so.

The SPEAKER. There is no question as to the reference of the bill from the Committee on Public Lands to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Alabama said that he was upon the floor, and, while in the act of getting papers to present a report from the Committee on Public Lands, the gentleman from Tennessee addressed the Chair.

Mr. JONES. I first addressed the Chair, and was recognized after the reference of the railroad bill.

Mr. KING. Unless there is an appeal taken, I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. DANIEL. A single remark with regard to a fact. I think after the reference, the Chair remarked that reports were still in order from the Committee on Public Lands. The gentleman from Alabama immediately opened his drawer and was getting out the balance of his reports, when the gentleman from Tennessee rose, and was recognized by the Chair, and submitted his motion. I think the gentleman from Alabama is clearly entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, under the circumstances, that the gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FREEMAN. I desire to say that there are several members from the Committee on Public Lands desirous of submitting reports when the gentleman from Alabama shall have finished those under his charge.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must say that a strict and rigid construction of the rule would be to allow the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] the floor. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from Alabama did not address the Chair in that connection to entitle him under the rules, strictly speaking, to the floor; but, under the circumstances, the Chair decides that the gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of William R. W. Cobb, reported "A bill granting the right of way to the State of Alabama and a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from Winchester, Tennessee, to some point on the Tennessee river, at or near Deposit, Alabama;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the bill and report ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. COBB, it was ordered that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the following memorial, and petition, and that the same be laid upon the table, viz:

The memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama, praying a grant of lands to equalize the sixteenth section school fund;

The petition of citizens of Missouri upon the same subject; and

The memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama, praying for a reserve of public lands in the district of St. Stephens, in said State.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred House bill No. 74, to reduce and graduate the price of the public lands to actual settlers and cultivators, reported the same back with sundry amendments; which bill and amendments were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the report accompanying, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HENN, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House No. 217, to legalize certain entries of public lands made in the State of Florida, reported the same back without amendment.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I pledge myself not to occupy more than three minutes of the time of the House. It will be recollected, that many years ago a law was passed for the armed occupation and settlement of Florida; under which, citizens of the other States, as well as of the State of Florida, were induced to occupy portions of the public lands on the Indian frontier. The conditions were, that settlers should reside for five years upon the land, with other conditions. In some instances they did not comply with the conditions of the grant, and their permits were forfeited before the expiration of the time. But the first conditions of the grant having been complied with, a permit was issued to the settler, and the lands were withdrawn from sale. When the permits were forfeited for any cause, lands reverted to the General Government. Under these circumstances, individuals applied at the land office, paid their $1 25 for the land, presuming that they were subject to entry. The land officers in Florida considered that such was the fact, and so decided. That was the construction they placed upon the instructions from the General Land Office. When the parties who, under these circumstances, bought and paid for their lands, came to apply for their patent, they were told by the Commissioner here that, inasmuch as the lands had been once withdrawn from sale, they could not be entered without being offered at public sale a second time. Now, by virtue of the certificate of the land officers in Florida, they have gone upon these lands, settled and improved them, and at this moment they are liable to be dispossessed by mere squatters or preemptionists. This bill was prepared at the General Land Office, and inasmuch as these parties have paid the money, and inasmuch as the Government never can get one cent more for them—for if you do not confirm the titles of the present occupants, squatters or preemptionists will take possession of them—we earnestly ask that these titles shall be confirmed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CABELL] a question. I understood him to say that these lands were withdrawn from public sale?

Mr. CABELL. By virtue of the law, when the permit was taken out by the persons who went out under the armed occupation, they were necessarily withdrawn from sale. It was supposed that these parties would go on and comply with the terms; but for some reason they did not comply with them, and they forfeited their titles, and then other persons went on and entered the lands. They cannot get their patents, because the lands, having been once withdrawn, were not subject to private entry until again put into market by advertisement.

Mr. HOUSTON. Have they been offered at public sale?

Mr. CABELL. They have, and the parties have paid Government price. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and I desire to repeat what I said in reference to the bill presented by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB.] I do not do it because I am opposed to the passage of the bill, but because I want other committees in this House to have a chance to make their reports. If the Committee on Public Lands are to be indulged in this course of putting all their bills upon their final passage, the rest of the committees will not have a chance to report this session. Yesterday was consumed in the presentation of two reports from the Committee on Public Lands; and before that time they had been reporting for two months. If they continue at this rate, when, in the name of all that is reasonable, will they disgorge themselves. They have occupied the attention of the House for more than two months. I move the previous question upon my proposition, and give notice, that I intend to do so upon every other case, if I can get the floor.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then put, and upon a division there were—ayes 57, noes 46; no quorum voting.

Mr. CABELL demanded tellers; and Messrs. STANTON, of Tennessee, and FULLER, of Maine, were appointed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Florida, [Mr. CABELL,] if this bill does anything more than to propose to let the persons who are on the lands, and have made improvements upon it, to take it at Government prices?

Mr. CABELL. Nothing more. They have paid the Government price, and they are liable to be dispossessed of their lands unless this bill pass, although they have made improvements thereon.

Mr. JONES. Then I can see no objection to the immediate passage of the bill.

Mr. FOWLER. I think the question is not fully understood. Will the Speaker have the goodness to state it again?

The SPEAKER. The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands, and the question was whether it should be ordered to a third reading? During the pendency of that question a motion is made to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then taken; and the tellers (Messrs. STANTON, of Tennessee, and FULLER, of Maine) reported that there were—ayes 30, noes not counted. So the bill was not referred.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I believe the previous question is exhausted.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order upon the bill. None can be indulged except by unanimous consent, the previous question not having been exhausted.

Mr. STUART. I understand the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CABELL] to state, that if this bill does not pass, these men who have bought the land and paid for it will lose it, by somebody else preempting it.

Mr. CABELL. It may be done.

Mr. STUART. How can any one preempt land that is occupied by another?

Mr. CABELL. Because those upon it are not entitled to the right of preemption under the law, although others are.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, having been engrossed, was read the third time.

Mr. CABELL. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage; and I demand the previous question.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I ask that the bill be read through.

The bill having been read by the Clerk—

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; which was upon the final passage of the bill.

The question was then taken, and the bill was passed.

Mr. CABELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES W. CAMPBELL.

Mr. HENN. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of James W.

Campbell, of Pike county, Missouri, asking the privilege of entering lands with two receivers' receipts for moneys paid for two entries which, by some neglect on the part of the land officers, were never consummated, reported a bill for his relief; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. PORTER. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage. It is a plain case, and I can make it perfectly clear to the House in a few moments, by reading the bill and the report. They will explain the whole matter.

Mr. P. called for the reading of the report.

The Clerk read the report.

Mr. PORTER. I think this is a very plain case; and, as the reading of the report has taken up a great deal of time, I call for the previous question.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. This is a private bill. Is it too late to move to refer it to the Committee of the Whole House?

The SPEAKER. It is. The previous question is demanded.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put; and, being put, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, having been read a third time, was passed.

Mr. PORTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, without amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass, House bill No. 69, "to create three additional land districts in the State of Iowa;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HENN, from the same committee, reported back House bill No. 41, "granting the right of way and making a donation of the public lands to the Territory of Minnesota, to aid in the construction of a railroad from the Falls of the St. Louis river to St. Paul, on the Mississippi river," without amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SIBLEY. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether, if this bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it can be taken up on the territorial days as a territorial measure?

The SPEAKER. That will be a question for the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to determine.

Mr. SIBLEY then moved that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it be printed; which motion was agreed to.

SALT SPRING LANDS OF IOWA.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back Senate bill No. 55, "to relinquish to the State of Iowa the lands reserved for salt springs therein," with an amendment, and with a recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill do pass.

The bill and amendment were then read.

Mr. HENN. I will merely state to the House that, by the act of the 3d of March, 1845, which was supplemental to the act for the admission of the States of Iowa and Florida into the Union, these salt springs, with the lands adjoining, were granted to the State of Iowa, with this proviso; to wit:

"Provided, That no salt spring, the right whereof is now vested in any individual or individuals, or which may hereafter be confirmed or adjudged to any individual or individuals, shall, by this section, be granted to said State: And provided, also, That the General Assembly shall never lease or sell the same, at any one time, for a longer period than ten years, without the consent of Congress."

The object of this bill is to take away this last proviso, which virtually entitles the State only to lease the lands for a term of ten years. The State has, by her legislation, put the proceeds of these lands into the school fund, and we are anxious to sell the lands, in order that they may be settled, and that the school fund may be made available at once. The Superintendent of Public Instruction has lately written a very urgent letter to the delegation from the State, requesting them to procure the immediate passage of a bill like this, for the reason that the State Medical College of Iowa, for whose benefit a portion of the proceeds from the sale of these lands has been set apart, is in want of funds.

The amendment is put in, in order that the rights of private individuals may not be interfered with. I ask that the bill may now be put upon its passage.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, moved to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and, on that motion, he demanded the previous question.

The question being put upon seconding the demand for the previous question, on a division there were—ayes 43, noes 23; no quorum voting.

Mr. ORR demanded tellers; and they were ordered.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. If the House will agree to pass all the bills that come from the hands of the Committee on Public Lands in a lump, it will save time. I will withdraw the demand for the previous question, and also the motion to refer the bill.

Mr. VENABLE renewed the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ORR. The bill now before the House ought to be passed; it is right and proper. The subject has been investigated by the Committee on Public Lands, and I will make a brief statement, which, I think, will satisfy the House.

By previous legislation of Congress, the use of certain salt springs was reserved to the State of Iowa throughout all time to come, without any reversionary interest being reserved to the Government of the United States. The object of this bill is, to give the fee simple in these lands to the State, and let them be disposed of by being sold or rented, as the Legislature of the State may choose. This Government can lose nothing at all by the operation, for all its rights to the land passed from it under the previous act of Congress. I hope the bill will pass, and I now demand the previous question.

Mr. MEACHAM. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina, if there is any pressing necessity for taking up this bill and passing it, out of its ordinary course?

Mr. ORR. I cannot say that there is, but it may as well be passed now as at any time.

The previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered to be now put; and being put, the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was agreed to, on a division—ayes 69, noes 52.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred House bill No. 12, granting a certain quantity of land to the State of Iowa for the purpose of aiding said State in the construction of railroads from Dubuque to Keokuck, and from Davenport to the Missouri river, in said State, reported the following bill as a substitute therefor, viz:

A BILL to grant a certain quantity of land to the State of Iowa, for the purpose of aiding said State in the construction of railroads from Dubuque to Keokuck, and from Davenport to the Missouri river, in said State.

And be it enacted, &c., That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby granted to the State of Iowa for the construction of railroads from the city of Dubuque to Keokuck, and from Davenport on the Mississippi river in said State to such point on the Missouri river as may be designated on the authority of said State, which authority shall also fix and determine the rights of each of said railroads; and shall have the right, also, to take necessary materials of earth, stones, timber, etc., for the construction thereof from the public lands of the United States adjacent to said railroads: Provided, That the right of way shall not exceed one hundred feet on each side of the line of said roads; and a copy of the survey of said roads, made under the direction of the Legislature, shall be forwarded to the proper local land offices respectively, and to the General Land Office at Washington city, within ninety days after the completion of the same.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby granted to the State of Iowa, for the purpose of aiding in making the railroads aforesaid, every alternate section of land designated by even numbers, for six sections in width on each side of said roads; but in case it shall appear that the United States have, when the lines or routes of said roads are definitely fixed by the authority aforesaid, sold any section or any part thereof granted as aforesaid, or that the right of preemption has attached to the same, then it shall be lawful for any agent or agents to be appointed by the Governor of said State, to select, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, from the lands of the United States most contiguous to the tier of sections above specified, so much land in alternate sections or parts of sections, as shall be equal to such lands as the United States have sold, or to which the right of preemption has attached as aforesaid, which lands (thus selected in lieu of those sold, and to which preemption have attached as aforesaid, together with the sections and parts of sections designated by even numbers as aforesaid and appropriated as aforesaid, shall be held by the State of Iowa) for the use and purpose aforesaid: Provided, That the lands to be so located, shall in no case be further than fifteen miles from the line of the road in each case and selected for and on account of each of said roads: Provided further, That the lands hereby granted shall be exclusively applied in the construction of that road for which it was granted and selected, and shall be disposed of only as the work progresses, and the same shall be applied to no other purpose whatsoever: And provided further, That any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States by any act of Congress, or in any other manner by competent authority, for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement, or for any other purpose whatsoever, be and the same are hereby reserved to the United States from the operation of this act, except so far as it may be found necessary to locate the routes of the said railroads through such reserved lands, in which case the right of way only shall be granted.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the sections and parts of sections of land which, by such grant, shall remain to the United States, within six miles on each side of each of said roads shall not be sold for less than double the minimum price of the public lands when sold.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the said lands hereby granted to the said State shall be subject to the disposal of the Legislature thereof, for the purposes aforesaid and no other; and the said railroads shall be and remain a public highway, for the use of the Government of the United States, free from toll or other charge, upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted to said State, shall be disposed of by said State only in manner following, that is to say: that a quantity of land not exceeding one hundred and twenty sections for each of said roads, and included within a continuous length of twenty miles of said roads may be sold; and when the Governor of said State shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that said twenty continuous miles of either of said roads is completed, then another like quantity of land hereby granted may be sold, and so from time to time, until said roads are completed, and if said roads are not completed within ten years, no further sales shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the United States mail shall, at all times, be transported on said railroads under the direction of the Post Office Department, at such price as the Congress may by law direct.

Mr. HENN said: As the disposition of the House has evidently been against putting these bills upon their passage, notwithstanding a bill, making an appropriation of $500,000 for building an addition to this Capitol, is put upon its passage and rushed through this House—

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. That bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I tried for two months, before I could get it up.

Mr. HENN. It was taken up out of its order though.

Mr. STANTON. No, sir. It was made a special order.

Mr. HENN. It was taken up, and the appropriation was increased from $10,000 to $500,000.

Mr. Chairman, I think the time has come when the members of the House from the West should stand up and vote with each other, upon all these propositions. The time has arrived when we are to determine whether we are to have justice done us or not; and for one, I am willing to test the question upon this bill. It is a thing that has been asked for many years by the people of my country; and I hope the members of this House from the West, if they intend to do justice to the West, will vote with me for the immediate passage of this bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. Do I understand my friend from Iowa to say that he does not want anybody but Western men to vote for his bill?

Mr. HENN. No, sir; I do not say that. But I do say that there is a disposition upon the part of this House to rush through everything that is for the benefit of the Eastern people, while it is their object to defeat or delay everything that is for the benefit of the West.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I desire to add a word. It is apparent that the business in reference to these railroads has got a vast deal ahead of the other business of this House, and there seem to be pretty strong indications that it is the determination of the members from the old States to throw back all these bills granting alternate sections of land for railroad purposes, till they have either secured or lost their own measures, and to do this in order that they may determine what course to pursue in relation to these grants. Now, as I remarked, by the industry of those to whom these railroad matters were committed, this business is in advance of much of the other business of the House. All we ask is, that you will take up this business in its regular order. We ask that you will permit the vote to be taken upon these measures, in which we are interested, when we bring them forward, and that you will not put them back until all those matters in which others are interested shall have been disposed of. We ask nothing more.

If the measures which gentlemen from the East have at heart were in advance of the other business of the House, as ours now is, it would be deemed outrageous—it would be considered the highest order of impudence, if the members from the new States—from the States which now ask these grants—were to come forward and to set aside their measures, in order that we might first have the House tested upon those in which we are interested—measures that are for the benefit of the Western and Southwestern States? That is the position in which the matter stands. Now I appeal to the sense of justice of the House, and ask if it is right, in consideration of the fact that the gentlemen from the West and Southwest have, by their industry, brought up these measures, that they shall be staved off until other measures be got through? And I ask if the House ought not to give us a just and fair test, or trial, and either pass these bills or reject them? In either event, I presume we will be satisfied.

Mr. VENABLE. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENN] to allow me to put a question to the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON.] I wish him to tell me what particular eastern bill has been taken up and rushed through this House?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not charge that there has been any concerted action upon the part of gentlemen from the East; but I say the evident tendency is to throw back the measures in which we, from the West and Southwest, are interested, and to bring forward those which are for the benefit of the East.

Mr. VENABLE. I dislike very much to consume the time of the gentleman from Iowa. But that gentleman has appealed to gentlemen from the West to stand up and claim their rights. Now, I want to know—for I have voted for a good many bills brought forward by our Western friends—where is the necessity for this battle-cry? When have the rights of the West not been respected by gentlemen from other portions of the Union? I ask the gentleman to answer my question, for I should loathe myself, if I supposed myself capable of voting for or against a bill because it was to benefit any particular section of the country. I want to put the history of the country right. I want to be rebuked, if I am wrong. Let the country know the facts of the case. If there has been any spirit manifested by the representatives of the older or Eastern States to get up any scheme for their interest, to the disadvantage of the Western States—if there has been any railroad scheme, or any scheme for special or local legislation, upon the part of the old States, I should like to know it, for I am not advised of it.

Mr. COBB. Perhaps I can answer the gentleman.

Mr. VENABLE. I should be glad if anybody would answer it.

Mr. COBB. Perhaps the gentleman has forgotten a bill which was introduced into the House not long since, granting the privilege of the suspension of the duties on railroad iron, for a certain railroad in North Carolina. If I mistake not, the bill came from the Senate, and was laid upon the Speaker's table. It was taken up, and the House refused to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but put it on its passage.

Mr. VENABLE. And then you refused to pass it.

Mr. COBB. I voted for it.

Mr. VENABLE. But the House refused to pass it.

Mr. COBB. I voted for it, and thought then the bill should be passed; but the action of the House has since convinced me of the necessity of restraining my liberality, in voting for bills coming from that quarter.

Mr. HENN. I believe it is in order to answer one question by asking another. I desire to know of the gentleman from North Carolina whether he hails from an Eastern or Southern State?

Mr. VENABLE. I hail from an Atlantic State, and one of the old States. I will take occasion, however, to say, that the bill to which the gentleman has alluded did not propose to make any appropriation for any railroad in North Carolina, nor did it propose to remit the duty on iron. It only extended the time for its payment. But that privilege was not granted. It was not voted for by Western men. Yet I made no such murmurs as we have heard here to-day. I did not taunt Western men, nor anybody, with combining to defeat my scheme. But I rose simply to ask the gentleman from Iowa to specify what combination had taken place to defeat his schemes, for I thought it was a reflection upon the Eastern and Atlantic States, which have no public lands.

Mr. HALL. As the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VENABLE] seems exceedingly anxious to know in what cases the old States have acted in favor of their own schemes, and in hostility to those of the new ones, I will give him one single instance. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] introduced a bill here proposing to give land to the old States of the Union. A motion was made to refer it to the Committee on Public Lands; but that motion was voted down, and the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and thus put ahead of the regular order of business.

Mr. MEACHAM. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. HENN. I cannot yield further.

Mr. MEACHAM. I will not occupy more than one minute.

Mr. HENN. Then I will yield for one minute.

Mr. MEACHAM. An accusation has been thrown against us that we have been legislating for the interests of the Eastern States, and against the interests of the Western States. Now, I wish to ask this one question: "Is this extension of the Capitol an Eastern interest, or is it a national interest?"

Mr. HENN. It is an Eastern interest.

Mr. MEACHAM. I desire secondly, to ask whether the deficiency bill was for Eastern or Western interests?

Mr. HENN. And I will ask the gentleman by what votes that bill was passed?

Mr. MEACHAM. I will say that the deficiency bill made an appropriation of about $3,000,000, and of this, $2,500,000 has gone to Western interests.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a question of order. I understand the question to be upon referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That is the motion before the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I make the point that this discussion is not relevant to that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion to refer opens the merits of the whole bill to discussion.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the Chair whether, upon a motion to refer, it is in order to enter into a discussion whether Eastern or Western interests are most benefited?

The SPEAKER. Incidental remarks which are made, may not be strictly in order; but in a running debate, the Chair cannot check gentlemen in such remarks.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the Chair might make a running decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. ROBBINS. I want to make an inquiry of the Chair. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

Mr. ROBBINS. Would it be in order, at this time, to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order to move to go to the business on the Speaker's table, if the gentleman desires to make that motion.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to inquire if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS] can take the floor from another member, to make that motion?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order for the gentleman to arrest debate, in order to move to go into the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table. The Chair, however, did not understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania as making that motion.

Mr. HENN. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANLY. Is it in order to move to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. STANLY. I then make that motion.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it in order to submit a motion to suspend the rules, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I submit the motion.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HIBBARD in the chair.)

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The business before the committee is House bill No. 7, for the promotion of agriculture, and for other purposes, and upon that question, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PORTER] has the floor.

Mr. PORTER occupied the floor an hour in an argument to show that Congress had the power, in virtue of that clause of the Constitution in regard to the regulation of commerce among the States, to construct works of internal improvement, whether in the interior or upon the seaboard; and that, under the other power to dispose of the territory and other property belonging to the United States, Congress could make liberal appropriations of lands to improve the navigation of rivers, to build harbors on the lakes, and to construct railroads. He declared himself to be in favor both of the policy and principle of making grants from the public domain for such purposes, believing that it was just, right, expedient, and national. He maintained that although these grants be made to the particular States, yet the benefits are not local, but general—benefiting not the particular States merely, but the interests of the whole Union. He also argued, that if the homestead was granted as proposed by this bill, he should not then regard the beneficiaries under it as owing much in gratitude to the Government, unless lands were also given to the States to aid in improving natural channels of commerce and opening up new ones, to enable the settlers to find a ready market for the products of their labor.

Mr. CLEVELAND then obtained the floor. He addressed the committee an hour, during which he expressed himself in favor of the passage of the bill. He contended, that if the friends of the railroad projects would pass this bill, they would have their roads constructed much earlier than by making grants of lands to the States for the purpose; which grants would fall inevitably into the hands of Wall street companies and speculators, and be used to conserve their personal interests, instead of those of the States to which the grants might be made. He said that he had voted for the grant to Illinois at the last Congress, and had regretted it ever since, because he was now convinced that it would prove disadvantageous to her. He spoke of the compromise measures of the last session; and maintained that they were of Whig origin; that they had been carried through by the influence of Messrs. Clay, Fillmore, Webster, and Scott. He viewed the fugitive slave law as a most centralizing measure—one imbued with old Federal principles—and predicted that the day would come when there would not be a Democrat in the Union bold enough to say that their ancestors had voted for it. [These speeches will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. DURHAM here obtained the floor, but yielded it to

Mr. BROOKS, who moved that the committee rise; which motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the homestead bill, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. GORMAN moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the gentleman if he will not withdraw that motion for a moment. There is upon the Speaker's table a communication from the Treasury Department, covering a plan and estimates for public buildings, which are proposed to be erected in California; and it is important that it should be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. I ask that it be taken up and referred.

Mr. GORMAN withdrew his motion for the purpose; and, there being no objection, the communication was taken up, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. NABERS. I ask the indulgence of the House for a moment, with the view of putting myself right, and I wish to do it at once. It is entirely a personal matter, and I will detain the House but a few minutes. I quote now from the speech of my colleague from the fourth district, [Mr. BROWN,] and I regret that he is not present. In his speech in the Daily Globe of this morning, appears the following:

"One of my colleagues [Mr. NABERS] the other day asked in the course of his speech, 'What it was that constituted party? Was it numbers or principles?' He said it was numbers, and as there were numbers in Mississippi who avowed themselves secessionists, he concluded there was a secession party there. My colleague's premises are badly laid, and his conclusions do not follow his premises. Numbers do not constitute party. It takes principles and numbers both to constitute party; and it takes something else—it takes the organization of numbers on principle to constitute party."

That is what my colleague says. I wish to read what I did say; and it will appear from the simple reading of both these extracts, that my colleague, unintentionally I am bound to think, makes me say precisely the opposite of what I did say. I will read from my speech what I did say:

"What does it take to constitute a party? Is it numbers, or is it principles? Everybody will say it is principles that determine the character of a party."

The point is simply this: My colleague makes me say, that it is numbers which constitutes party, when I say it is principles. That is all I have to say; and I thank the House for their indulgence.

On motion, the House then adjourned.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. CABLE, of Ohio: The memorial of John B. Bayless, of Ohio, against the importation of spirituous liquors.

By Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee: The petition of John Ryland, asking Congress to place him on an equal footing with the other members of Captain O'Brien's company, for certain reasons set forth in the petition.

By Mr. SCUDDER: The petition of Edward Watt Robinson and 51 others, citizens of New Bedford, Massachusetts asking aid for the Collins line of steam-ships.

By Mr. GAYLORD: The petition of E. A. Bratton and 100 other citizens of Noble county, Ohio, asking Congress to establish the bridges of the Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Company as post roads.

By Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York: A memorial of citizens of New York, asking a donation of the public lands in aid of the construction of a railroad from Saratoga to Sackett's Harbor.

By Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana: The memorial of James H. Nelson, L. A. Burnett, and S. A. Gartrell, of Indiana, praying additional compensation for their services in taking the Seventh Census.

By Mr. McDONALD: The petition of John Edgcomb, asking for loss of clothing and property, occasioned by the voluntary destruction of the United States ship Adams in 1814.

Also, the petitions of John Edgcomb and William Davis, asking for benefits of bounty acts of 1850.

By Mr. ROBBIE: The remonstrance of W. W. McCay and other citizens of Steuben county, New York, against the extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. PARKER, of Indiana: The petition of Charles H. Test, Joseph G. Marshall, and 21 others, members of the Indiana bar, praying for a change in the judicial system of the United States.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 2, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was Ordered, That the execution of the order of the Senate, assigning Friday of each week for the consideration of private claims, be suspended until one o'clock this day.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. CLARKE presented a petition of citizens of Providence, Rhode Island, praying that beacons and buoys be placed in Providence river and Narragansett bay, and that the location of the light-house on Nayatt Point may be changed; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COOPER presented the memorial of Harriet Ward, praying that her pension may be made to extend back to the time of her husband's death; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a memorial of citizens of Washington county, Pennsylvania, praying that the transportation of the mail on Sunday may be prohibited by law; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, the petition of Miron R. Peek, praying remuneration for losses incurred in consequence of a violation of his contracts for furnishing granite for the dry-dock at Brooklyn; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Also, a memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying a modification of the bounty-land law; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SEWARD presented the memorial of the heir of Ebenezer Sage, praying indemnity for French spoils prior to 1800; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. RUSK submitted additional documents relating to the petition of James Hamilton; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPER WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That the petition of Lydia Lord, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. GEYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of H. H. Cooley and others, citizens of Cayuga county, New York, in behalf of Phoebe Morris, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of Harriet de la Palm Baker, only daughter of Frederick H. Wiessensfels, an officer of the Revolution, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill granting lands and the right of way to the States of Indiana and Illinois, to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point on the Ohio river, opposite to Louisville, in the State of Kentucky, to a point on the Mississippi river, opposite to St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, reported the same with an amendment.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill to grant preemption rights to certain settlers on an island, called the Grand Chenière, in the southwestern land district in Louisiana, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

EXTENSION OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Public Buildings, to which was referred the resolution of the Senate of the 16th March last, calling for information as to the quality, dimensions of the stone, quality of mortar used, character of the work, mode of construction, &c., for the extension of the Capitol, with any matters connected therewith as may affect the stability and permanency of the whole structure, submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUNTER. The Committee on Public Buildings, to which was referred the joint resolution to authorize the continuance of the work upon the two wings of the Capitol, with the amendment of the House of Representatives thereto, have directed me to report back the same with a recommendation that the Senate concur therein.

If it be the general pleasure of the Senate to take up this matter to-day, I should be very glad. As the Committee on Finance expects to report the deficiency bill on Monday, it is necessary to act soon upon this question, if we mean to act at all. Although this is Friday, and private-bill day, and I very much regret to interfere with the general order of business, it seems to me to be a case which might, perhaps, justify the suspension of the order for the purpose of taking up the amendment of the House of Representatives to this joint resolution. If there be no objection, I should like to have it acted on now.

Mr. COOPER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the motion, in order to allow me to submit a resolution.

Mr. HUNTER. Certainly.

COAL USED BY THE NAVY.

Mr. COOPER submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to communicate to the Senate a copy of the report of the Engineer-in-Chief, in relation to the qualities of the several species of coal now used by the Navy; together with the cost of the several kinds per ton, delivered at the different ports in the Chinese seas; also, how, in what manner, and with what kind of coal the Navy is at present supplied, the quantity of each kind furnished, and at what price per ton.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. MORTON gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill, to authorize the sale of certain reserved lands in Florida, and for other purposes.

Mr. BROOKE gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill, ceding the public lands to the States in which they lie, for purposes of internal improvements.

ADDITIONAL COMMITTEE CLERK.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. Downs, in relation to the employment of a clerk by the Committee on the Judiciary, was read a second and third time, and passed.

MEXICAN BOUNDARY COMMISSIONER.

Mr. WELLER. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether any charges have been placed in his hands, by an officer in the United States Army, against the present commissioner appointed to run and mark the boundary line between the United States and the Republic of Mexico; and if so, to transmit a copy thereof, together with all papers connected therewith, to the Senate.

As this is a mere resolution of inquiry, and as the information is necessary before we act upon the deficiency bill, which will be reported on Monday next, I hope the Senate will agree to consider it now. I have seen a copy of these charges, and they are, in my opinion, of such a character as will demand the investigation of the Senate, before we can consent to vote the appropriation of $80,000 which is asked for in the deficiency bill. I, for one, shall not be prepared to act upon that portion of the bill, until this information has been furnished.

The PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent, to consider the resolution at this time.

Mr. CLARKE. Let it lie over.

Mr. WELLER. Then I give notice that I shall call it up to-morrow, for the reason I have already assigned—that I shall not be prepared to act upon the deficiency bill until this information is obtained by the Senate. There is, I understand, an appropriation of $80,000 asked for in the deficiency bill for this boundary commission. I have already stated that I have seen a copy of those charges. They are either true or false. If they are true, there is a very good reason why no more public money should be intrusted to that commission. If they are false, the officer who makes them ought to be dismissed from the Army. Of course I undertake to express no opinion as to the truth of the charges.

Mr. CLARKE. I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the resolution to-day, as I see no reason why we should not have the information before Monday, as afterwards.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXPEDITION TO JAPAN—MENOMONEE PURCHASE.

Mr. BORLAND. If there is nothing before the Senate, I would ask that the resolution submitted by me in reference to the naval expedition to Japan be taken up for consideration. It was postponed until to-day.

Mr. HUNTER. I would now make the request, that by unanimous consent we may take up the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution to provide for the continuance of the work on the two wings of the Capitol. I would ask that it may be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BORLAND. I wish to say that I made a motion just now, which was not put, to take up the resolution which was laid over yesterday.

Mr. BADGER. It will consume all day.

Mr. HAMLIN. I rise for the purpose of inquiring of the Chair what will be the effect of agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas? Will it extend the consideration of his resolution beyond the morning hour, and thus prevent the Senate from considering the Private Calendar?

The PRESIDENT. There is no necessity for the motion to take up the resolution. It comes up in its regular order, being a resolution upon the table. It is under consideration, and must be disposed of, even if its consideration extends beyond the hour fixed for the consideration of private bills.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then we are to have the discussion upon it over again to-day.

Several SENATORS. It will be discussed again.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then I hope it will be laid over.

Mr. WALKER. There was a bill under consideration the other day in which my constituents are interested. It is a bill to grant to certain settlers on the Menomonee Purchase north of the Fox river, in the State of Wisconsin, the right of preemption. When it was under consideration before, some one objected to it, and it was laid over. I am certain that on reflection, that objection must have been abandoned. I think that we can pass the bill in the ten minutes that we have left, before the hour fixed for the consideration of private bills arrives. I therefore move to postpone the further consideration of this resolution, and of all previous orders, that we may take up the bill. I have already stated the circumstances of this case, and it is not necessary to restate them. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will consent, as his resolution will create debate.

Mr. BORLAND. If my resolution is to give rise to an extended debate to-day, of course I shall not press it; but I did suppose that there was a full enough discussion yesterday, and that the vote could be taken at once.

Mr. SMITH. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin, whether he is willing to have his bill laid aside if it occasions any considerable debate?

Mr. WALKER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. Otherwise, I shall be unwilling to take it up.

Mr. WALKER. I think it can give rise to no debate. The bill proposes to do nothing more than to grant what every other settler in the United States has—the right of preemption. It is not a grant of lands, or to reduce the price of lands. It is simply to permit these settlers to enter under the preemption laws.

The motion to take up the bill was agreed to.

The Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being proposed, it was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill was subsequently read a third time and passed.

CARMELITE NUNNERY.

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion submitted by Mr. COOPER, to reconsider the vote on the third reading of the bill for the benefit of the Carmelite Nunnery of Baltimore; and,

On motion by Mr. RUSK, it was postponed until to-morrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed bills of the following titles:

An act to legalize certain entries of public land made in the State of Florida; and

An act for the relief of James W. Campbell, of Pike county, Missouri;

Which were read a first and second time by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

CLAIM FOR OCCUPATION OF KEY WEST.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of John W. Simonton.

When the bill was last under consideration, February 13, several amendments were offered by Mr. SEWARD, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, examine, audit, and settle the claims of John W. Simonton and others, owners of the island of Key West, in the State of Florida, on account of its occupancy by the Government of the United States as a naval and military post during the years 1823, 1824, 1825, and 1826; and to pay such sum, if any, as shall be found to be due.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. When this bill was under consideration before, I opposed it, on account of its structure, which drew my attention to it in the first place, and subsequently caused me to examine the basis of the claim. So far as the objection to the structure of the bill goes, it has been avoided by the amendments of the Senator from New York, which have been adopted by the Senate, except on one point, and that is, that you refer, by this bill, to the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjudicate upon a question of damages, without having before you the means of knowing whether any damage has been done. I understand that Congress have invariably refused what, according to my judgment, would be the proper course for the disposition of claims against the United States. I speak not of gratuities, but of claims—proper claims—which depend upon recognized principles of law or equity, to establish a tribunal before which the Government could be sued, and where the complainant or the plaintiff should be entitled to recover. In my judgment, claims of that kind would more properly be heard and determined before a tribunal, sitting as a court of justice, in which an examination into the facts could be had upon both sides—where the claimant and the Government could both be heard by their respective agents and attorneys. But Congress have refused to establish a tribunal of that kind, and the principle of that refusal seems to me, of necessity, to negative the idea, that you should, in an individual case, refer to the accounting officers of the Treasury the performance of this duty, when there is no sufficient evidence to decide upon it yourselves—when you are unwilling to pass a general law for the purpose of doing so. I therefore still object to the structure of this bill, on the ground that it purports to do, and does in effect, and as regards an individual case, what you refuse to do as a general principle of law, applied to the mass of claims that come before you, and that you propose to refer it to a tribunal not well constituted for the investigation of claims; because, in investigations before the accounting officers of the Treasury, they have no power to send for witnesses and examine them; and that the testimony would be ex parte, as much so as before this body—especially, if the claim is not established before the body by competent proof, both of the character of the claim that is urged against the Government, and the amount to be allowed to the party, so that Congress may determine the sum, as well as the fact that the party is entitled to something. I now exclude the mere settlement of accounts or vouchers, which this is not. I should feel myself compelled to vote against any bill not so sustained, unless Congress pleases to establish a proper tribunal under a general law for the determination of such cases.

Supposing, however, that this objection will not prevail with the Senate, then, at least, when a claim is brought before you, to be referred to the accounting officers, founded, as this is, upon what I call conjectural damages—damages resting on testimony of a most general character, and of a consequential nature—there ought to be shown to the Senate a clear ground of a claim of some kind, supported by proof sufficient to justify the reference. Now, in my judgment, looking at this subject, I cannot perceive the evidence of any claim against the United States at all.

I will read from the report which was formerly made in the House of Representatives, and which is embodied in the present report, to show what the claim is, as stated by the claimants themselves. In my opinion, it shows that there is no ground at all for the claim. At page seven of the printed report of the House of Representatives, made in 1848, the claim of the memorialists is stated by themselves in these words:

"Your memorialists think they have a just claim on the United States to ample indemnity, on the following grounds, viz:

"For the use and occupation of the Island of Key West from April, 1823, to October, 1826, and for a portion of it to a much later period. For the damage done the wood on said Island. For about three hundred sheep and two hundred hogs destroyed in consequence of the arbitrary order of Commodore Porter. For defeating their plans of improvement, interfering with their business, exercising despotic power over their persons, driving settlers from the Island, preventing accession to the population, and substantially taking from them the entire capital and means upon which all their hopes of wealth were founded."

These are the grounds of the claim. They are exceedingly general in their character. My answer to them all, is this: That there is no claim proved; that the Government is not responsible for the acts of Commodore Porter, beyond the scope of his authority. At page twenty, of the same document, the authority given to Commodore Porter is stated. I have discussed this question fully before, and am not now going over the whole ground. The orders given to Commodore David Porter, by the Secretary of the Navy, and the only orders under which he acted, were these:

"You will establish at Thompson's Island, usually called Key West, a depot, and land the ordnance and marines to protect the stores and provisions. If, however, you shall find any important objection to this place, and a more suitable and convenient one can be found, you are at liberty to select it as a depot."

Commodore Porter's report to the Secretary, in reference to his transactions at Key West, dated 16th April, 1823, is as follows:

"For the last two weeks our movements and occupations have been so varied, that to enter into a full detail would swell too much this communication. To be brief, therefore, I shall merely state, that within that time we have built our storehouses on Thompson's Island, landed all our stores, collected together all the schooners of the squadron, and stationed them at different points on the coast of Cuba."

The report, therefore, as well as the order, shows simply the establishment of a naval depot on this island. According to the statement of facts by the committee, it is an island of some seven hundred acres in extent. I understood the Senator from Florida, on a former occasion, to state that it was much larger. Be it so. There was no order given to occupy the island; yet your bill here presupposes, in its language, that the United States have occupied the whole island. This is not the fact, on any evidence before the Senate. No such order was given; and if Commodore Porter transcended the order to establish a depot and military storehouses, by taking possession of the whole island, and establishing there martial law; and interfered, as the complainants allege, by driving off the inhabitants, limiting their rights of property, surely the Government is not responsible for his transcending the scope of his authority, and abusing the powers confided to him. I hold that the principle laid down, and stated with great clearness by the Attorney General of the United States in Sibbald's case, applies here, and in all classes of cases of this kind. The opinion of Mr. Legare in that case, which is to be found in "The Opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States," page 1543, is stated in a very clear manner. His statement is uncontroverted, and uncontrovertible, as matter of law:

"The damages must not only have been directly caused, not merely occasioned, by the interference of any agent of the United States, but he must have acted under their authority. Whatever the agents did beyond their instructions, clearly they did in their own wrong, and the Government is not responsible."

I hold that to be perfectly sound doctrine. I hold that that is the extent to which the Government is responsible, and not beyond that. Now, in this particular case, Commodore Porter did not receive orders to go beyond the establishment of a depot; and, certainly, he had no orders to occupy the island, and establish martial law, and do all the other acts which are complained of in the memorial of these parties. He was not authorized to destroy the hogs and sheep belonging to the parties; nor is it true that he did so. The damage done to the wood on the island has been settled at the Treasury, and paid for. Their statement shows that they have received over three thousand dollars for the wood. That Commodore Porter occupied the island is not proved. It was not ordered. That there was a part of the land on the island used for a depot and store-houses, is doubtless true. Whether that particular land is the portion to which the Government has since acquired a title and paid for, does not appear from the statement of the claimants. If they will show that the land which was then occupied by the Government was not the land for which they have since been paid, I am perfectly willing to vote in favor of the claim, when proper evidence of the amount comes before me. That would involve the interest or rental value of that portion of the island occupied by the Government, according to their order, during those years, if it be different land from that which they have since purchased.

I stated on a former occasion, what was true, that the land on that island must be exceedingly valuable if this claim can be sustained, when, for the occupation of land for store-houses and for the wood destroyed, the parties have already received seventeen odd thousand dollars. The parties have not shown that any other land was occupied than that for which they have been paid. But the claim to relief, on the face of this bill, goes upon the ground, and it is referred to your accounting officers on the ground, that the whole island was occupied by the United States. No such fact appears in the evidence. The United States never ordered it; the United States never knew of its occupation; for this case is not now before the Senate for the first time. Commodore Porter made his report, in which he stated simply the establishment of his depot there; and that he carried on his proceedings by stationing vessels on and around the coast of Cuba, for the purpose of suppressing the numberless pirates who had existed there. No complaint was made to the Government by these complainants, at that time, of any injuries inflicted on them by any authorized or unauthorized act of the Government; none whatever. It is alleged, if true, and was alleged, that a communication was made to the Navy Department, in the year 1825, complaining of these acts of Commodore Porter. The answer to that is this: There is no proof of that. This matter was before the Senate years ago. At the first session of the Twenty-third Congress the committee were discharged from the consideration of the petition filed in the name of Whitehead, for himself, Simonton, and others. It is the same claim, though then under a different name. It was then referred to the Secretary of the Navy. He made an adverse report on the claim, at the next session of Congress, (the second session of the Twenty-third Congress,) and in that report he states that no such communication had ever been received at the Department; and the paper which the parties presented, as showing that it had been sent, was a mere mutilated copy of some paper; but that when made, or where made, there was no evidence at all, though it had never been received certainly at the Department. It stands, then, in this position, that these claimants come to claim from Congress for outrages—for they were outrages if true—committed by Commodore Porter beyond the scope of his authority, long after he is in his grave, long after the claim has been adversely reported upon by the Executive officer to whom it was referred, and by the committee of the Senate to whom it was subsequently referred. The claim was before the Senate subsequently to the time of the report of the Secretary of the Navy, to which I have referred, and the committee were discharged from its consideration at the second session of the Twenty-fifth Congress, and made an adverse report at the first session of the Twenty-sixth Congress on, for all practical purposes, precisely the same evidence which is now before the Senate. The only additional testimony at this session, is the opinion of some witnesses as to the rental value of this property, on the presumption that it was occupied by the United States as an entirety. There is no other additional evidence of the claim beyond that which existed when the committee made an adverse report at the first session of the Twenty-sixth Congress, based on the report of the Secretary of the Navy and their own investigations. I read that report on a former occasion, and it is not necessary now to reread it. This claim was then examined. It was rejected by the committee. There has been no further evidence to establish it since that time. I have shown, from the very memorial, what was the character of the claim then, and that it does not come under any principle which would render the Government responsible.

The bill assumes, according to its language, even as amended, that the Government occupied the island. Proof is not in existence that they ever did occupy the island, beyond the land which was necessary for establishing store-houses. Well, if the parties mean to make a claim grounded on the occupation of a portion of the island by the Government for store-houses, for which they were not paid, let them present the claim in a proper petition; and if the fact is established that it is not the same land for which the Government afterwards paid them, to the amount of $14,000, I am perfectly willing to vote in favor of paying what is just; but I am not willing to vote for a bill referring it to the accounting officers, when the bill presupposes, by its very language, that the whole island was occupied, when this was not the fact.

If it be said that these parties did send a communication complaining of these acts of Commodore Porter to the Secretary of the Navy, my answer is, that it is negated by the fact that no such paper can be found on the files; and further, that it is against all probability that if a communication had been made, the party would have slept on his rights, or rather on his wrongs, inflicted on him from day to day, and never have noticed the fact by petition to Congress until years after, when the Navy Department had taken no notice of the claim. I therefore suppose it to be true, that even if there was an intention to make such a claim, and a paper prepared, it never was sent. Certainly it was never received.

Then how stands the case? The Government have given orders to an officer to occupy a certain portion of this island, simply as a place of deposit for military stores. And the report shows that he did so. Matters went on from the year 1823 down to 1828, or subsequently, and we find no claim made—no complaint made to the Government, but squabbles ensue between the officers and the owners of land; and then, after the lapse of fifteen or twenty, or even thirty years, the parties come forward and petition Congress to redress the wrongs which they, or an officer of the Government, have inflicted on them—the officer being in his grave—and he having been liable to suit for every act he had done—liable to damages for acting beyond the scope of his authority and violating their rights, if the allegations were capable of proof. Yet they left him unused during his lifetime, and took no means to establish their claim judicially. Now, I submit to the Senate, that under these circumstances, it is going much too far to pass this bill, that it will cast a stain on the memory of Commodore Porter; because, if the bill is passed, you assume that the acts complained of are grossly outrageous. But these plaintiffs dared not, in the lifetime of Commodore Porter, to arraign him in a court of justice, and meet him with witness against witness as to the propriety of his conduct and the extent of the exercise of his authority, but come here now to you, to ask you, on this general petition, to disburse the funds of the nation on an unproved claim, and at the same time reflecting on the character of one of the most distinguished officers ever in your service, when he is no longer here to defend himself, and has left nothing but his memory to his children and his country. I can vote for no such bill.

As I said before, I am perfectly willing, if these parties will show, by petition and competent proof, that the land occupied by Commodore Porter for storehouses and for a naval depot, was not the same land which was subsequently purchased and paid for by the Government, to pay for the rental value of it during the time it was so occupied by the Government. But I am not willing to pay for the occupation of this island beyond the orders of Commodore Porter, and in violation of his duties; and I am not willing to investigate this case, nor to cast a censure on his memory, when he is in his grave, founded on testimony so loose as this is. I shall, therefore, feel myself compelled to renew the motion which I made when this bill was last up, but withdrew that the amendment of the Senator from New York might be offered, that the consideration of this bill be postponed indefinitely.

I will make one further remark. As regards this, or any other claim, it is, I am certain, far more agreeable to a man's feelings to advocate than to oppose it; certainly it would be so to mine. But, standing here in this body, I can know no private feelings whatever. I shall endeavor to view every claim that comes before the Senate as a claim between A and B, and to decide upon it judicially to the best of my knowledge and ability, without favor or affection to any party.

Mr. BADGER. I do not propose to enter into the discussion of this case at large; but I desire to make a few observations, which have been suggested to me by what has been said by the Senator from Delaware. I do not understand the construction which he has given to the orders under which Commodore Porter took possession of the Island of Key West, to be exactly of that narrow kind which he does. Commodore Porter was directed to establish a naval station and depot on the island. It is a small island, consisting of some two hundred acres of land.

Mr. BAYARD. The report states seven hundred acres, and the Senator from Florida says it is much larger.

Mr. BADGER. Very well. When we consider the condition of things at Key West; that it was not a thickly-settled or inhabited island; and when we remember the purpose which the Government had in view in establishing this naval depot and station there, I think it must be understood that the officer had not only authority to take possession of so much of the land on the island as might be necessary merely to place his naval station and depot there; but that his orders fairly included what was necessary to make the station and depot effectual for the purposes of the Government. It is very easy to conceive that it might be highly important to the ends which the Government had in view in making that establishment, to prevent the use of the residue of the island as being in itself calculated to interfere with those ends; and, therefore, if Commodore Porter, acting under the impression that his duty to the Government required him to do what he did, in regard to the occupation of the residue of the island, I think he was acting fairly under a just exposition of the order which he received; and secondly, that it by no means implies any reproach upon his memory that this bill is brought forward to obtain from the Government compensation for losses sustained, by individuals, in consequence of the acts which he felt himself bound to commit. With regard to some things, it is manifest that it would not have done for Commodore Porter to permit that island to be occupied; certain classes of occupation upon it would have been of a most injurious character. In the neighborhood of the naval station and depot were persons engaged in certain transactions which would tend to demoralize his naval force, to put it beyond his effectual control and direction, and prevent him accomplishing the ends the Government had in view. Now, I mean not to say, whether in point of fact what Commodore Porter did was necessary and proper to those ends or not. That is a difficult question; but what I do mean to say is, first, that the order to him to establish a naval station and depot there necessarily implied that he should adopt such measures as would make the establishment effectual to the purposes designed by the Government; and, secondly, that what he did, though resulting in loss to an individual, may not imply any imputation upon his memory, as having arbitrarily, willfully, and knowingly exceeded his orders in doing acts which were necessary for the purpose which he was charged to accomplish.

The next thing which I have to say is: If I understand the honorable Senator from Delaware, he concedes that, in cases where there is a claim upon the Government—a claim stricti juris—if there was any tribunal capable of enforcing it against the Government, and not appeal to its mere benevolence, it is not the usage or custom of the Government ever to refer an inquiry into the damages or amount of damages to the head of a Department.

Mr. BAYARD. No, sir; the Senator misunderstood me. I said that while Congress refuses to establish, by a general law, a tribunal to adjudicate upon these claims, it must be on the principle that this body must remain the adjudicating body. If they refuse, by a general law to establish a forum or tribunal to decide upon claims preferred against the Government, it must be on the principle that they mean to retain in their own hands the right to determine the propriety, the justice, or equity of any claim against the Government. If that is the principle—and I cannot conceive that it could be any other—on which a general law would not be passed, then I said I would be unwilling to vote, in a particular case, to refer it to any other tribunal for the adjudication of facts which they are no more competent to decide than we are, and who have no greater power of examination than we have; and therefore I should require the party to produce his testimony here.

Mr. BADGER. I did not exactly understand the honorable Senator; but I would make a remark which may be necessary to enable us to understand the propriety of considering this claim, without determining now whether it should be granted or not. Congress has always reserved in its own hands the power of determining upon such claims; but its practice shows that while it retains the power in general, and has constantly refused to establish a tribunal with general powers upon this subject, it has always been in the habit of referring particular cases, from time to time, as it thought to be necessary, to the Executive officers of the Government for investigation, and that in cases of claims, strictly speaking. One occurs to me at this instant, the claim of the late Colonel Richard M. Johnson against the Government for the value of some school-houses on Indian lands, which he claimed, under a contract, the Government was bound to pay. He made his application to Congress, it was considered by a committee; and Congress refused to pass upon or adjudicate the claim itself, but made an appropriation for the purpose of paying such amount as should be ascertained by the proper Executive officers to be due to him on account of the claim; and it was adjudicated at the Department and paid. Without entering further into the matter, I give up the floor to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MALLORY. I concur, Mr. President, in much that has been said by the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] and particularly in his closing remarks as to the feelings that should actuate Senators upon this floor, in voting upon private claims. And I acquiesce entirely in the assumption that every honorable Senator feels much more gratification when he can conscientiously vote in favor of a private claim than when he feels compelled to vote against it. I require no illustration for this beyond the course of the honorable Senator himself, while opposing private claims upon this floor; but I am happy that this discussion has arisen, and happy that it has fallen to the honorable Senator from Delaware to probe this claim to its very foundation, because I am unwilling to stand here, as a new member of this body, as the advocate of any private claim which is not founded in strict equity, and of the equity of which I am not myself fully convinced. Having, however, examined this claim, and having been familiar with it for years, I feel exceedingly happy in having it in my power to answer much of what has been urged by the Senator from Delaware in opposition to it. I readily agree with the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD,] because, in the main, all that I desire is that the Government should examine this claim, and, if anything is found to be due to this party, then that it should be paid.

In regard to the doctrine that the Government is not responsible for the illegal acts of their agents, I entirely concur with what has fallen from the Senator from Delaware; and I believe that that is a doctrine in which we shall all coincide at once. If Commodore Porter committed any acts which he was not authorized to commit, and which were illegal in themselves, he and not the Government is responsible for those acts. But the extent of his authority is to be judged of in part—first, by the acquiescence of the Government in the acts complained of; and secondly, by the orders which were given to him. This authority is not to be looked for alone in the orders which were given to him, but also in the acquiescence of the Government in the acts which he did. I hold that to be sound doctrine; and if I do not show that this island was occupied by the Government of the United States, or at least by their orders, for a series of years, that the then owners were dispossessed of it, and that its occupation by the Government was instrumental in obtaining important ends, as also that its occupation conferred upon the Government important benefits, then I am willing that the bill should fail. But if I show that it was occupied by authority of the Government, and also that at the time it was taken it was private property, then I suppose there is not an honorable Senator here who will raise his voice against paying what is reasonable and just.

The Senator from Delaware appears to think that because the country has failed to establish a Board of Commissioners to adjudicate upon claims, he will not vote for this claim, however just it may be. It may be the duty of the country to provide such a board; but while the Government has not done so, and probably never will, in the face of the fact that there are claims to the amount of $50,000,000 to be adjudicated upon on which such board would have to enter at once, shall we, when a party has been a sufferer for more than twenty years, refuse to examine his claim and allow him the benefit of all such prima facie proof as would lead to the allowance of the claim before any court of the country?

In relation to this claim, it has been truly said, that this is not the first time it has been before Congress. I will call attention to the fact, that in 1847 this case was thoroughly investigated in the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Naval Affairs, through their chairman, the honorable Mr. Butler King, made a report upon it, from which facts and statements are thus quoted by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, at the first session of the Thirty-first Congress:

"Upon a full and careful examination of the evidence submitted by the memorialists, the committee are of opinion that their statements and complaints are well founded.

"The testimony of the officers of the Navy, and of the inhabitants of the island, who were cognizant of the facts, fully sustain the allegations of the petitioners."

The report goes on to show—

"That the Government had no right to take the property of the petitioners for public use without making for them a suitable compensation."

And it continues thus:

"The committee are of opinion, therefore, that the only question for decision is in relation to the amount to be paid to the petitioners for their property thus taken for the public use."

The value and importance of the island are stated at length, and the report concludes thus:

"That the occupation of this island by the Government, in the manner described and proved, resulted in serious losses, both immediate and prospective, to the owners, cannot for a moment be doubted by any one, after a careful and candid examination of all the testimony. The injuries sustained by them have already been referred to in this report, and are of such a character as to call for immediate redress."

The Naval Committee in the House made another report in 1848, in favor of the claim directly, and reported a bill which was introduced here in terms. Now, sir, this claim has been twice at least reported upon favorably; and the object of the bill now is to permit the claim to go before the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, and to allow the claimants to show reasons why the claim should be granted, if they can prove it is a just one. And unless we entertain the opinion that those officers of the Government are reckless in the discharge of their duty in the examination of claims, I think there should be no objection to sending the claim there; because, unless we send it there, there is no other mode of securing the payment of the claim but by sending it to a special committee for investigation. That has been the ordinary mode with regard to cases which, like this, have been pending for a long period of years.

I will now advert to the authority under which possession was taken of this island, and will call the attention of the Senate to the fact, that when the question of sending a fleet there first arose, there was a great excitement among the American people, and from one end of the country to the other, the cry went forth in strong appeals for protection to our commercial marine from the piracy which was carried on in the Gulf of Mexico. It was then quite uncommon for a month to pass without the occurrence of a serious piracy between New Orleans and the Bahama Banks; and Government looked around to see where it could best plant a naval depot for the purpose of suppressing this piracy. In this condition of things the Secretary of the Navy, on the 7th of February, 1822, issued the following order to Lieutenant Commandant M. C. Perry, of the United States schooner Shark, New York:

"SIR: I inclose to you the copy of an exact description of 'Key West,' a small island on the edge of the Florida stream, seventy-five miles north by west from Havana, about midway between the Dry Tortugas and Cape Florida; and I wish you to proceed in the nearest route from New York to that place, for the purpose of making an examination of the island, its harbors, its extent, and the dangers of navigation, and report to me as early as practicable every information you shall acquire, with a view to further measures for its occupation, and for the establishment of a port of rendezvous, and for commerce, should the description be verified by you. In this first visit to the island, it will not be necessary to take actual surveys, but merely report to the Department the real situation of the island as above mentioned.

"Should you find the island situated as it is described, and it shall in your judgment be necessary, you are authorized to take possession of it in the name of the United States, and, if you think proper, leave a midshipman or other suitable officer, with one man, to retain possession until further orders; provided they can be sheltered and made comfortable and safe for the time, until aid can be furnished to them.

"You may also give notice to our commanders, if you shall find good water, safe anchorage, &c., that they may make further examination by calling there occasionally.

"After having performed this service, you will proceed to cruise around Cuba, and in the Gulf of Mexico, for the protection of our commerce, and in pursuance of the general instructions for the suppression of the slave trade, and punishment of the crime of piracy."

In pursuance of this order to proceed to the examination of this island, and if it should be found to come up to the description entertained, to take possession immediately, we find that he executed the order, and that Lieutenant Commandant Perry, on the 28th of March, 1822, addressed the Secretary of the Navy of the United States as follows. After specifying his arrival, &c., he says:

"In regard to the island in question, I have the honor to report, that after carefully examining its whole extent, sounding the harbor, and otherwise making such observations as your instructions directed, I have come to the conclusion that it possesses many advantages as a naval rendezvous, and in consequence, have, in the name of the United States, taken formal possession of it, giving it the name of Thompson's Island, and have left Midshipman Joseph Morehead and one man to retain possession until further assistance can be furnished them. At present their situation is tolerably comfortable. In selecting this name, I have not only gratified my own wishes, but have complied with the request of the proprietors of the soil present, on the occasion of planting the standard, and whose names are John Warner, Esq., United States commercial agent at Havana, and Messrs. Fleming and Whitehead, all American citizens."

Here, then, we have the answer of Lieutenant Commandant Perry at the time, in reply to the order to take possession of the island. What is his reply? That he has taken possession in the name of the United States; that the proprietors were present at the planting of the standard, and that he changed the name of the island, calling it, after the name of the existing Secretary of the Navy at the time, "Thompson's Island." Is there any proof wanting that this island was taken possession of in compliance with the order then given, and which is now on file at the Navy Department? This shows what was the object of the Department in this preliminary step, when he was sent to take possession of the island. This was a preliminary order. In Lieutenant Perry's reply, he further says:

"In enumerating the advantages possessed by this island and its contiguous waters, and in recommending it as a situation well calculated for a naval rendezvous, I have looked to a period when our country shall be engaged in a war with some great maritime State, and when the undisputed possession of the Florida keys will be a matter of great importance, as it will insure the undisturbed navigation of the northwest side of the Florida stream (or Gulf of Florida) to our merchant vessels, and will prove a check on the vast resources of the Island of Cuba—vast, indeed, if possessed by the enterprising Government of Great Britain."

This letter was addressed by the Secretary of the Navy to the President of the United States, in reference to the letter of Lieutenant Commandant Perry:

"That the geographical situation of the island referred to in the resolution has, for some time past, attracted attention, and been considered peculiarly important, both as a military position, and in reference to the commerce of the United States.

"The commander of one of our public vessels, cruising in that quarter, was accordingly directed, last winter, to touch at this island, and to take possession of it as a part of the territory ceded by Spain to the United States, and to make such general examination as might be useful in forming an opinion of the advantages of the place, and the propriety of a further and more particular survey.

"From the report of Lieutenant Commandant Perry, who was charged with this duty, it has been satisfactorily ascertained that this position affords a safe, convenient, and extensive harbor for vessels of war and merchant vessels. Instructions, however, did not require him to make so minute a survey as was necessary in order to judge of the extent to which this place might be safely and advantageously occupied and improved as a naval depot.

"Captain Patterson has since been instructed to make a further examination and survey, and is now engaged in that business. His report may be expected before the adjournment of Congress. There can be no doubt, however, of the importance of this island and its contiguous waters in various points of view. The harbor affords a safe and convenient rendezvous for our public vessels cruising in the West Indies and the Gulf of Mexico, and the island a very suitable depot for provisions and supplies."

And he further says:

"The island is considered so advantageous and convenient a place of rendezvous for our public vessels on the West India station, that it is intended to make it a depot for provisions and supplies against the pirates, lately authorized by Congress to be secured in temporary buildings, under the protection of a guard of marines."

This letter was addressed, on the 29th December, 1822, reiterating to the President of the United States the important advantages of this island, and the fact that the Secretary of the Navy had issued orders to take possession of it as a part of the territory ceded under the treaty with Spain.

Commodore Porter went out there with a large fleet—a fleet not large in the size of the vessels, but large in number, calculated for entering the small harbors upon the Florida coast, as well as upon the coast of Cuba, for the suppression of piracy.

The next extract which I shall present to the Senate, is one from a letter to the Secretary of the Navy by Commodore Porter, dated April 16, 1823, and written on board the "Sea Gull," at Key West. He says:

"SIR: For the last two weeks our movements and occupations have been so varied, that, to enter into a full detail, would swell too much this communication. To be brief, therefore, I will merely state, that within that time we have built our store-houses on Thompson's Island, landed all our stores, collected together all the schooners of the squadron, and stationed them at different points on the coast of Cuba."

Commodore Porter, in a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, dated Baltimore, November 19, 1823, says:

"The fixing an establishment at Thompson's Island for rendezvous and supplies, as my instructions required, has had the most happy effect in attaining the object in view. Its vicinity to Havana, placed, as it were, in the thoroughfare of vessels sailing through the gulf, makes it, in many points of view, an object of great importance to the United States; and, although for three months in the year it must ever remain sickly, while existing causes continue, it is, from its extraordinary salubrity for the remainder of the year, worthy a closer examination to ascertain whether they may not be eradicated."

The extract from the order, in addition to the order which the Secretary of the Navy had given to Lieutenant Commandant Perry, given when Perry was relieved from his duty, and Porter was substituted, says:

"You will establish at Thompson's Island, usually called Key West, a depot, and land the ordnance and marines to protect the stores and provisions; if, however, you shall find any important objection to this place, and a more suitable and convenient one can be found, you are at liberty to select it as a depot."

The objection is, that Commodore Porter should have occupied only a portion of this island, and that he was not justified by the authority given him to occupy the whole of it. I apprehend that, before the Senator can entertain such an assumption, he must know something about the geography of the island, of its topography, and its forests, and the only portion which could be occupied for a naval depot. It happens to turn out that the only portion which was fit for a naval depot, was occupied as the site of a town, called Allentown, and the other portion was totally unfit. It will be found that Commodore Porter was to take possession of the island. He was not restricted; he had a large discretion, and he did not depart from his orders. He took possession of the whole island, precisely according to his instructions, and in the name of the United States, and he planted the standard there in the presence of the proprietors, and they were informed that the island was taken as a part of the territory which was ceded to the United States by Spain. Is there any proof wanting that it was then taken possession of in behalf of the United States?

Now, sir, the testimony of a respectable eyewitness present upon this occasion, has been invoked to sustain the orders of the Secretary of the Navy, and the response given by officers of the Navy. And we find by a deposition of an officer of the Navy, at the time, whose character is entirely unimpeachable, that the whole island was taken possession of by Commodore Porter. The name of this merchant is Griffith W. Roberts, whose testimony is this:

"The whole population on the island was governed by Commodore Porter, by military regulations, so far as he collects and believes. He allowed no citizen to settle on the island without the permission of the commanding officer; or, if allowed that privilege, he was compelled to erect a building on such spot as the commanding officer might designate. Deponent further says, he had erected a store in 1825, on the island, under authority given his partner by Commodore Warrington, on a lot situated by said Warrington; and no other lot could be obtained, and no application was made to the proprietors by deponent or others; which application, the course pursued by the officers, led them to think unnecessary and useless. Deponent knows that many disputes arose between the officers and proprietors, in consequence of the latter deeming their rights violated; and frequent correspondence was carried on between them and Commodore Porter on the subject. Deponent further understood Commodore Porter, or Commodore Warrington, on the occasion, refused said proprietors to extend their occupation of ground a few feet, for the purpose of putting up a warehouse, which their increasing business required. Deponent understood that an order was issued by Commodore Porter, to Lieutenant James McIntosh, commandant of the island, in which any right to the soil of said island, except that enjoyed by the United States, was denied, the order stating 'the proprietors' residence there being tolerated only so long as they submitted to such regulations as he might prescribe.'"

Now, that is the deposition of a respectable merchant, resident at the time on the island, who was familiar with the transactions of the officers in the taking of the island. He knew that no blame could attach to Commodore Porter, and that he simply discharged the duties confided to him. He knew that the whole island was necessary for his accommodation. On one side he established a naval depot. And he established a hospital and numerous stores and a magazine upon the south side; one mile from the location of his barracks; and thus he occupied both sides of the island, and in pursuance of his orders of course. It was utterly impossible for him to permit the citizens to remain on the island under civil law, and to allow magistrates to hold courts within his own barracks, carrying out the laws of Florida within those barracks. He found it necessary, in the execution of his orders, to prohibit this.

The testimony of one of the naval officers, Captain Mix, who was at that time present, when Key West was taken possession of, is this:

UNITED STATES FRIGATE HUDSON,
New York, March 3, 1834.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 10th of February, I can only make the following brief remarks:

I was in command of the store-ship Decoy, in the year 1824, and landed a large quantity of public stores and provisions at Key West, or Thompson's island. That island was at the above-stated period under the command of a naval officer, who had the entire control of it, and exercised entire authority over it, and all the property on it, directing what part should be built upon, &c.

Wood and water were at all times supplied by the island, during the time I was there—say two months. The wood was cut by the men belonging to the squadron. Of your question respecting the sheep and hogs, I know nothing. Undoubtedly salt might have been made in large quantities; but of the profit it would have afforded, or of the value of the island, I am unable to speak.

I am, with much respect, your obedient servant,

M. D. MIX,

Master Commandant United States Navy.
J. WHITEHEAD, Esq.

This is the testimony of a commander in the Navy, who participated in the duties of that naval station. He was one of the officers of Commodore Porter; and he tells you that in obedience to his orders, Commodore Porter occupied the whole island, and the owner of the island was allowed to use only so much as Commodore Porter permitted. Whose testimony could be better than that of an officer of the Government, who, if he had any sympathy with either party, would not certainly have it for the inhabitants of the island? Another of these officers, Mr. Morehead, who was left on the island in command, when Commodore Perry first took possession, and left the island, says:

"Commodore Porter's authority was exercised as positively on the island as on any of his vessels. He unhesitatingly used such portions of it as in his opinion the public service requires."

That is the testimony of an officer who was left in command of the island, and who, of all witnesses on the face of the earth, is most competent to testify; for he was left in command under Commodore Porter, and he tells you that Commodore Porter exercised authority over the island precisely as over his own vessel; that he unhesitatingly used such discipline as the public service required.

Something has been said by the honorable Senator from Delaware, calculated to beget the idea that there was a quiet acquiescence in the acts of Commodore Porter on the part of the inhabitants of the island. The inhabitants of the island knew very well that Commodore Porter was acting in conformity with his authority; because he had proclaimed his authority, and told them that he took possession in the name of the United States, and he erected a standard there which remained three years. They required no further proof of his authority; and they entered several personal protests in consequence of quarrels, which were daily occurring between the inhabitants and the officers. One among their numerous protests was formally entered by P. C. Green & Co., addressed to the officers at Key West, as follows:

"You have this day, at the head of a guard of marines, taken a mason, a free citizen of the United States, who is employed by us, and confined him in the guard-house, for obeying our orders in laying the foundation of a warehouse upon our own soil or property. You have also placed a sentinel on the spot to prevent the continuance of our object."

"We hereby demand the immediate release of the said mason, John Cobourne, and the removal of the sentinel from our premises; which, if refused, will result in serious damage to us. You are also notified by this letter, that for the two acts complained of, besides others equally illegal, committed by you, we shall make you amenable to the laws of our country. We regret that you should have preferred the imprisonment of a helpless, innocent man, acting under our orders, to the execution of your threats towards us personally."

"You have exhibited us no order from Commodore Porter to justify your proceedings this day towards us. On a reference to his order, dated August 18th, 1824, we perceive that he there 'considers our right to improve dependent entirely on his ideas of the good or injury which may result therefrom to the United States'; and, as he informed us, we were to be deprived of the lot in question for other purposes than the Navy required. We have reason to believe that you have acted without his orders, merely for the gratification of your malice against us. Whether or not you act from superior orders, we admit no person's right to issue or execute them, when we are thereby to be deprived of our property."

"It is well known that we are the owners of this island, the titles to which are undisputed except by Commodore Porter; and we can see no consistency or propriety in driving us by force from the enjoyment of our property, to give it to favorite individuals."

This, sir, is only one of the numerous protests, one of the exhibitions of the quarrels going on day after day, resulting from the occupation of the island against the right of the proprietors. As to the ownership of the island, we all know that it was a private Spanish grant, long before its occupation by Commander Perry; a grant with which our Government could not interfere, except for the purposes of eminent domain. That was the only right which our Government had to the land, under the treaty with Spain. In pursuance of this protest, when Commodore Porter returned to the island, the same parties addressed to him another protest, dated January 25, 1825. It is as follows:

"Sir, during your absence, Lieutenant Varnum has, by military force, caused us to suspend the building of a warehouse on the lot adjoining our counting-house. We were necessarily obliged to encroach upon the lot south of us by five or six feet, which we conceived we were authorized to do by you, in the conversation our Mr. Greene had with you on the subject, previous to your departure."

"The gentleman to whom the said lot is given by you is willing we should take the few feet required; and as they are about laying the foundation of their warehouse, you will oblige us by giving such orders as will enable us to receive them."

"With great respect, your obedient servant,
P. C. GREENE & CO.

"Commodore PORTER, Commander-in-chief."

This letter bears evidence on its face that the proprietors were obliged to consult the officers of the Government, before they could dare to occupy their own soil. Commodore Porter's reply was in these terms:

UNITED STATES SHIP JOHN ADAMS,
Thompson's Island, January 28, 1825.

GENTLEMEN: I have received yours of this date. In conversation with Mr. Greene, I gave him permission to build a store within the limits of the inclosure occupied by you, and of the same length as the one adjoining the navy-yard; the ground outside, and to the south of your inclosure, I reserved for the use of the United States, whenever it might be thought proper to build a custom-house store: it was not given to any individual, nor had any individual a right to relinquish it to you. I should not have felt myself justifiable in allowing any one to occupy a piece of ground for private purposes, so necessary for the public use. The permission I gave to Mr. Greene is still continued, because it was given; but, without entering into any discussion as to your claims to the island, or without making any remarks on the nature of your letter to Lieutenant Varnum, I take this occasion to observe, that by a correct and decorous deportment, and a disposition to accommodate yourselves to circumstances that you cannot control, you will find it most to your interests, during the existence of a military force on the island, to pursue a line of conduct very different from that which you have thought proper to adopt."

Lieutenant Varnum's conduct has met with my approbation; and if he does his duty, as I believe he will, he will always use a military force when the public interests cannot be protected by other means."

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. PORTER.

Messrs. P. C. GREENE, & Co., Merchants, Thompson's Island.

Now, there was a proprietor of the soil, who, in the occupation of his own property and in erecting a warehouse, had his own workmen arrested and put in prison by military officers, and he was informed by those acting under the Government, that military force would be used when the rights of the Government could not be protected without it.

Now, in the course of proof as to the occupation of the land and as to its value, I will state that the documents are full and distinct as to the time it was occupied, as well as the purposes for which it was occupied. The testimony of John Patrick, who was a member of the mercantile house of Jenners & Patrick, says:

"That he was a member of the commercial house of Jenners & Patrick, which was established at Key West, in December, 1824, and which continued to do business there until the latter part of 1826, or the beginning of 1827."

"To the second he saith that it was military; the island being under the charge of the United States naval commander of the West India station, who claimed it as the property of the United States."

Now, we have here a number of interrogatories put to a Mr. W. H. Hall, the third of which is very important, as to whether the progress of the town was checked in consequence of its occupation by the United States; and to this he answers "that 'the improvement of the island was checked, inasmuch as the citizens were permitted to build only

'on such spots as the United States officer in command pleased to designate.'"

I will not occupy the time of the Senate by reading further from these documents. I am satisfied that this matter is generally very uninteresting to the Senate; but I felt constrained to read these so far, because I consider that they embrace all the proof necessary to establish the allegation of the claimant, and that the whole of this island was taken possession of by the United States. The whole island is only four and a half miles long, and there was but one portion of it which was susceptible of occupancy at all, and that was the portion on which the town was built. No other portion of the island has ever been occupied for any purpose whatever. It was that identical spot of which Commodore Porter took possession. But he took possession of the whole island, and so did Commander Perry, and he did not go beyond his authority in doing so.

The next question to be considered is, whether they ever received any pay for this occupancy? If the honorable Senator from Delaware can show that a single dollar has been paid for the occupancy of this island, I will not say another word in support of this claim. But I allege that the Government has never paid one cent for it, nor for any property taken, except for the wood, which is stated in the memorial. All they ask is that Congress—which has had this claim before it for years and years, and after being for years before the Navy Department—will investigate the claim, and pay whatever is found to be due. It is true, that since 1825 Government has purchased the real estate; but they came in as other private purchasers. The island was divided among numerous proprietors, and among others, a Mr. Fleming, of Boston, P. C. Greene, of Rhode Island, and John Whitehead, and others, came in and purchased, under these sub-proprietors, various lots on the island. One was beyond the town upon which was the military station—a lot that never had been occupied before; and another lot was purchased for a marine hospital. But they purchased from the sub-proprietors, who were proprietors under Simonon. But for the occupancy of three years, upon which this memorial is based, not a single dollar has been paid.

Now, here is a case of private property taken for public use. And what was that use? Why, the occupation of the island, which resulted in the complete suppression of piracy in the Gulf of Mexico. When Commodore Porter left those seas, there was not a pirate in the gulf, because from the geographical position of this island, and its furnishing a harbor which the fleet could leave, and reach Cuba in a single night, every facility was had for preventing the escape of any piratical vessel.

Besides, there were other advantages connected with its occupancy which made it an object of great national importance. Such being the fact, it being conceded that this was private property taken for public use, and it being so held for three years, that the proprietors of the soil were prevented from occupying a single foot but by the permission of the officers of the United States, and all this being done under orders issued from the Government of the United States, by the Secretary of the Navy, with the cognizance of the President of the United States, I ask what objection can there be to paying for it? If the Senate cannot come to a conclusion as to the precise sum which ought to be paid, what objection can there be to sending it to the proper officers of the Treasury Department, and permitting them to examine the claim and ascertain what ought to be paid?

Why, sir, a doubt upon the propriety of doing so can only be based upon a doubt of the proper conduct of the accounting officers, particularly when, as the Senator from Delaware has observed, Congress has refused to establish a board of claims.

Now, as to the new point raised by the Senator from Delaware, that a stain will rest on the character of Commodore Porter if this bill is passed, I see nothing in it. Commodore Porter did not perform a single unauthorized act, not an act which the orders of the Navy Department did not justify him in doing—not one which was not known at the Navy Department at the time, or shortly after. And for the three years during which the island was occupied by the officers of the Government, the Department was cognizant of the fact; and that fact of the cognizance and recognition of the act by the Department and the President of the United States, would be alone in law, a sufficient justification. If he were replying to the charge of having violated legitimate authority, all he would need would be to show that Government stood by and encouraged him, and that he was their agent, and what they did by their agent they did by themselves.

Now, all that is required by these claimants, after twenty years' delay on the part of Congress with regard to a claim, than which I have never seen one more fully entitled to consideration, and all I ask is, that these parties may go before the proper accounting officers, and show what is due them from the Government, and take what is considered just and right.

Mr. ADAMS. At the time that the Government took possession of this island, was it done by the consent of the owners? Again: I would like to know how long it was before the matter came before Congress, and what amount of money they received, and of what value was the land at the time it was taken possession of by the Government?

Mr. MALLORY. Some of these questions I have it not in my power to answer. The honorable Senator from Mississippi will see, from the evidence of the documents to which I have referred, that the proprietors of the island were not consulted, because their proprietorship was not allowed. The orders were peremptory. They were issued from the Navy Department at Washington, while the proprietors of the island were at Key West. It was an island which was totally beyond our commercial relations until about that period. A large harbor is there, with about twenty-six feet of water, well calculated for a large naval depot, and this fact was noticed before the order was issued to take possession of it. Government never admitted the right of the Spanish grant. They claimed it as a part of the public land; and with this idea Commodore Porter occupied the island, contending that it was part of the territory ceded to the United States by Spain, and with that view he took it as the property of the United States, and took possession of it in the name and on behalf of the Government. That very act excluded the proprietors from setting up any title to the soil. I have no doubt that the people there were glad of the presence of a naval force of the United States there; but they had no desire to see it extended to the entire occupation of the island to the exclusion of the manufacture of salt and the progress of all other business.

As to the value of the land, when the United States took possession of it, that would depend upon the object to which it could be applied. In the minds of some Senators, it might have had no value at all. I understand that it cost the proprietors about $52,000; but I have no proof of that. I suppose, however, that the proof may be obtained. It is now of immense value, being the site of one of the largest towns in the State of Florida. It is more favorably situated for a naval depot than any other place in the Southern country, and it will amply prove itself so before many years pass away. As Commodore Porter observed, the first naval contest in which we were engaged, must necessarily be in the neighborhood of this island; and hence its vast importance and value. As an illustration of its value, and as an inducement to the Government to take possession of it, I will mention that he stated that the Gulf of Mexico might be compared to a demihojn upon its side, with New Orleans at the base of it and Cuba and Key West at the opposite sides of its neck, and all the commerce, which in 1852 will amount to $200,000,000, embracing sixteen to eighteen hundred thousand bales of cotton, must come through this narrow strait between this island and the Florida shore, which six steamships may bridge across and speak each other every fifteen minutes. Key West commands this narrow strait, through which the whole commerce of the Southwest and the Valley of the Mississippi must necessarily pass. This was, no doubt, one of the considerations which induced these proprietors to possess themselves of it. In that point of view, the island is of immense value and importance, as a naval depot, and if the Government took possession of it on the ground of eminent domain, it certainly ought to be paid for. When the proprietors took it, it might, perhaps, be said to have had little value; but now its value is such that it is impossible to ascertain it; and what course the Department will adopt for the purpose of ascertaining that value, I cannot say, for I have no means of knowing. All that I desire is, that some show of an investigation should be made. As to hogs and sheep, &c., I am willing to strike them out of the consideration. The wood was paid for; but the Government took possession of the soil. It was private property, taken for public purposes, and certainly ought to be paid for.

Mr. ADAMS. My object in making the inquiry was this: I was not sufficiently informed of the facts connected with this transaction as to justify me in supporting the bill; but it occurred to me from the debate that this property was valueless to the proprietors until the act, now alleged to be an outrage and a trespass, gave it value. If this very occupation gave it value, and if it was occupied by the Government of the United States with the consent of the owners, it seems to me that they have been fully compensated. I came to that conclusion from the suggestion in one of the reports which was read, that the very name of the island was given at the suggestion of one of the proprietors. I also understood that the attention of the Department was first called to the island by one of the proprietors, and therefore I inferred that the occupation was by the consent of the proprietors. It seems to me that the occupation itself must have given value to the island. The proprietors have also received compensation for the wood which was used. I would ask the Senator what amount of compensation they received for their wood? I suppose it must have been a pretty large sum, perhaps as much as the island would ever have been worth, but for its occupation by the Government.

Mr. MALLORY. They received only $3,000 or $4,000 for the wood which was used.

Mr. ADAMS. I am opposed to referring such questions—a question of unliquidated damages—damages for insult offered to the proprietors by the confinement of their laborers—to the decision of the head of a Department. If the damage alleged has been sustained, we ourselves should fix the amount of it. There is one thing to which I would call the attention of the Senate, and that is the delay in this case. The transaction took place twenty-four years before there ever was a favorable report upon it. The Government, of course, cannot be controlled by the statute of limitations; but as time passes away, the evidence against a claim dies, while the evidence in favor of a claim is continually increasing in strength, as a thousand other claims before this body will justify. It seems to me that it is the duty of the Senate to retrieve its character in regard to these claims. It is a common saying outside of these walls, that if a claim can be got through the House of Representatives, there will be no difficulty in the Senate. It is time, I think, that we should insist upon having good evidence to support these claims before we pass them.

Mr. MALLORY. I think my friend from Mississippi will see, at a glance, that one position which he has taken is untenable. He assumes the fact that the land was valueless before its occupation by the United States. I have not said one word that justifies that idea; and if he had read the reports made by the Naval Committee, he would have seen, at once, that it was by no means valueless; that it had a rapidly increasing population; that it had large mercantile houses; that those houses had established themselves to do a large business with Cuba, and the other West India Islands; that large warehouses and wharves were being rapidly built; that extensive preparations were being made for the manufacture of salt on a large scale; and, if I recollect aright, the duty on salt at that time was ten cents a bushel. There is a large natural salt pond upon the island, which has been worked, to some extent, almost ever since Commodore Porter left there. All these operations were interfered with.

The Senator has adverted to the change of the name of the island of Key West. Why, the name was changed according to that proclivity which the officers of the Government have whenever they take possession of private property for public use. They have a great proclivity to change well-established names of private surveyors, and give them names of absolutely no meaning at all. The whole Florida coast is illustrative of this. The name of the island was originally Cayo Hueso. The British changed the name into Key West. Not satisfied with that, when the American officers took possession, they changed the name to Thompson's Island, without regard to its geographical position. Now, if that be any illustration of the valuelessness of the island, I am at a loss to perceive it.

Mr. ADAMS. I understood, from the report, that the name of the island was changed at the instance of the proprietors, or with their consent.

Mr. MALLORY. It may have been changed with their consent. The truth is, they were in a position in which their consent or non-consent could not have had the slightest influence; because they were told by the rearing of the standard of the United States, and the proclamation of Commodore Porter, that the island belonged to the United States, and that they had no right to it. But we are asked here, whether these parties have not been compensated by the consequent advantages derived from the occupation of the island. If the Government will not pay for private property on account of the consequent advantages which they derive from the occupation of it—if consequent advantages are to be discussed here at all—we might show that millions upon millions of dollars have been saved to the United States by the occupation of that very island; because it enabled them to suppress piracy, and it was the only station from which they could radiate to effect that purpose. The consequent advantages were enormous. But we have stricken out the clause of the bill allowing these parties to be paid for the consequent advantage to the Government; and it stands now disclaiming anything like a claim for consequential damages. Then, we are not to be told that we must be charged consequent damages arising from the occupation of the island. That is a position which, I think, is untenable.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I had supposed that it would have been unnecessary for me again to go into the facts of the case. I did not suppose that it would again be necessary for me to advert to the circumstances of the case; but I differ so widely from the honorable Senator from Florida, as to many of the facts, that I should think it a falsification of duty to both myself and the Senate, if I permitted many of the statements made by him to go uncontradicted. I believe that many of these statements are not supported by the evidence. I understand that the principle of law laid down by Mr. Legare is not denied on the other side, that if Commodore Porter acted beyond the scope of his authority, (and the damages claimed are for acts of that kind,) the Government clearly is not responsible. But the Senator tells us, that though the terms of the order of the Secretary of the Navy may not have justified the acts done by Commodore Porter, according to the literal language of the order; yet, the Government acquiesced in his acts, and acquiescing with a knowledge of them, was equivalent to a previous order, and that, therefore, the Government must be considered as having sanctioned these acts. Conceding that principle, my answer to it is plain—the Government never knew of any of those acts at all.

The Senator from Florida, (on what ground, to me is utterly inscrutable,) at the very close of his remarks, made a broad statement of facts—I believe I took the words correctly—that no act of Commodore Porter was unauthorized—that all his acts were known to the Secretary of the Navy at the time, or shortly afterwards. In this case, though a report is stated to have been made favorable to the claim in the House of Representatives, in 1847, and again in 1848, and now by the present committee of the Senate in 1852, yet the fact is entirely kept out of view, that in 1834 this case was rejected on precisely the same evidence as regards all the causes of complaint that we now have. The fact cannot be denied, that the only additional evidence which has now been brought forward is simply affidavits as to the value of this island. All the evidence in regard to alleged grievances—the ground of the complaint—was before Congress in 1834. It was then referred to the Secretary of the Navy, and reported upon by him on the same testimony that the claim was afterwards reported upon by the Committee of the Senate, and rejected. I shall presently read the report of the Secretary of the Navy on this question of fact, between the Senator from Florida and myself. I can find nothing in the documents to show that Commodore Porter did any of the acts that are complained of here, as a violation of the rights of property, or that the illegal occupation alleged was made under the orders of the Government. That is the allegation. The ground of damage is broadly, that the Government had occupied this island in effect, and that, by its occupation in 1823, 1824, and 1825, to the exclusion of rights of the owners, it became responsible in damages. Now, if you take the order given by the Secretary of the Navy, you will find that it does not sanction such occupation. It is impliedly admitted in the argument that that order does not sanction the occupation of the whole island; and there can be no question about it. The order given to Commodore Porter, in February, 1823, was in these words:

"You will establish, at Thompson's Island, usually called Key West, a depot, and land the ordnance and marines to protect the stores and provisions. If, however, you shall find any important objection to this plan, and a more suitable and convenient one can be found, you are at liberty to select it as a depot."

Is it necessary to contend before the Senate, that this order did not authorize Commodore Porter to take possession of an island four and a half miles long, containing seven hundred or eight hundred acres; or that it authorized him to establish martial law on the island? The order authorizes him to do nothing more than to establish a naval depot there; to land stores, and build store-houses in which to put them. Commodore Porter, in his report of April 16th, 1823, to the Secretary of the Navy, states that he had done nothing more. He says:

"We have built our store-houses on Thompson's Island, landed all our stores, collected together all the schooners of the squadron, and stationed them at different points on the coast of Cuba."

Again, in a letter dated November, 1823, he gives the character of the island. He states all that he did, but there was no allusion whatever to his doing more than establishing a depot. He says:

"The fixing an establishment at Thompson's Island for rendezvous and supplies, as my instructions required, has had the most happy effect in attaining the object in view."

There is nothing to show to the Government hitherto, that there was any pretense that Commodore Porter had transcended his authority under the order to establish a depot, by taking possession of the whole island, and excluding its rightful owners. There was no claim up to this time that he had established martial law over the island, or interfered with the rights of property; and the supposition that he did so, is the only foundation of this bill. There is nothing in his reports to the Department to show that anything of the kind was done; and yet the distinguished Senator says that these circumstances were known to the Government. In 1834, the committee of the Senate had been discharged from the consideration of the claim, and it had been referred to the Secretary of the Navy. On the 16th of December, he made the following report:

"The Secretary of the Navy, in compliance with the directions contained in the resolutions of the Senate of the United States, of the 16th June last, referring the memorial and documents of John Whitehead, and others, owners of Key West, for examination into the facts therein stated, to collect the necessary evidence, and report the same, together with copies of such letters and papers in this Department as relate thereto, to the Senate at its next session, has the honor to make the following report:

"The parties interested in this case state, that, in consequence of a communication made by them on the 17th December, 1821, representing the peculiar importance of Key West, as a naval station to protect our commerce from pirates, and suppress the slave trade, Lieutenant Perry was ordered, on the 7th February, 1822, to examine said island and its harbors, &c., and, if deemed necessary by him, to take possession in the name of the United States; and that on the 28th March following, he made a report of his proceedings.

"That instructions were subsequently issued to Captain Patterson, on the 15th November, 1822, who reported the result of his examinations on the 11th March and 10th July, 1823.

"That Commodore Porter, on the 1st of February, 1823, received his general instructions, as commandant of the West India station, and was directed to establish a depot at Thompson's Island, usually called Key West, and land ordnance and marines to protect the stores and provisions.

"That the said commander assumed entire control and jurisdiction of said island; forcibly appropriating wood already cut, and causing more to be cut down and used, seizing and using, for his officers and men, hogs and sheep running at large, the property of the memorialists; prohibiting the owners and their agents from building or improving without his permission; and enforced military law upon the said island; of which grievances, they state that they informed the Navy Department by a communication dated the 1st of February, 1825.

"In support of these allegations, the memorialists offer the deposition of Griffith W. Roberts; the copy of a letter from Commodore Porter to Lieutenant James M. McIntosh, sworn to by John Whitehead; a letter of Master Commandant M. P. Mix, to said Whitehead; certified copies of two letters from P. C. Greene & Co. to Commodore Porter, and the original of Commodore Porter's reply; a certificate of Lieutenant James M. McIntosh, with copy of Commodore Porter's letter to him above referred to, and an imperfect copy of the communication of 1st February, 1825, which are all hereto annexed, lettered from A to G, inclusive.

"The records and files of the Navy Department have been carefully examined, but afford no information nor evidence of the seizures and damages which the memorialists complain that they sustained, nor can any communication be found to have been received from them on the subject, dated the 1st of February, 1825.

"The communication of the 7th of December, 1821; the report of the Secretary of the Navy, of the 29th of December, 1822, to the President; and the instructions to Lieutenant Perry, Commodore Patterson, and Commodore Porter, and the reports by these officers, to which the memorialists allude, are appended hereto, and numbered from 1 to 8, inclusive. All which is respectfully submitted.

"MAHLON DICKERSON."

The answer, then, of the Government is, through the officer who gave the instructions, that no complaint of that kind was made to them. No such communication was received in December, 1825, as was alleged. They know nothing of all those acts. This answer was made in 1834. After that, and based upon that, there was an investigation by a committee of the Senate, and an adverse report, which was adopted. The parties afterwards had leave to withdraw their papers; and they presented them in the House of Representatives in 1847; the leading name being then Simon-ton, instead of Whitehead. A favorable report was then made. They then come back to the Senate in 1852, and, based on that report, which is attached to the report of the Senator from Florida, they get another favorable report, directly contrary to what, eighteen years ago, the Secretary of the Navy stated in his report, and what the Senate, two years following, decided not to grant. Then I submit to the Senate that I am right when I say that there was no acquiescence on the part of the Government, because the Government had no knowledge of the facts. These parties have not shown, nor can they show, that they made any complaint to the Government. If they were aggrieved, what would have been the simple course which they would have pursued? Why, they would have pursued the same course that the Harmonys did in relation to the case which was before us the other day for the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Mitchell. This claim was rejected by the Government, as a claim against them, in 1834. Commodore Porter was then alive; why did not the parties sue him and recover damages, and drive him to come to the Government, in order to show that, in the exercise of his authority, he had been obliged to trespass on the rights of individuals, and that, in the performance of his regular duties, he did it for the benefit of the country. The parties could have established, then, by legal adjudication against him, on a fair hearing, the extent of the damage suffered. Did they pursue that course? No, sir; but they come here now, long after the death of Commodore Porter, when the claim was rejected eighteen years ago, on a full and fair hearing, with the same evidence which is now before us, and ask us, not to decide the claim—because the committee themselves admit that there is not sufficient evidence to do it—but to consign the settlement of unliquidated damages to an accounting officer to allow whatever the parties may claim. Is this equity? Is this justice? Is this a course of procedure which the Senate of the United States ought to take when a claim comes before it?

I can hardly conceive a more baseless claim than the one now before the Senate. I consider that there is not a particle of evidence to sustain it. If I chose to go on with this matter, and go through all the facts, I am satisfied that I could convince the Senate that what I said on a former occasion is true, that the claim is speculative, and fraudulent in its character as against the Government, from its first origin to the present hour. Simon-ton was not the owner of this island on the 7th of December, 1821; but on that day he wrote a letter from Havana to the Government of the United States, informing them of the advantages of this island, then an uninhabited place, and which was, according to the report of Commodore Perry, the resort of smugglers and pirates. He wrote a letter, calling the attention of the Government to this island, and the propriety and necessity of occupying it as a naval station. That was his own suggestion, when he was not the owner of the island, made on the 7th of December, 1821. His communication of that date will be found on pages 12 and 13 of the documents accompanying the House report made in 1848. On the 27th of December, of the same year, before the Government had time to act upon his suggestion, he became the purchaser from Salas of the island. He bought it from him for some two thousand dollars.

The Government have since paid, for land on the island, fourteen thousand and odd dollars; and they have paid for wood cut for the Navy during the years 1824 and 1825, three thousand six hundred and odd dollars; yet now, he and the other claimants come here and ask, on this loose evidence, that we shall give them an amount of $120,000 or $125,000, or whatever sum the accounting officer may choose to allow, on the mere testimony of the individuals themselves, based on the ground of the occupation of the whole island, which was not authorized, and, in point of fact, never took place. I ask if it is a case entitled to the favorable consideration of the Senate?

I submit, then, that the very premises upon which the distinguished Senator from Florida rests that this bill should pass, fail; that he has not shown the acquiescence that he proposed to show, of the Government of the United States in these acts. Now, there is a wide distinction between what he seeks to mingle up here, as showing a taking of possession by the Government, and that the acts of Commodore Porter were complained of to the Government of the United States. You are to understand that this was a desolate island; that it was inhabited by nobody, the resort of pirates and smugglers. In consequence of the suggestion of Simon-ton at Havana, the Secretary of the Navy directed Commodore Perry, then a master commander, on the 7th of February, 1822, to go to this island, and a copy of the letter of Simon-ton was inclosed to him.

The orders to Commodore Perry, were:

"NAVY DEPARTMENT, February 7, 1822.
"SIR: I enclose to you the copy of a description of 'Key West,' a small island on the edge of the Florida stream, seventy-five miles north by west from Havana, about midway between the Dry Tortugas and Cape Florida; and I wish you to proceed in the nearest route from New York to that place, for the purpose of making an examination of the island, its harbors, its extent, and the dangers of navigation, and report to me, as early as practicable, every information you shall acquire, with a view to further measures for its occupation, and for the establishment of a port of rendezvous, and for commerce, should the description be verified by you. In this first visit to the island, it will not be necessary to take actual surveys, but merely report to the Department the real situation of the island, as above-mentioned.

"Should you find the island situated as it is described, and it shall, in your judgment, be necessary, you are authorized to take possession of it in the name of the United States, and, if you think proper, leave a midshipman, or other suitable officer, with one man, to retain possession until further orders; provided they can be sheltered, and made comfortable and safe for the time, until aid can be furnished to them."

What sort of possession was this? This is not what is complained of. This was a mere assertion of jurisdiction on the part of the United States by taking formal possession of an island which was supposed, under the treaty with Spain, ceding Florida, to be clearly belonging to the United States. The island was then uninhabited and desolate. The Government sent Commodore Perry there at the suggestion of the very man who now brings forward the claim for damages. This possession of the island by Commodore Perry, under the orders of the Government, was not injurious to the claimants. It did not interfere with their rights. It was intended to protect their rights by asserting the sovereignty of the Union, and giving them the benefit of the forces of the United States to sustain their possession. The island was at that time the resort of smugglers and pirates. Commodore Perry reported in accordance with these orders given to him. His report is dated March 28th, 1822. He states that he had gone there, and adds:

"In regard to the advantages of Thompson's Island as a place of trade, I feel at a loss in forming an opinion. Its location is most certainly in its favor, being situated about midway between Florida and Cuba, the Southern States and Louisiana, which circumstance has induced many to believe that, in the course of time, the island must become a place of considerable commerce.

"Heretofore the Florida Keys have been the resort of smugglers, New Providence wreckers, and, in fact, of a set of desperadoes, who have paid but little regard either to law or honesty. The present establishment, though on a small scale, will, I conjecture, (with the assistance of the setters,) be enabled to keep these lawless people from this island. But I would suggest the necessity of an early augmentation of force, if it be only for the purpose of enforcing the revenue laws. A gun-boat would be a force sufficient to answer all the purposes required."

After that the Secretary, on account of this report, looking upon the island as an important place, sent out Captain Patterson, under orders, to survey it. He did survey it, and made his returns. Those returns are not embodied in the documents here. I examined them in the Navy Department, but they have no connection with this case; they merely show the surveys, and the fact that the island was not quite as favorably situated as had been previously supposed. In the mean time, the Secretary of the Navy, on the request of the President, had addressed to him a communication asking an inquiry into the practical propriety of fortifying Key West, and taking possession of it for the purpose of erecting Government fortifications. Nothing of the kind, however, was ever done. Subsequently, in April, 1823, the Secretary issued orders to Commodore Porter totally disconnected with these previous movements, and merely giving authority to him to establish a naval depot for the purpose of suppressing piracy in the neighboring seas. There was no right conferred upon him to take possession of the whole island, or to establish martial law, or to interfere in any way with the rights of the residents. When the Government had previously taken possession, through Commodore Perry, the proprietors were present—their rights were recognized. It was the mere assertion of jurisdiction on the part of the United States; and now the attempt is made to include the order given to Commodore Perry with that given to Commodore Porter, with which it has no possible relation, when the latter order was simply to establish a depot at Key West, with the view of suppressing piracy in the Gulf.

Now, I say, taking the return of Commodore Porter to the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary's report of all the knowledge the Government had, they never knew, they never suspected, that any such acts as have been complained of by these claimants ever took place, until the time the petition was presented in 1834, nine years after the Government had ceased to have this alleged possession of the island. Then the Secretary of the Navy answered it, and Congress acted upon and rejected the claim. After the lapse of fourteen years it comes back, and is favorably reported upon in the House of Representatives by an entire disregard of the existence of the former report to the Senate, and the whole facts of the case. Then the case comes back to the Senate, after a lapse of eighteen years, on the face of that report of the House of Representatives, and without reference to the facts set forth in the report of eighteen years ago; and you are asked to pass a bill intrusting a discretionary power to an accounting officer to squander $120,000 of the Government money, when there is no proof justifying the committee to report any specific sum. The claimants have already received $17,000 from the public Treasury. They have received it, either indirectly or through their assignees; either way it amounts to the same thing.

The Senator says that this does not reflect on the character of Commodore Porter. You have but to read this report to see, that from one end of it to the other, the allegation is frequently repeated, that serious outrages had been committed by Commodore Porter. If true, they were outrages; no man can doubt it. If the facts stated be true, there is not one act that Commodore Porter committed for which he would not have been liable, if an action had been brought against him. If an action had been brought against him, then the question would have come up, whether the Government would reimburse him or not. The question then would have been dependent upon this: If, in the due performance of his orders, and in accordance with the exigencies of the service, he had the authority as an officer to do what he did, and was obliged to pay damages in consequence of that act, the Government would of course have reimbursed him; but if it was done without necessity, we would have exercised our discretion as to that. If we thought it was done from a violent or obstinate temper; if we thought he abused the authority confided to him, and had trespassed upon the rights of these individuals, and deprived them of their property, and declared martial law without necessity, and took possession of the whole island, when he was only authorized to establish a navy-yard and depot, we should have refused to reimburse him, even if $150,000 had been recovered against him. Am I to be told that this does not involve the honor and character of that distinguished seaman? Why, every act of his, throughout, is characterized as the "arbitrary act" of Commodore Porter. The complaints of these parties are made in the tone of men who consider themselves aggrieved by outrage after outrage; and such is their memorial. They dared not, as I said before, in his lifetime bring him into a court of justice, and have the matter decided by a jury. But now, when he is in his grave, they come forward here, and ask the Senate of the United States to judge them on ex parte testimony. The distinguished Senator from Florida read from testimony taken ex parte, in order to prove these statements; and there was nothing from which he could read to show that Commodore Porter did anything wrong. It is not for me now to defend Commodore Porter, other than to say that his character stands on the annals of his country, as having performed services of the highest order. I have never yet heard his character impeached. He may have been a determined man; he may have been a resolute man; he may have been an opinionative man; but for one, I am not willing to sanction the claim; and, if there were no other objection, I would make that which goes upon the ground that, if these facts be true, that he committed deliberate outrage after outrage upon the rights of American citizens, utterly unnecessary to the performance of his duties, the result, simply, of a self-willed and obstinate temper. Such is not my belief. And if such had been the fact, I do not doubt, for one moment, but that the parties would have sued Commodore Porter, and recovered damages against him. Had they been able to establish these facts, or had there not been some sufficient reason for his conduct, they would have brought suit against him. Without going further into the details of this case, and asking pardon of the Senate for the length of time which I have consumed on a mere private claim, I shall leave the case. I cannot vote for the claim, and I persist in my motion.

Mr. MALLORY. I shall reply very briefly to the remarks of the honorable Senator from Delaware. And first, as to the nature of ex parte testimony, I will ask him frankly whether any testimony introduced here could be any other than ex parte? The Government is not likely ever to have appointed a commission to attend to the taking of testimony, and hence any testimony elicited must necessarily be ex parte; but that it is ex parte is not evidence that it is not faithful and true.

I must repeat again that there is not one word in this report which, in my judgment, throws the slightest stain upon the character of Commodore Porter. I had the honor of drawing up that report, and I am proud to say that there is no Senator on this floor who holds the memory of that seaman in higher reverence than I do. As long as the character of the American Navy stands, as long as the value of an American officer is known and appreciated, so long will the name of Commodore Porter be remembered and appreciated. But Commodore Porter, in the execution of these acts, was doing what? He was executing a duty under martial law—a duty which he could not perform but by the enactment of martial law. The existence of martial law within the territory governed by him was necessarily the exclusion of the laws of the State of Florida; the existence of martial law within the territory which he established was necessarily the exclusion of all the proprietary interest of every man in the territory. Can we be told here that Commodore Porter could have established a navy-yard and depot without martial law? Are we to be told that he could have acknowledged any proprietary interest in the soil which he occupied by martial law? Could he even have permitted their enforcement by any process from a court of justice? Why, this system of martial law emanated from the authority that conferred upon him the right to take possession of the island. That authority is found in distinct words, first, to Commodore Perry, who was an advanced guard, a reconnoitering party, to ascertain, in the first place, whether the island was susceptible of being made a naval depot, and he was told if it was so, to take possession of it; and then comes the order to Commodore Porter, also, to take possession of it. Now, I repeat again, when it was taken possession of under the authority of the United States for this military purpose, that purpose necessarily excluded the existence of the laws of Florida; and when it was taken possession of also in the name of the United States, as a part of the Spanish territory ceded to the Government, it necessarily excluded all idea of proprietary interest in the soil on the part of individuals.

Now, when Commodore Porter took possession of a certain district of the island, or the whole of it, and informed these persons that they were there upon sufferance, if they violated that information, what was his remedy? Why, to use military force, the very remedy he told them he would use. Using military force, imprisoning citizens who violated his military orders, was the legitimate authority which every military man knows must be put in force in such a case; and in doing so, did he draw upon himself any imputation of acting without authority? No, sir; he would have been recreant to his duty, having been ordered to take possession of the island, if he had not imprisoned every man, woman, and child, on the island, who attempted to interfere with his authority. When he did this, he executed the duties which his country had confided to him, and what the country did by its agent, it did by itself. We have set up these acts of Commodore Porter, not to show any dereliction on his part; not to show any act incompatible with a gentleman, a man of honor, and a correct seaman; but to show that they were acts of a man in authority, sustained by the highest authority of his country—the order of the chief of his department; and in them, he did no wrong.

But it is said, that the orders to take possession of the island excluded the idea that he should take possession of the whole of it; that they only gave him a right to take possession of sufficient to establish the navy-yard and depot. That is a gratuitous assumption. Commodore Porter was judge of how much was necessary. We cannot to-day review his judgment, and say that it was wrong. He judged that the whole of it was necessary; and I hold that we must carry out his judgment. He did take possession of it, and was justified by his orders in so doing. It is asked why Commodore Porter was not prosecuted during his lifetime? Why, it is a well-known fact, that Commodore Porter's residence was beyond the United States for the greater period of the time after the transaction; he was absent from the United States, at Constantinople, for a great number of years.

Mr. BAYARD. I would ask the honorable Senator to point to any report Commodore Porter made to the Navy Department which imparts to them the fact that he had taken possession of the island, or established martial law there, or anything approaching to it.

Mr. MALLORY. The establishment of a navy-yard and depot by a naval officer, is necessarily the establishment of martial law. The idea of having a navy-yard and depot, and not having martial law within it, is something which I never heard of.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the honorable Senator mean to say, when an officer reports that he has established a navy-yard and depot on an island four and a half miles long, containing over seven hundred acres, it implies that he has taken possession of the whole island, and established martial law over the whole, beyond the part occupied by the depot and navy-yard?

Mr. MALLORY. It is a geographical fact, well-known to the country, that but one small corner of the island was inhabited or inhabitable. That was taken possession of, the other part of the island was destitute of inhabitants. So that any other assumption would be to say that he might take possession of all the valuable soil, and drive the inhabitants into that which was worthless. Commodore Porter does not say in precise terms what he did; because his orders were to take possession of the island. His orders were these:

"You will establish at Thompson's Island, usually called Key West, a depot, and land the ordnance and marines to protect the stores and provisions; if, however, you shall find any important objection to this place, and a more suitable and convenient one can be found, you are at liberty to select it as a depot."

The island had previously been taken possession of under positive orders to Commodore Perry. Now, Commodore Porter says:

"The fixing an establishment at Thompson's Island for rendezvous and supplies, as my instruction required, has had the most happy effect in attaining the object in view."

I rose chiefly to repudiate the idea that in passing this bill we shall cast any stain upon Commodore Porter. It is simply the case of a military officer, under the direct orders of the Government, assuming control—as was the case, perhaps, at Santa Fe—of private property, and exercising the rights of the eminent domain of the country against the proprietary interests of the soil.

The motion to postpone indefinitely was agreed to.

On motion, the Senate adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 2, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

FEES AND COSTS IN U. S. COURTS.

Mr. McLANAHAN. There is upon the Speaker's table a communication from the Secretary of the Interior in response to certain inquiries contained in a resolution adopted by this House. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that that communication may be received, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STANLY. What is the communication about?

Mr. McLANAHAN. It is a response to certain inquiries made in regard to the fees and costs in circuit and district courts of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. COBB. I must object, unless we proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table regularly.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama, that it will take two weeks to print this communication. All I desire is to have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and printed.

Mr. COBB. Very well; I will take back my objection.

Mr. STANLY. I have no objection to the reference, but I object to the printing.

Mr. McLANAHAN. It will take two weeks to print it, because other matters have preceded it; otherwise the printing of this document would not take two weeks. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will withdraw his objection to the printing, for this is a very important document.

The SPEAKER then laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report from the First Comptroller of the Treasury, in response to certain interrogatories contained in a resolution adopted by the House in January last, relative to fees and expenses of the courts of the United States.

Mr. McLANAHAN moved that the communication be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that it be printed. There being no objection, it was so ordered.

CLAIM OF THE STATE OF ALABAMA.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is a claim in behalf of the State of Alabama, for money advanced to the United States, in raising troops for the Mexican war, now before the Committee of Claims. The agent of the State is here, and it is very desirable to have the claim referred to the accounting officers of the Department for settlement. I ask the House to discharge the Committee of Claims from the consideration of that claim, in order that it may be so referred.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

DISCIPLINE IN THE NAVY.

Mr. STUART. Is not the bill in reference to the Navy the first business in order?

The SPEAKER. That question will come up, if demanded by any single member; otherwise the first business in order is the unfinished business of the morning hour of yesterday, being the report made from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STUART. I desire that the bill in reference to the Navy may be taken up, and I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] to withdraw the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. In order to enable the gentleman from Michigan, and other gentlemen who desire it, to debate the bill, I withdraw the motion to lay upon the table.

Mr. HENN. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether, if this bill is taken up, the question which was pending yesterday—the motion to refer the Iowa railroad bill—will lie over until next week?

The SPEAKER. It will go over until to-morrow morning, and will come up then unless cut off by some privileged motion. There are three such motions: To go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to go into a Committee of the Whole House, or to reconsider a vote. It will be the first business in order during the morning hour, unless cut off by some one of these motions.

Mr. RANTOUL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is that motion in order, when there is a privileged question already before the House, the reconsideration of the Navy bill, the gentleman from Michigan having the floor upon it, and when there is also a special order pending?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts is not in order; the gentleman from Michigan having the floor upon a privileged question.

Mr. MILLSON. With the permission of the gentleman from Michigan, I desire to make a simple suggestion to the House. I was under the impression that the House, on Monday last, by unanimous consent, agreed that this motion for reconsideration should go over till Monday next, and that the bill should be printed in the mean time. I know I made the suggestion. My impression is, that the Speaker stated from the Chair the suggestion which I made, and asked if there was any objection to it. I was certainly under the impression that this matter, by unanimous consent of the House, was to go over until Monday next.

The SPEAKER. That proposition was made more than once, but was not definitely determined, and yesterday the House agreed that it should be passed over informally. The gentleman will recollect that on Monday last the debate continued, which was tantamount to objection, and that the House adjourned without agreeing to the arrangement to which he refers.

Mr. STUART. I desire to say that I have no disposition to discuss this question, now, if the House prefers that the bill should go over until Tuesday, or any day subsequent. My individual preference would be for the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, to go into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; and if the House will unanimously agree that this question, as it now stands, shall go over till Tuesday, why, I shall be very willing that it shall do so.

Mr. DANIEL. I move, then, that this question be postponed until Tuesday next.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I have no objection to that motion, but I ask if it would not be better to let it go over until to-morrow morning? It can then be taken up.

Mr. DANIEL. We shall want to transact private business to-morrow.

The question was then taken on Mr. DANIEL's motion, and it was agreed to—ayes 93, noes not counted.

Mr. STANLY. Is not the call of committees for reports the next business in order?

The SPEAKER. Reports from committees are in order, unless the House go to some other business.

Mr. STANLY. Is not that the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would decide that the first business in order would be, to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

Mr. DANIEL. A motion has been made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RANTOUL,] to go into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. If that motion is not considered pending before the House, I now submit the motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has not submitted that motion.

Mr. DANIEL. I was under the impression that he had.

The SPEAKER. He submitted the motion once, but it was decided to be out of order.

Mr. DANIEL. Then I make the motion now.

Mr. ALLISON moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in the opinion of the Chair, must be first put.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope it will be voted down.

The question was then taken on Mr. ALLISON's motion, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. DANIEL's motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. GORMAN. Is not the call of the committees for reports the next regular business in order, and does it not take precedence of a motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House?

The SPEAKER. It does not take precedence.

Mr. GORMAN. I understood the Chair to say, in response to the gentleman from North Carolina, that if the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union did not prevail, the next business in order, during the morning hour, was the call of committees for reports.

I will merely observe to the Chair and to the House, that it has been two months since the committees have had an opportunity of reporting. All the business of the country is now in the hands of the committees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is aware that the question is not debatable.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire of the Chair if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENN] did not report a bill from the Committee on Public Lands during the morning hour yesterday, and was not occupying the floor, when he was arrested in the midst of his remarks, and the floor taken from him by a motion to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. That is the history of the case.

Mr. JONES. Then, is not the gentleman from Iowa entitled to the floor this morning, to continue his remarks during the morning hour? And can the floor be taken from him to make a motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the floor cannot be taken from the gentleman from Iowa. It did not occur to the Chair before. The Chair will be compelled therefore, if the gentleman from Iowa claims the floor, to assign it to him for the morning hour.

IOWA RAILROAD BILL.

Mr. HENN. I desire to accommodate the House as much as possible, it being Friday, which is private bill day. I desire to be governed entirely by the wishes of the House in this matter. If it is the wish of the House that I should yield the floor, with the understanding that I shall have it whenever this matter comes up again, I will do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can yield the floor, with that understanding, if no one objects.

Mr. STANLY. I object, unless one hour can be devoted to the calling of committees for reports.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it not competent for the gentleman to yield the floor to enable me to move to go into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar? I have the right to submit the motion, if he yield for the purpose.

The SPEAKER. It is not competent for him to yield the floor if there be objection; and objection was made.

Mr. DANIEL. But suppose the gentleman had got through his remarks?

Mr. STANLY. There will be time enough for that when the gentleman gets through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot yield the floor for that purpose, unless he yields it altogether.

Mr. DANIEL. I understood that he did yield it altogether.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman's motion is in order.

Mr. HENN. I do not yield the floor for any such purpose, unless it is with the understanding that I may resume it again when the matter again comes before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot yield it with any such understanding—objection having been made.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, APRIL 6, 1852.

NEW SERIES.... No. 61.

Mr. HENN. Then I do not yield.

Mr. H. then said: Mr. Speaker, I was yesterday, in my remarks, interrupted constantly by gentlemen. Now, I wish it distinctly understood to-day that I cannot yield the floor to any one. It has been said that when you make a good shot, there is some fluttering. I perceived that the small shot I gave Eastern gentlemen yesterday did cause a little fluttering. When I was interrupted yesterday by the motion to go into the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table, I was proceeding to say that I thought the Eastern members upon this floor were disposed to vote down every measure coming from the West, and that they were trying to override the West by bringing their own measures in advance of ours.

A motion was made, about a month ago, to refer the Missouri bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and upon that motion where do we find the votes of Eastern members? From Maine, I find recorded two yeas and three nays. I give Maine the full credit of being disposed to do justice to the West. From New Hampshire, I find three yeas and no nays; from Vermont, three yeas and no nays; Massachusetts, five yeas and one nay; and, I am proud to say, that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANTOUL] who voted in the negative, appreciates the West and her interests. I cheerfully award to him credit for the honorable sentiments he has expressed in behalf of Western interests. From Rhode Island there are one for and one against the motion; from Connecticut, there are two yeas and no nays. I will, however, do Connecticut the justice to say, that those who voted for the reference of the bill, did so for the purpose of having it printed, and getting better to understand its provisions. I am satisfied those gentlemen, as well as many others who voted for its reference, will ultimately vote for the bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have up a bill, all the provisions of which are before each member upon the floor. It is a bill similar, in its provisions, to all the other land bills. It has been pending in the other branch of Congress, I may say, for a number of years. It is a bill which any gentleman upon this floor had an opportunity of considering, if he had chosen to avail himself of the lights before him. But I will proceed with my analysis of the vote upon the reference of the Missouri bill. From New York, I find twenty-three yeas and three nays. Out of twenty-six votes cast from that State, we have but three friends, and, I am happy to say, those friends are from the city of New York. In connection with this matter, permit me to say that I consider and believe that the members from that State hold the interests of the city of New York to be identical with those of the State of New York; in other words, the city of New York is to the State of New York what Paris is to France. From New Jersey there were three yeas, and, I believe, no nays. From Pennsylvania there were fifteen yeas and two nays. Two members from the great State of Pennsylvania only voted with the West. Delaware, thanks to her, voted with the West. From Maryland, all absent except two, and those, one for and one against the reference. From Virginia, seven yeas and one nay. From North Carolina there were seven yeas and one nay. I will here remark, that many gentlemen who voted for the reference of that bill, stated that they would vote for the bill when it came up in its regular order; but, I beg to ask, when will a bill come up in its regular order here?

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the gentleman allow me to make one remark? I say to him, as a friend of this bill, and as one ready to vote for it and for others of the same kind, that I was mortified by the remarks made by him, and by others, on yesterday, in connection with this matter. My name is recorded against that reference. But I so voted only for the purpose of moving a reconsideration. And I say now, that the feeling of the East, whether in the city or in the country, is in favor of these bills, and at a proper time and under proper circumstances, the votes from the East will be given for them. But they will not be forced into it. They will not be taken by the neck and have a bill thrust down their throats. A complaint was made yesterday, that I had succeeded in putting a bill into the hands of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the honorable gentleman is now complaining that the House did the same thing with his bill. Now, I have the kindest feelings towards that gentleman and towards his bill, but I desire, while he is summing up the account of his distresses and injuries, that he will not impute wrong motives or wrong intentions to gentlemen before he sees what vote is given upon the bill when it comes regularly up before the House. Now, I say to that gentleman, and I repeat, with the best feelings for him and for the West, that there is no disposition upon the part of the East to stay the progress of this bill, but there is a desire that this bill and other bills should come before the House according to the ordinary course of business, and come before it, as they should come, with the sanction of a committee.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I desire, with the consent of my friend from Iowa, to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] one question. It is, whether, while gentlemen from the East are voting to put this business, which is in advance of all the other business of the House, upon the Calendar, they will also agree to put all the other heavy business of the House upon the same Calendar—that Calendar which is the dead sea of all the business of the House?

Mr. CHANDLER. I should have no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. Would the gentleman like to have them all go together upon the Calendar—there to die? for the Calendar is but another name for death, to the business of this House.

Mr. HENN. We must come to some conclusion upon this motion; for unless I insist upon my motion, this bill, which has been brought forward by gentlemen from the West, will go—I say it with due deference to the House—to that slaughter-house—the Speaker's table, where everything, unless it is brought forward in the first part of the session, is bound to die.

I wish to say one word, in connection with this subject of putting off Western measures. I believe it was at the last session of Congress—perhaps at the first session of the last Congress—that an appropriation was brought forward for the purpose of improving Western rivers; and what did Eastern men do then? Why, they proposed that, if there should be any money left in the Treasury after your light-houses had been built, after your oversights had aid, your dry-docks had been constructed, and your steam-ships had been provided for, why, the West might have it! That was the proposition of Eastern gentlemen then; I hope no such thing will occur again.

Now, one word more, as to the analysis of that vote. I desire to call the attention of the House to what are the expectations of the Eastern States in regard to Western votes. And, to show that I am not alone in my opinions, I will read an extract from a Western writer, whom every person from the Mississippi valley will recognize as a man of discernment, a man of talent, and one who can see Western interests as clearly as any other person, and who sees Eastern motives likewise. He says, in relation to the bill, which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VENABLE] says did not pass this House:

"A bill from the Senate, to allow a credit of four years to the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad Company, of North Carolina, for all duties on railroad iron used by that company, was read twice, and, on ordering it to be engrossed for a third reading, quite an animated debate sprang up. It was quite refreshing to see Mr. OUTLAW, and other gentlemen of North and South Carolina who had been very pertinacious in voting to doom the Missouri railroad bill to the Committee of the Whole, and thereby destroy the chances of its passage, pushing this bill to a vote by the aid of the previous question, and so far favoring their company as to give it a credit of four years upon duties which other companies are required to pay in cash. Encouragement may thus be given to a Southern railroad, by withholding so much money from the National Treasury; but when Missouri asks for like encouragement, in the shape of a grant of lands, which is sure to enhance the value of what remains to the Government, it is another and quite a different affair. The consistency of these politicians is of an extraordinary character, and would afford an amusing chapter at the end of every session of Congress."

I will say, that the gentleman who wrote this is of the same politics as the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. OUTLAW;] so there is no cause to complain on that score.

Mr. VENABLE. Ah!

Mr. HENN. And, inasmuch as there has been some reflections cast upon letter-writers, upon this floor, to the effect that they are not good authority, I will, for the benefit of Western members, give the name of the author of the article I have read. It is Mr. Paschall, the editor of the Missouri Republican. I think every one will award to him the claim, at least, of putting things in their right light.

But what I was about to say, was in regard to what Eastern members expect from Western votes. New York expects her mint; Pennsylvania expects ten per cent. duties upon her railroad and other iron, perhaps. New York expects, also, another appropriation for dry-docks; another for steam-ships; and, I believe, she claims one or two Presidents, I do not know which. Pennsylvania, at least, claims one President, and the privilege of making another. Virginia has set herself up as a dictator in one party. And for all these measures, as well as for all these men who are to be Presidents, we of the West are expected to vote.

I wish now to make one remark in reference to the question which was raised in regard to the vote upon the deficiency bill. It was said by some men, and some members upon this floor, that the West was to get the greater share of the money appropriated by the deficiency bill. I ask, if it is not in the city of New York that most of this money is to be paid? and whether the West has not already received all the benefits that she will receive from the money appropriated in that bill? and whether New York is not to be the recipient of it? It is not the Western States that have an interest in that bill, and Western votes did not pass it, I am sure.

The bill reported by me from the Committee on Public Lands, proposes a railroad in the State of Iowa, from the east to the west, as represented by this map, (presenting a map to the view of the House,) and another one from the north to the south, which are, virtually, but two branches of the same thoroughfare. I hold up this map for Eastern members to look at, as I wish them to see the connection made between Iowa and the East, in order to show that it is for their interest, if nothing else, to vote for it. It may be contended by some, and probably will be, that we should not appropriate lands for any but a national work. We do not come here to ask you to give us lands; we merely ask the privilege of taxing our citizens a dollar and a quarter per acre for settling on lands which may lie within five miles of these railroads which are to be built. We do not ask one cent of money from the Treasury; but we ask simply that privilege. It is a privilege which I would not vote for, were it not for the instructions of my constituents, and of the Legislature of my State, for I would not vote for the enhancement of the price of the public lands; for the time has come, when the people of this country see their true interest, and that it is the interest of all to open all the lands to settlement. It is not, then, a gift that we ask of this House, but a mere privilege of taxing additionally our citizens; and I take it, that no one will pretend to say that when the question resolves itself into a State work, as it does in this case, that the State has not a right to say when, and where, the roads shall be located.

The bill has been objected to out of doors, and might be, and probably would be, objected to on this floor, on the ground that one of the roads proposed to be built is said to be parallel with the Mississippi river. Mr. H. here exhibited a map showing the line of this road, and also the line of the Illinois Central Railroad, and called the attention of the House to the fact, that the Illinois railroad was equally parallel to the Mississippi river, with the one now proposed in Iowa, and even more so, for the one in Iowa leaves the Mississippi at Dubuque, at nearly right angles with that river, and approaches it again at Keokuck, at nearly the same angle; while the Illinois road runs from Cairo for some distance parallel with said river, and as it approaches its northern terminus, runs, for a number of miles, nearly on the bank of that river.

The provisions of this bill are the same as those passed at the last session of the last Congress, with the exception that the Committee on Public Lands of the House has seen fit to throw around it some restrictions, in order to protect the interests of the Government, so that the road will be built, and so that the increased price of the public lands, in alternate sections, reserved to the Government, would certainly be obtained. The bill now under consideration contains these restrictions, and provides that no lands shall be sold except a certain quantity, until twenty miles of the road are completed, and the proceeds of this land lying in the vicinity of the road, are to be applied especially to that part of the road to which they are contiguous. It is a very proper restriction, and one which I will cheerfully vote for, in order to prevent speculation, and in order to insure the completion of the road. I do not wish to consume the time of the House any further in railroad discussion, because every member upon this floor has had an opportunity of examining these bills. The Missouri bill was printed one month ago, and has been before the members of this House. The same bills have virtually been before the House for years. They are understood.

I wish now, however, to call the attention of this House to one fact, which is very ominous to me. A proposition is brought forward by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] to give the old States a certain quantity of the public lands, at the same time that it is proposed to allow the new States to tax their people a dollar and a quarter per acre additional for their lands.

I would ask the friends of that measure if they are willing to take their grants upon the same terms as we do, to wit, to render an equivalent for what they get? Oh, no. No such thing is asked.

I say it is time now that Western men understood each other; and I rose yesterday for the purpose of asking a vote upon this bill, in order that we might have a test vote; and, as I desire to have a test vote, I will move that the bill be put upon its passage; and I call for the previous question.

Mr. CLARK. Will my colleague give way for a moment?

Mr. HENN. I will withdraw the call for the previous question, provided the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, addressed the Chair, but his remark was not understood by the reporter.

Mr. CLARK. I supposed that my colleague was not through.

Mr. HENN. I demand the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. As long as that motion is pending no discussion is in order.

Mr. TUCK. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENN] to withdraw that motion. I will renew it.

Mr. HENN. I am satisfied that if I withdraw the demand for the previous question for one, I must also for another.

Mr. TUCK. I only want to ask—

The SPEAKER. Debate is out of order. Does the gentleman from Iowa withdraw his motion?

Mr. HENN. I do not.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I hope the previous question will not be sustained; but if it is, that the bill may be committed to the Committee of the Whole. I desire to answer some of the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. McLANAHAN. Will it be in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has some doubt whether, the previous question pending, during the morning hour, it would be in order.

Mr. CLARK. What is the question?

The SPEAKER. It is upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CLARK. What will be the effect of sustaining the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The question will then be upon the commitment of the bill, that motion having been made yesterday.

Mr. CLARK. Cannot that be withdrawn?

The SPEAKER. It cannot be so long as the demand for the previous question remains. The question is upon seconding the call for the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ORR and FOWLER were appointed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire of the Chair if there is a motion pending to refer this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair again states to the House that there is a motion pending to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole upon the state of the Union. The House will first be brought to a vote upon that proposition, and then upon ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. CLARK. I wish to ask a question. I should be glad to know whether the motion which has been made to commit this bill to the Committee of the Whole, can be withdrawn, and another motion substituted, to put the bill upon its passage?

Mr. JONES. I can make a motion to lay the bill upon the table, and I will try that.

The SPEAKER. It is competent for the gentleman to withdraw his motion.

Mr. CLARK. What will the House then be brought to vote upon?

The SPEAKER. Upon ordering the bill to be engrossed.

Mr. HENN. I adhere to my motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole, and I hope it will be voted down, with a view to put the bill upon its passage.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do I understand the gentleman to withdraw his demand for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The motion is not withdrawn.

The question was then taken on seconding the previous question, and the tellers (Messrs. FOWLER and ORR) reported—ayes 89, noes not counted.

So the previous question received a second; and the main question was then ordered to be put.

The question now being upon the commitment of the bill—

Mr. CLARK demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 115, nays 50; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Thos. H. Bayly, Barrere, Bartlett, Bennett, Boone, Bowie, Bragg, Breckinridge, George H. Brown, Buell, Burrows, Busby, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Chavis, Dean, Edgerton, Edmundson, Cullom, Daniel, Geo. T. Davis, Dean, Egerton, Edmundson, Evans, Ewing, Floyd, Fowler, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gentry, Goodenow, Gotlich, Gorman, Grey, Grow, Hammond, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Haven, Hubbard, Hillyer, Horsford, Houston, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Letcher, Martin, McDonald, McLanahan, McMullin, McQueen, Meacham, Meade, Milson, Miner, Murray, Olds, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Perkins, Polk, Powell, Robbins, Russell, Sackett, Seage, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Snow, Stanley, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stone, Strother, Sutherland, Sweetser, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, George W. Thompson, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, and Woodward—115.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Clark, Cobb, John G. Davis, Doty, Dunham, Durkee, Eastman, Fick, Freeman, Gaylord, Hall, Hendricks, Henn, Howard, Ingersoll, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Landry, Lockart, Mace, Mann, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, McCorkle, Miller, Molony, John Moore, Nabers, Newby, Orr, Penniman, Phelps, Rantoul, Richardson, Robinson, Scurry, Smith, Benjamin Stanton, Stuart, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Yates—50.

So the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. DANIEL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. ORR. The morning hour has not yet expired.

The SPEAKER. It has not expired by some seven minutes.

Mr. DEAN. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the vote by which the Iowa railroad bill was committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be reconsidered, and that that motion do lie upon the table.

The question was put and the motion was agreed to—ayes 97, noes not counted.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. DANIEL, and it was decided in the affirmative.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar, (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. This being the first Friday in the month, it is objection day. The bill under consideration when the committee was last in session was House bill No. 150, being "A bill for the relief of Robert Nelson." That is the first bill in order.

The bill provides that Robert Nelson have the privilege to reconvey a specified tract of land, entered by mistake, to the United States, upon furnishing to the Commissioner of the Land Office satisfactory evidence that he has not conveyed away or incumbered said tract of land, and that he be permitted to enter a like quantity of land, subject to private entry at $1 25 per acre, in lieu of said land so reconveyed.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SACKETT. I desire to withdraw the objection I made to House bill No. 147, at the last sitting of the committee, being "A bill for the relief of the Monroe Railroad Company and their securities."

Mr. KING, of New York. Let the bill and report be read.

The Clerk read the bill and report.

The bill provides for the canceling of the several bonds given by the Monroe Railroad Company for the duties upon iron imported at Savannah, Georgia, in 1841, and the satisfaction of judgments which have been or may be obtained by the United States against said company or their sureties, upon their bonds aforesaid, upon the defendants, paying costs of suits.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

[A message was here received from the President of the United States at the hands of M. P. Fillmore, Esq.]

The committee next proceeded to the consideration of House bill No. 151, being "A bill for the relief of the heirs of William McFarland."

The bill and report were read.

The bill provides for the confirmation of a tract of two hundred and fifty arpents in the parish of East Baton Rouge to the legal representatives of William McFarland, provided it does not affect the rights of others, if such exist.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 153, being "A bill for the relief of the heirs of Semoice, a friendly Creek Indian," came up next in order. The bill confirms to the heirs of Semoice title to a section of land under act of 2d July, 1836, in virtue of the treaty of 9th August, 1814, reserving land to certain friendly Creek Indians.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 154, for the relief of Ira Baldwin, came up next in order.

The bill and report were read.

This bill provides that the Secretary of War shall issue to said Ira Baldwin a land warrant for three hundred and twenty acres of land, to be located on any unappropriated lands in the United States, which have been offered for sale; and also, that the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to said Baldwin the amount of three months' extra pay for services rendered by him in the late war with Great Britain.

Mr. SACKETT moved to amend the bill so as to make it read "to be located upon any lands subject to entry for bounty lands;" which amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 158, for the relief of Sergeant Leonard Skinner, came up as the next in order.

The bill was read.

This bill directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of said Skinner, and allow him his back pay, pay for clothing, three months' extra pay and bounty land, for his services in the war with Mexico.

There being no objection to the bill, it was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 160, for the relief of the heirs of Jeremiah Wingate, came up as the next in order.

The bill and report were read.

The bill provides that the heirs of said Wingate shall be confirmed in their title to a certain tract of land lying on the north side of Nassau river, in the State of Florida, and that the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon the presentation of the certificate of the surveys of said tract, shall issue a patent for the same.

There being no objection to the bill, it was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 164, for the relief of James A. Fawns, came up as the next in order.

The bill and report were read.

This bill directs the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust and settle the account of said Fawns, late acting purser of the United States brig Bainbridge, during the time that he acted as said purser.

There being no objection to the bill, it was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 166, "for the relief of Monmouth B. Hart, Joel Kelly, and William Close, securities for the late Benjamin F. Hart, a purser in the United States Navy," came up as next in order.

This bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury, in adjusting the accounts of the late Benjamin F. Hart, a purser in the United States Navy, shall credit him the amount of losses of private stores, occasioned by the wreck of the United States ship "Concord," to which he was attached, as nearly as the same can be ascertained.

There being no objection to the bill, it was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 167, "for the relief of Isaac Cobb," came up as next in order.

This bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Isaac Cobb, of the State of Maine, on the pension list of the United States, at the rate of twenty-four dollars per annum, commencing the 4th of March, 1841, and to continue during his natural life.

There being no objection to the bill, it was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 169, "for the relief of Catherine Clark," came up as next in order.

This bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Catherine Clark, of Virginia, widow of William Clark, upon the half-pay pension roll of the United States, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing May 5, 1851, and to continue for five years from that time.

There being no objection to this bill, it was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 170, "for the relief of Jacob Shade," came up as next in order.

This bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Jacob Shade upon the invalid pension roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the 1st of January, 1852, and to continue during his natural life.

Mr. AVERETT objected.

House bill No. 171, for the relief of Thomas P. Dudley, came up as next in order.

This bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall place the name of Thomas P. Dudley upon the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eleven dollars and twenty-five cents per month, commencing with the 8th January, 1849, to continue during his natural life, as a reward for his services in the battles of the 18th and 23d January, 1813, in the latter of which he was wounded in his right shoulder, and in consequence of which he has been unable to procure a subsistence by manual labor.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 172, for the relief of George Cassidy, came up as next in order.

This bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall place the name of George Cassidy upon the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing with the 1st January, 1848, to continue during his natural life, as a reward for an internal injury or wound occasioned by a fall from his horse when on duty at Fort Jesup, Louisiana.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 173, for the relief of John Hazen, came up as next in order.

This bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall place the name of John Hazen upon the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the 8th January, 1852, to continue during his natural life, as a reward for the wounds he received in the right ankle and foot by the falling of the timber of a bridge which he was assisting to erect by order of his commanding officer.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. Would it be in order for the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. AVERETT,] who objected to the bill No. 170, to withdraw his objection, and to lay the bill aside?

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by general consent.

Mr. SWEETSER. I object to the withdrawal of the objection.

House bill No. 174, for the relief of William Dwelly, came up as next in order.

The bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall place the name of William Dwelly upon the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing with the 1st January, 1851, during his natural life, as a reward for injuries caused by falling from a rock, when posted as a sentinel on the parapet of Fort Scammell.

Mr. SWEETSER. I rise for explanation. When I made objection to the withdrawal by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. AVERETT] of his objection to bill No. 170, pressed forward by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] he [Mr. AVERETT] understood my objection as made to the bill itself. I do not wish to have it so understood. I gave notice, that after an objection had been made to a bill, and that bill was passed by and another taken up, I should object to the objection being withdrawn. And if the Chair is of opinion that I have no right to control that matter, and rules the point against me, then I shall take my objection directly to the bill. But I wish the committee to understand that the point I make is this: that if a bill is read through, and objection is made, I will not permit the objection to be withdrawn after the next number on the calendar is called.

Mr. AVERETT. I objected to that bill originally, but, after further investigation, I became satisfied that the report was correct, and that the bill ought to pass. I ask leave to withdraw the objection, and I claim the right.

The CHAIRMAN. The right has always been exercised, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEETSER] has a clear right to object to the bill.

Mr. AVERETT. Have I the right to withdraw my objection?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that right, according to the custom of the committee heretofore.

Mr. SWEETSER. Then I make my objection to the bill.

Mr. KING, of New York. Another rule is, you shall not go back upon the calendar, except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SWEETSER. Does the Chair decide that my objection is not debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must so decide, as he understands the practice of the House.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Senate bill No. 67, was heretofore stopped upon my objection, and I desire to withdraw it.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I merely wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact, that Senate bill No. 67, was laid aside some time since upon my objection. Having since examined the papers, I am satisfied that my objections were not well founded, and I now withdraw the objection. It was unanimously reported by the Committee on Commerce, and I hope it will now be passed.

Mr. SACKETT. I understand that the practice of the House, so far as the last Congress is concerned, was this: that you could not go back during the same day, to withdraw an objection interposed to the passage of a bill in committee. The very object of this objection is, to allow members time to examine the case; but you can go back, in case objection was made upon a previous day. Therefore, I think the gentleman has a right to withdraw it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. In relation to bill No. 170, upon which this whole discussion has sprung up; there is now no objection, and the bill will be laid aside.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no objection, except to discussion. [Laughter.]

Mr. SWEETSER. I objected.

Mr. HARRIS. You objected to the gentleman's withdrawing his objection, and the Chair decides that you have no right to make that objection.

Mr. SWEETSER. Do I understand the Chair to decide that, where an objection is made to a bill, and it is laid aside, and the committee pass to the next case, if the objection is subsequently withdrawn, we can go back?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair determines that such was the practice of the last Congress, and that, where there is no positive rule, the practice of the committee, or the House, obtains, of course, as a rule.

Mr. SWEETSER. If the Chair makes that decision, I appeal from it.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order. I understand that the subject upon which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEETSER] proposes to take an appeal, had passed from before the committee when I made a motion to have an objection to another bill withdrawn. I object to the gentleman's overslaughing my motion in that sort of style.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEETSER] appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. KING, of New York. As this is a subject of some importance, I desire to understand clearly what the decision is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided, upon the practice of the last Congress, that if a gentleman withdraws his objection to a bill, that then that bill may proceed, if there is no other person objecting to it.

Mr. KING. But where there is an objection to going back, then it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The decision of the Chair is confined to the objection of the day.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it in order to say anything upon the appeal?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to discuss any question before the committee.

The question was then taken, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? and there were, upon a division—ayes 77, noes not counted.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. MARSHALL. Do I understand that the Chair has decided that I cannot withdraw my objection now to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. If there is any objection to it, the Chair decides that the gentleman cannot withdraw it.

Mr. SWEETSER. I do not understand how the Chair decides that. That is what I have been at.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It must be within the recollection of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] and of the members of this committee, who were here during the last Congress, that a bill having been objected to, and passed over, a gentleman could not go back to it and withdraw an objection, for the very reason, as it was urged upon one or two occasions, that the friends of the bill might make an objection to it, and then, when those who were really opposed to it were absent, might withdraw their objection to the bill and pass it.

Mr. MARSHALL. I understand that case to be totally different from the one just decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state distinctly, that the decision which he made had reference to objections made to-day, and not to those made on a previous day.

Mr. MARSHALL. But I ask the indulgence of the committee to permit me to withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is an objection it cannot be done.

Mr. SWEETSER. I object:

Mr. SACKETT. Before the bill which was last read, No. 174, is disposed of, I would ask the gentleman who reported the bill [Mr. MARTIN] why the pension is not placed back, according to the rule of the House, to January 1st, 1850? It seems to be a very hard case, and it ought to be made conformable to the rule governing cases of a like character. The papers were perfected in January, 1850, and the pension proposed to be granted by the bill only begins from January, 1851. I move to amend the bill so as to provide that the pension shall commence January 1st, 1850.

Mr. SWEETSER. Is it in order to move to amend a bill in this committee?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the practice.

The question was then taken on the amendment and it was agreed to.

The bill was then laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 176, "for the relief of David Murphy, of Ohio," came up as next in order. The bill grants a pension to David Miller of six dollars per month during his natural life, on account of wounds received while in the United States service in the late war.

Mr. AVERETT. I ask the gentleman having charge of this bill, whether this petitioner is living?

Mr. EDGERTON. I suppose so. He was on the 12th of last month, for I received a letter from him.

Mr. AVERETT. I will make this inquiry to all bills, for there are some petitions here from dead persons. [Laughter.]

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 179, for the relief of William Lynch, a soldier of the late war with Great Britain, came up as next in order.

The bill grants to William Lynch a pension on account of wounds received while in the service of the United States during the last war.

Mr. DANIEL. I will not object, if the pension commences the 1st of January, instead of the time fixed in the bill. I move that amendment.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. Pensions heretofore have commenced to run with the perfection of the proof. The proof in this case was perfected at the Thirtieth Congress, and the bill passed the House.

Mr. DANIEL. That does not remove my objection.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

There was then no objection, and the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 180, for the relief of Jonas D. Platt, of New York, came up as next in order.

This bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Jonas D. Platt on the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of six dollars per month, commencing on the first day of January, 1846, and continuing during his natural life, for injuries received in 1814, during the late war, while in the service of the United States.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 181, to increase the pension of Henry Click, of Cocke county, Tennessee, came up as next in order.

This bill provides for the payment of a pension of eight dollars per month, during life, to said Henry Click, for disability occasioned by injuries which he received while in the service of the United States.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 184, for the relief of B. B. Bennett.

This bill provides that a pension shall be granted said Bennett, at the rate of eight dollars per month, for disabilities received in the service of the United States.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill No. 185, for the relief of Maurice K. Simons, came up as next in order.

This bill recommends that said Simons's name be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, during his life, for injuries received while in the service of the United States, in the war with Mexico.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill No. 54, entitled "An act for the relief of Theodore Offut," came up as next in order.

This bill provides for the payment of a just and legal claim of said Offut against the Government, the value of a bay mare, which had been taken without his consent, and without compensation, while he was a private in Captain Pollard's company of mounted volunteers, and which had been turned over to the United States quartermaster, Major Brant, in January, 1848.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The following bills, coming up in their order in the Committee of the Whole, being objected to as indicated below, were laid aside under the rule for future consideration, viz:

149. A bill for the relief of the heirs of Lieutenant Bartlett Hines. [Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, objected.]

152. A bill for the relief of Patrick Gass. [Mr. HALL objected.]

155. A bill for the relief of William H. Wells and others. [Mr. SWEETSER objected.]

157. A bill for the relief of Josiah P. Pilcher, late a private in Company F, second regiment Kentucky Volunteers. [Mr. KING, of New York, objected.]

159. A bill for the relief of the heirs-at-law of Anthony G. Willis, deceased. [Mr. SWEETSER objected.]

161. A bill to provide for the payment of the companies of Captains Bush, Price, and Saurtz, for military services in Florida. [Mr. SWEETSER objected.]

162. A bill for the relief of Dr. S. R. Addison, passed assistant surgeon in the United States Navy. [Mr. KING objected.]

163. A bill for the relief of Jacob J. Storer. [Mr. SWEETSER objected.]

168. A bill for the relief of David Myerle. [Mr. DANIEL objected.]

175. A bill for the relief of Anthony Walton Bayard. [Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, objected.]

177. A bill for the relief of Elizabeth E. V. Field. [Mr. DUNHAM objected.]

178. A bill for the relief of Henry Miller, a soldier of the war of 1812. [Mr. AVERETT objected.]

182. A bill for the relief of Charles Staples. [Mr. AVERETT objected.]

183. A bill for the relief of Aaron Stafford. [Mr. DANIEL objected.]

Senate bill No. 32. An act for the relief of Margaret L. Worth. [Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, objected.]

Senate bill No. 66. An act for the relief of William P. Greene. [Mr. JOHN W. HOWE objected.]

197. A bill for the relief of John B. Rogers, of South Carolina. [Mr. JOHN W. HOWE objected.]

198. A bill for the relief of Joseph Arnew and Peter Arnew. [Mr. NABERS objected.]

199. A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Bernard Todd. [Mr. KING, of New York, objected.]

200. A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John H. Platt, deceased. [Mr. SACKETT objected.]

201. A bill for the relief of George Simpton, of Galveston. [Mr. GOODENOW objected.]

202. A bill for the relief of the widow and orphan children of Colonel William R. McKee, late of Lexington, Kentucky. [Mr. DANIEL objected.]

203. A bill for the relief of the Trustees of the Philadelphia Gas Works. [Mr. SWEETSER objected.]

On motion by Mr. BUELL, the committee then rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman [Mr. CHANDLER] reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the Private Calendar, had passed through the whole of it, and had directed him to report sundry bills with amendments and some bills without, with a recommendation that the amendments be concurred in and that the bills be passed.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. NABERS moved that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. STANLY demanded the yeas and nays; on a count for which there were—ayes 10, noes 78; no quorum voting.

Mr. NABERS withdrew his motion.

Mr. SWEETSER moved that the House do now adjourn; which motion was not agreed to.

The following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, were read the third time and passed, viz:

Senate 54. An act for the relief of Theodore Offut;

150. A bill for the relief of Robert Nelson;

151. A bill for the relief of the heirs of William McFarland;

153. A bill for the relief of the heirs of Semoice, a friendly Creek Indian;

158. A bill for the relief of Sergeant Leonard Skinner;

160. A bill for the relief of the heirs of Jeremiah Wingate;

164. A bill for the relief of James A. Fawns;

166. A bill for the relief of Monmouth B. Hart, Joel Kelly, and William Close, securities for the late Benjamin F. Hart, a purser in the United States Navy;

167. A bill for the relief of Isaac Cobb;

169. A bill for the relief of Catherine Clark;

170. A bill for the relief of Jacob Shade;

171. A bill for the relief of Thomas P. Dudley;

172. A bill for the relief of George Cassady;

173. A bill for the relief of John Hazen;

176. A bill for the relief of David Murphy, of Ohio;

180. A bill for the relief of Jonas D. Platt, of New York;

181. A bill to increase the pension of Henry Click, of Cocke county, Tennessee;

184. A bill for the relief of B. B. Bennett; and

185. A bill for the relief of Maurice K. Simons.

The following House bills were reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments, viz:

154. A bill for the relief of Ira Baldwin;

174. A bill for the relief of Wm. Dwelly; and

184. A bill for the relief of B. B. Bennett.

The amendments were severally concurred in, and the bills ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, were read the third time and passed.

MONROE RAILROAD COMPANY.

The question then recurred upon ordering House bill No. 147, for the relief of the Monroe Railroad Company and their sureties, upon which a separate vote had been asked by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question being put—

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I ask for a division upon the question. I understand this is a bill to remit the duties upon railroad iron for this Monroe Railroad Company.

Several MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. STANTON. I understand it relates to a certain judgment which had been rendered against that company.

Mr. MEADE. So it does.

Mr. STANTON. I understand, further, that it proposes to remit that judgment.

[Cries of "Read the bill!"]

Mr. ORR. I object to the reading of the bill. It has already been read twice.

Mr. STANTON. Then I call the yeas and nays upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman has the right to demand that the bill shall be read.

The bill was then again read through by the Clerk.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. Where does that railroad lie?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not bound to know where the railroad lies.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It is in Georgia.

Mr. MEADE. If it is the desire of the House, I will give a short statement in relation to the bill.

Several MEMBERS. Let us hear it.

Mr. MEADE. That bill makes provision for the relief of the sureties of the Monroe Railroad Company upon the same terms, for the same reasons, that similar relief was granted to the St. Louis Railroad, and other companies, under the same circumstances. Under the tariff law of 1832, railroad companies were allowed to import their iron free of duty, provided the iron was laid down within three years after its importation; but in the non-compliance of that condition, the roads were required to enter into bond and security to pay the duties, which were always released if they complied with the condition. The railroad iron, to which this bill refers, was imported in the year 1841, about twelve months previous to the passage of the tariff of 1842, which raised the duties on iron thirty per cent.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It raised the duty to twenty-five dollars per ton.

Mr. MEADE. I think that act provided for an ad valorem duty upon iron. But that makes no difference. In that law of 1842, there is a provision which requires railroads to lay down that iron before the 3d of March, 1843. That provision, however, conflicts with the provisions in the laws existing before that time, which gave three years after the time of importation to lay down the iron. There was a provision in the law of 1842, which reserved to railroad companies all the benefits conferred upon them by previous laws; but, as the report in this case states, there was such a perplexity and obscurity of language employed as made it not so clear as it might be.

The consequence was, the bonds given by the Monroe Railroad Company, in 1841, were put in suit, and a judgment was obtained against the company, because the rails were not laid previous to the 3d of March, 1843. The company imported their iron in 1841, and, according to the provisions of the then existing laws, they were allowed three years to lay the rails; upon complying with which condition the duties were to be remitted. But, according to the law of 1842, by this judgment they were doomed to pay the duties, notwithstanding the law existing previously to the contrary. Well, in consequence of this incongruity in the laws, the Central Railroad Company in Georgia, and a railroad near New Orleans—I do not now recollect the name—petitioned Congress to be relieved from a strict construction of the law of 1842, representing that the rails had been laid within the time specified by the laws existing when the iron was imported. Well, such was the case with this company. The iron was imported in 1841, and the rails were laid before three years from that time had expired; though not till after the 3d of March, 1843. These sureties were sued, because the Monroe Railroad Company had failed, and, in fact, had dissolved. A judgment was obtained against them, and they now come forward and ask the indulgence of this body, to put them upon the same footing as other sureties for railroads were by the previous adjudication of this House in the form of special legislation. It is a case, simply, for which relief is sought against the apparent inconsistency of two laws passed by Congress, one conferring a right, and the other taking it away.

Mr. LETCHER. I should be glad to know of my colleague at what time this judgment was recovered.

Mr. MEADE. I am not quite certain whether the judgment is recorded, but you will find by the correspondence filed among the papers connected with this case, that a petition was presented to the Department to suspend the suit until Congress had had an opportunity to act in relation to the case. The district court were willing, and the district attorney did not object, so I presume the case has not been prosecuted to a final judgment until very recently. This case has been before Congress, but not acted upon, for several years. But owing to the delay in Congress to act upon it, the case has been pressed, and I presume before this time a judgment has been recovered.

Mr. MEACHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn. I wish to examine this case further before I vote upon it.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a motion which takes precedence. I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. STANLY. I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered; and the question being taken, there were—yeas 61, nays 55, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Rocco, Breckinridge, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Thompson Campbell, Chapman, George T. Davis, Edgerton, Ewing, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Gaylord, Goodrich, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, S. W. Harris, Hart, Haws, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Ingersoll, John Johnson, George G. King, Preston King, Landry, McMullin, Meade, Millson, Nabers, Newton, Orr, S. W. Parker, Phelps, Russell, Savage, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Scurry, Origen S. Seymour, Smart, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Abrahm P. Stevens, Stuart, Sutherland, Sweetser, Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, and Woodward—61.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Brenton, Briggs, Joseph Cable, Caskie, Chandler, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dean, Doty, Dunham, Evans, Fitch, Fowler, Goodenow, Grow, Harper, Haven, Hendricks, Horsford, Houston, Howard, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, George W. Jones, Kuhns, Letcher, Lockhart, Humphrey Marshall, Martin, Mason, Meacham, Miller, Molony, Morehead, Murray, Peaslee, Penniman, Perkins, Riddle, Robbins, Scudder, Stanley, Stratton, Taylor, Walbridge, Watkins, Welch, Wells, and Alexander White—55.

Before the result was declared—

Mr. HALL said: I was not in when the vote was taken, but as I understand no quorum has voted, I desire to vote in order to make a quorum.

Objection being made, Mr. HALL was not permitted to record his vote.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, said: I believe it is not in order for members, alluding to those around the Clerk's desk, to be about the table when the yeas and nays are being taken, and I believe it is not in order to send messengers out of the House to bring in members to vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. ORR. I desire to suggest that as there is one lacking to make a quorum, the Speaker would make a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The presence of the Chair would make a quorum in the House, but there is no rule requiring the Speaker to vote, except upon a tie; but the right of the Chair to vote is clear enough. The Chair votes in the negative.

Mr. STANLY. I rise to a point of order. I do not wish to run counter to the decision of the House, but I want to give notice of a resolution I intend to offer on Monday. I will have it put in the papers for the information of the House.

Upon the question of adjournment, I will make the point, though I will not insist upon it, can the Chair vote after the result is announced? The Chair announced the result before it was said that the Chair could vote. I do not object to the result.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not yet announced the result.

Mr. STANLY. I beg pardon of the Chair; but the Chair announced—yeas 61, nays 55.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will recollect that the Chair did announce the number of votes given, but he did not declare the result; and he also stated, at the same time, that there was wanting one to make a quorum, and the question arose in his mind whether or not it was his duty to vote to make a quorum.

Mr. STANLY. I beg pardon; but I certainly understood the Chair to announce the result.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did announce the result thus far.

Mr. STANLY. I do not insist upon my point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the result to be—yeas 61, nays 56; the yeas have it, and the House has determined that when it adjourns it adjourn to meet again on Monday next.

Mr. FREEMAN. I simply desire to say that in the published remarks of my colleague from the fourth district [Mr. Brown] there are a few errors which I desire to correct, by sending the corrections to the reporter, if there is no objection.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]
Mr. FREEMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MEADE. I call for the yeas and nays upon that, as I want the Monroe bill put through. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House then adjourned to meet again on Monday next.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. THOMPSON, of Massachusetts: The petition of S. S. Richardson, of Winchester, Massachusetts, for abolishing the duty on raw silk.

By Mr. McDONALD: The petition of Allison B. Huff, of Maine, asking for bounty on Schooner "Stoic," lost at sea.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: The memorial of Grinnell Mintum and 2,000 others, citizens of New York, praying Congress to grant additional aid to the Collins line of steamers.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 4, 1852.

[The following proceedings were accidentally omitted to be inserted in their proper place.]

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the proposed removal of the United States Mint from Philadelphia to New York; which, on the motion of Mr. BRONHEAD, was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHIELDS presented a representation of the Grand Jury of Washington county, District of Columbia, respecting the City Hall, and the want of proper accommodations for the Circuit and Criminal Courts; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. RUSK presented a petition of certain merchants of San Antonio, Texas, praying that that place may be made a port of entry and debenture, and that goods entered there upon which the duties have been paid or secured may be exported into Mexico with the privilege of drawback; also, praying an appropriation for a national road from San Antonio to El Paso; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of citizens of San Antonio, Texas, praying the improvement of the San Antonio river; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of Simeon C. Watson, praying additional compensation for carrying the mail between San Augustine and Marshall, in Texas; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. GWIN presented resolutions adopted by the settlers' and miners' State convention, held at Sacramento City, California, in January, 1852, urging the immediate construction of a railroad from the valley of the Mississippi to the Pacific; which were referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Also, the memorial of John Plumb, on behalf of the settlers and miners of the city and county of Sacramento, California, remonstrating against the adoption of Mr. Asa Whitney's scheme for the construction of a railroad to the Pacific; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, the memorial of a committee in behalf of the California settlers' and miners' State convention, asking the enactment of such laws in reference to the public domain in California as will best secure to each settler thereon a reasonable portion thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the memorial of George R. Goldsborough, praying for the difference of pay between that of Captain's clerk and a Chaplain in the Navy during the time he performed the duties of Chaplain on board of the United States ship Plymouth; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS. I present the petition of Seth Bannister and several other citizens of Massachusetts, praying that there may be grants of public land made to them respectively for services rendered to the United States in the revolutionary war, and to the widows and children of deceased officers and soldiers who served in the same war; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the petition of Charles Fletcher, praying the right of way and a donation of land to the Nebraska Railroad Association, for the construction of a railroad from Fort Leavenworth to Fort Kearney; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRADBURY presented the memorial of sixteen deputy marshals for taking the Seventh Census in Kennebunk county, Maine, asking additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. CHASE presented a document in favor of a trial of John H. Sherburne's plan for a floating breakwater or anchorage, as a means of saving life and property on the lakes; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, presented a petition of certain citizens of Hamilton county, Tennessee, remonstrating against the further extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

STEAMERS BETWEEN NEW YORK AND IRELAND.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have been requested to present a memorial signed by William McCormick and numerous citizens of New York, and, I believe, other Atlantic cities, praying that the Postmaster General may be authorized to contract with Ambrose W. Thompson for the transportation of the United States mails in steam-ships between New York and Galway, in Ireland. It prays that the recommendation of the Postmaster General in this respect may be favorably considered by Congress; and that a contract be made with the parties who propose to establish this line, to convey the mails in first class steamers. It suggests many points that are, perhaps, worthy of some consideration by the committee. One is, the gain that by this line will be accomplished in point of time. It will save something like thirty-six hours in the voyage to Europe. Another consideration is, the saving in point of distance. It would lessen the distance by something like three hundred and sixty miles.

The memorial also states, that by the reports of the Post Office Departments of this country and of Great Britain, it is shown that about one half of the letters sent from this country to Great Britain are forwarded to Ireland. Of course, at present, they have to go first to England, and then back to Ireland. Thus, the establishment of a line of this kind would not only be a gain in point of time, and in point of distance, but it would prevent one half the letters that leave this country for Great Britain, and one third of the letters that leave this country for Europe, going first to England. It would be a great saving in these respects.

This proposed line seems to be now in the hands of individuals who promise, in point of character, energy, and business habits, to carry out the enterprise. I hope the Naval Committee will take the matter into consideration, and examine the points suggested in the memorial. There is one thing, at all events, presented here, which is worthy of some consideration, and that is, the feasibility of carrying out this plan with very little expense and cost. If the calculations of these men be correct, they can lessen the cost very materially. I am aware of one thing that will perhaps be considered; and that is, that what is called the Irish Channel is considered extremely perilous by mariners and persons acquainted with it. There is now a railroad from Galway to Dublin, and a telegraph from Galway to Dublin, and a sub-marine telegraph is being made between Dublin and Holyhead in Wales. The memorialists point out, and I think, very satisfactorily, that Galway is the first place which can communicate with the continent of Europe; and that there will be not only great gain, in point of time, and in point of distance—elements which are very material at this stage of the world—but that mariners will escape the most perilous part of the navigation of the voyage across the ocean.

I beg the committee to take these matters into consideration. I know that I very feebly present the points of the case. They are presented in the memorial, I think, with great ability and great clearness. If I am to judge from the names of the individuals who have taken this matter in hand, they will carry it out, if any men in this country can do it. All that they ask is, I think, a most reasonable proposition, namely, that they shall be paid for letters they may carry between this country and Ireland. They ask nothing else; they merely ask to have their share of the direct natural trade between the two countries; and they ask that the trade which goes between this country and Ireland be not first carried past Ireland to England, and then back again to Ireland; and that the men who are going to France and to Germany, and the letters going to those countries, instead of being carried out of their way, up the Channel, may stop at the first European point, and thence be dispatched to the Continent.

I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

It was so referred.

CANAL AROUND THE FALLS OF THE OHIO.

Mr. CHASE. I present the memorial of four thousand citizens of the city of Cincinnati, praying for the construction of a canal on the north bank of the river Ohio, around the Falls at Louisville. In doing so, I will say that the character, not less than the number of the memorialists, commends their application to the favorable consideration of the Senate. The memorial presents a brief, and at the same time a clear and very forcible argument in favor of the improvement which is asked for, which will relieve me from the necessity of making a speech on the subject at this time. I will, however, say, that I have given a full and careful consideration to this subject, and I am satisfied that the prayer of the memorialists ought to be granted. I understand that the Committee on Roads and Canals have this matter before them, and have given it a thorough examination, and will shortly report a bill for the desired improvement. I content myself for the present, therefore, with moving that this memorial be referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

The memorial was so referred.

LINES OF STEAMSHIPS.

Mr. DAVIS. I present to the Senate a memorial of Enoch Train and others, merchants, navigators, and ship-owners of the city of Boston. They append their signatures to a memorial signed by a larger number of ship-owners, merchants, and navigators, from the city of New York, in which they represent that in their judgment, for the reasons which they set forth, it is inexpedient to extend the policy of the Government by making any new contracts with or grants to mail steamship owners, for the transportation of the mail. I move that, without reading, the memorial be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS TO WIDOWS.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have a memorial signed by citizens of Penobscot county, and sundry other citizens of the State of Maine, asking for a modification of the laws granting pensions to the widows of deceased soldiers and officers who served in the revolutionary war. I ask that, without reading, the memorial be referred to the Committee on Pensions, and I beg to call the attention of the Committee on Pensions to what the petitioners ask. By the present law, all widows that were married prior to the year 1800 are entitled to pensions, while those who were married subsequent to the year 1800, are entitled to nothing. A law fixing an arbitrary rule, is the one which is now in existence. There might have been some reason for making the rule for a particular period of time. If it had been limited to the period during the war, if it had included only those who were married during the existence of the war, and were thus deprived of the services of their husbands while in the service of the country, there might have been some good reason for it. But, in the law as it now stands, Congress in the first place took the year 1794, and granted a pension to the widows of all those who were married prior to that time. Subsequent to that period, it has been extended from 1794 to 1800. Consequently, if the individual were married upon the second day of January, 1800, and is now a widow, she is entitled to no pension whatever, but if she were married upon the twenty-ninth day of December, 1799, she is entitled to the same pension that her husband was entitled to when alive. There are but very few of these widows remaining, and they were all or nearly all of them married either before 1800, or a few years after. I think, at least I hope, the committee will be able to come to the conclusion which justice and equity require, and that the limitation will be removed, so that all the widows shall be placed upon the same basis.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

CANAL AROUND THE FALLS OF THE SAULT STE. MARIE.

Mr. WADE presented resolutions of the Legislature of Ohio in favor of the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of the Sault Ste. Marie; which he moved to refer to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. SMITH. There is a bill on the table reported from the Committee on Public Lands, proposing to appropriate, or rather to cede half a million acres of land to the State of Michigan for the purpose of constructing this canal. When that bill comes up for consideration, I contemplate moving an amendment for a money appropriation for the purpose of having the work constructed by the Government. I suggest to my honorable friend, as we have now the subject before us, that these resolutions be laid upon the table and ordered to be printed; however, if he wishes them to go to the Committee on Roads and Canals, I have no objection.

Mr. CHASE. I think the proper course will be to receive the resolutions, lay them upon the table, and order them to be printed.

Mr. WADE assented, and they were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill to establish a navy-yard and depot near the city of New Orleans, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FISH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of Daniel S. Anderson, reported a bill for the relief of the captors of the frigate Philadelphia; which was read and passed to the second reading.

He also, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution to provide for straightening the eastern boundary line of the naval hospital lands at New York; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Frederick Vincent, administrator of La Caze and Mallét, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole, and,

On motion by Mr. U., its further consideration was postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. MORTON, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill granting the right of way to "the Pensacola and Navy-Yard Plank Road Company" through the public lands; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GWIN, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to authorize the payment by the Surveyor General of California for the surveys which may be executed of any claims which have been or may be presented to the Board of Land Commissioners for adjudication under the act of Congress approved 3d March, 1851, "to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

GEOLOGICAL EXPLORATION OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. GWIN submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to communicate to the Senate any report made to the Treasury Department by any person or persons employed by him in the geological exploration of California.

INTERCOURSE WITH JAPAN.

Mr. GWIN submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to furnish to the Senate, if not in his opinion inconsistent with the interests of the Government, copies of all communications relative to the Empire of Japan that may be on file in either of the Executive Departments; particularly of the instructions under which Commodore Biddle visited Japan in 1846; his official report of that visit; the communication made by him to the local authorities in Jeddo Bay, and a copy of a translation of the communication made to him on that occasion, together with so much of a communication to the State Department from Alexander H. Everett, then Commissioner to China, as relates to that Japanese document; also, copies of any other communication received either directly or indirectly from the Japanese authorities; and such other information that will serve to illustrate the existing relations between the United States and Japan.

COMPENDIUM OF THE CENSUSES.

The resolution concerning the publication of a compendium of the several censuses of the United States was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole; and, on motion by Mr. SEWARD, the further consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

ADDITIONAL COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be authorized to employ a clerk during the remainder of the present session, at the usual rate of compensation.

Mr. SHIELDS. If there is no objection, I would like to have that resolution considered at this time. I have abstained from making this request of the Senate as long as I could; but there are two committees of which I have the honor to be chairman—the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee for the District of Columbia—and I find that we have got into some matter which requires an immense amount of copying, and I find it impossible for me to perform that duty and at the same time attend to other duties imposed upon me. We merely wish to employ a clerk so long as the present pressure lasts. I regret to make this application, for I would rather perform these duties myself, if I could, but it is impossible for me to do so; and, in justice to myself and the other duties I have to perform, it is necessary that the committee should have this assistance.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTRACTS WITH MAIL STEAM-SHIPS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, which was submitted by Mr. CLEMENS on the 7th of February last:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy and Postmaster General be requested to furnish Congress with copies of all contracts originally made and at present existing for the transportation of the mails between New York and California by steam-ships on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and all information they possess in regard thereto; what amount has been paid, and to whom; what amount is now paid, and to whom, for the transit of the mails across the Isthmus of Panama, in connection with said steam-ship service; the gross amount of money that has been paid under each service; when such contracts commenced; in what sums and at what periods of time paid, and to whom each payment has been made; whether at such periods as expressed under the terms of said contracts or otherwise; the amount of service rendered, and by what vessels; how often they arrive and depart; what time has been and is now occupied in the carriage of the mails between said ports; whether all the vessels stipulated under said contracts to be built have been so built, or what portion of them; whether, if two or three of the five ships contracted to be built under said contracts were not so built, but other vessels engaged in independent lines united with the vessels of the Government contractors, thus forming one line; each of the parties, however, owning their own vessels, and in that manner answering the terms of the contracts to build said five ships? Whether other facilities exist for performing the same or a similar service, and if other propositions have been made, and upon what terms, to perform said service, and within what periods of time?

Mr. CLEMENS moved to amend by the adoption of the following:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested to communicate also the amount received from postages by said line of steamers.

The amendment was agreed to, and the resolutions as amended were adopted.

PASSENGERS IN MERCHANT VESSELS.

The engrossed bill entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels,' approved February 22, 1847; and also to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the ventilation of passenger vessels,'" approved March 17, 1848, was read a third time and passed.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Iowa in aid of the construction of certain railroads in that State.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, resumed and concluded the speech which he commenced yesterday, in favor of the bill.

[A report of the speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD obtained the floor to reply, and, on his motion, The Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, April 5, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of the Interior, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 22d ultimo, calling for information in relation to an amount due the St. Regis Indians, and upon the expediency of an appropriation to pay the sum so due, if any; which shows that the sum of $4,000 is owing them by virtue of the treaty made with the New York Indians by Ransom H. Gillett, commissioner. The report was read, and ordered to be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in relation to the improvement of the Sault Ste. Marie; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a petition of citizens of Iowa and Lafayette counties, Wisconsin, praying the establishment of a mail route from Mineral Point to Shellsburg; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. FISH presented the petition of Edwin Lord and Francis Bacon, praying to be released from judgments obtained in favor of the United States on bonds given for duties on goods imported prior to 1839; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, the petition of the heirs-at-law of William Beaumont, praying to be allowed depreciation on commutation certificates, issued to said Beaumont for revolutionary services; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. DAVIS presented a resolution of the Legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of an appropriation for the preservation of the harbor of Cape Cod; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, presented a memorial of one hundred and thirty ladies of Memphis, Tennessee, praying a grant to the corporate authorities of Memphis of the United States arsenal and grounds at that place, to be used as an asylum for destitute widows and orphans; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WELLER presented a resolution of the Legislature of California, in favor of an appropriation for the purpose of turning San Diego river into False bay; which was ordered to be laid on the table, and printed.

Mr. MALLORY presented a memorial of Walker Anderson, late a member of the Legislature of Florida, and now chief justice of that State, in relation to the election of the Hon. S. R. Mallory as a Senator from that State; which was referred to the select committee appointed on the subject.

Also, a petition of citizens of Florida, praying that other lands may be granted in lieu of sixteenth sections covered by Spanish grants, or such as may be valueless; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DOUGLAS presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of Upper Alton, Illinois, praying that provision may be made by law for the establishment of a territorial government in Nebraska; which were referred to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, a resolution of the Legislative Council of the Territory of New Mexico, in favor of the reservation of timber and salt lakes, springs, or mines, for the common use of the people; which was referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS. I am requested to present to the Senate the petition of Robert G. Shaw and a large number of other persons, who are ship-owners in the city of Boston. They adopt as their own sentiments a memorial which I hold in my hand, in print, which was signed by ship-owners in New York. They state substantially that they deem it to be very erroneous policy in the United States to pursue any further the granting of special rights and privileges to lines of mail steamers. They consider that these steamers are substantially steamers belonging to the Government—Government having a right in them, and having contributed largely to the support of these lines. They represent, further, that by that operation the Government, as a carrier of freight and passengers, is brought into direct competition with individual enterprise, and under circumstances which they represent to be very discouraging to individuals, and fatal in regard to any attempts made by them to contend against it. They go on to say that so far as regards these lines, they ask for nothing inconsistent with the duty of the Government, but hope the Government will bring the policy to an end as soon as may be, and disconnect herself from any further grants for mail steamers. I move that the memorial and the accompanying documents be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORTON presented a petition of citizens of Franklin county and its vicinity, Florida, praying that other lands may be granted in lieu of sixteenth sections covered by Spanish grants, or such as may be valueless; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PRATT submitted additional documents in relation to the claim of Lucie A. Garner; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FELCH presented documents in relation to the claim of Sylvanus Culver, heir of Samuel Pearson, to a patent for land for which a warrant was issued to said Pearson, and lost or mislaid, but never patented; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which was referred the memorial of the heirs of Benjamin Mooers, late a lieutenant in Colonel Hazen's regiment of the revolutionary army, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of the heirs of Benjamin Ellis, praying payment for money loaned during the Revolution; and the memorial of Caleb Dustin, praying compensation for depreciation of continental money, submitted adverse reports thereon.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of Henry M. Rice, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

A motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, that the above petition be printed, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. DOWNS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred a bill for the relief of James Jones, reported it without amendment; and on his motion the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to its consideration. No amendment being offered, it was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

PENSION FOR DAVID LINN.

Mr. BRADBURY submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting arrears of pension to David Linn, late a soldier in Captain Hawkins's company of the fourth regiment of United States infantry.

NEW MAIL ROUTE.

Mr. SEBASTIAN submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads inquire into the expediency of establishing a mail route from Des Arc, on White river, to Searcy, in White county, in the State of Arkansas.

LIGHT-HOUSES ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. WELLER submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate:

1st. Whether any contracts have been made under the appropriation made at the last Congress, for the construction of light-houses on the Pacific coast.

2d. If contracts have been made, to transmit copies thereof to the Senate.

3d. What progress (if any) has been made in the construction of said light houses.

JUDICIAL SALARY IN VERMONT.

Mr. UPHAM submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the salary of the United States district judge for the district of Vermont.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. NORRIS submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That Friday next, and every succeeding Friday thereafter, shall be devoted to the consideration of such private bills on the Calendar as shall not give rise to debate; and whenever debate shall arise upon a bill, or any Senator shall express a desire to debate the same, it shall go over to the following Friday.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. BADGER gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to amend and to extend the provisions of an act, approved July 29, 1846, and entitled "An act in relation to the payment of claims."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the bill from the Senate for the relief of Theodore Offutt; and also that it had passed several private bills, which were transmitted to the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOWNS. A very important bill was reported some time since by the Committee on the Judiciary, which can be taken up and disposed of in a very short time. I have not called it up sooner, because it was desirable to have the report printed. It is now printed, and is on Senator's tables. The bill to which I refer is one to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to announce the apportionment of Representatives among the different States, according to the census of 1850. Some time ago a message was sent to us by the President of the United States, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, stating the reasons why, owing to some defects in the returns of the population of California, the apportionment could not be announced without some legislation by Congress. The Committee on the Judiciary have reported a bill, directing the manner in which the apportionment shall be made: and it is necessary that it, or some other bill, should be passed, in order that the apportionment may be made. I hope the Senate will consent to consider it now. I move to postpone all prior orders, for the purpose of taking it up.

Mr. GWIN. I am very deeply interested in that bill, and I am anxious to have it considered at an early day; but we have been discussing for a week the bill to provide for the establishment of a navy-yard in California, and I am very sure that we can come to a conclusion upon it to-day. I hope that, if the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL,] who is entitled to the floor on another subject, will give way, we shall take up that bill and dispose of it. After it shall have been disposed of, the bill named by the Senator from Louisiana can come up. I do not think there will be much discussion upon either bill; at least, I hope there will not be. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will give way, and allow me to get up the navy-yard bill.

Mr. DOWNS. I certainly do not desire to interfere with the bill in which the Senator from California feels so much interest, and if I did not think it would lead to a protracted debate, I should not object to taking it up now; but it is one of those measures on which we can never tell when debate will cease. It has already been debated for several days. It is really important that the measure which I propose to take up should be speedily disposed of. I do not think it will consume much time, and therefore, unless I can have some assurance that the Senator's bill will not be debated, I must insist on my motion.

Mr. BELL. This day was assigned for the consideration of the resolutions introduced by the honorable gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. CLARKE,] who is not here at present. It is true that I have the floor for this day on that subject, but it is very indifferent to me on what day I shall address the Senate. I wish to state, however, that I understand that on the day after to-morrow the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. MASON] will be under the necessity of leaving the city for a few days, and that it would promote his personal convenience very much if he could be permitted to occupy to-morrow on those resolutions. After he shall have concluded, I will ask the Senate to set apart any day they may think proper, on which I can address them on the same subject. For the purpose of testing the sense of the Senate, I move that the special order be taken up, and then I shall move that it be postponed.

The PRESIDENT. That motion cannot be received until that of the Senator from Louisiana is disposed of.

Mr. BELL. I hope, then, that the Senator from Louisiana will withdraw his motion.

Mr. DOWNS. I withdraw it.

NON-INTERVENTION.

On the motion of Mr. BELL, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolutions some time since submitted by Mr. CLARKE on the subject of non-intervention.

Mr. B. I now move that the further consideration of the resolutions be postponed until to-morrow, conceding to the honorable Senator from Virginia the right to the floor upon them.

Mr. MASON. As the Senator from Tennessee has been kind enough to grant his approbation, I shall ask the Senate to hear me to-morrow upon these resolutions.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATION.

Mr. DOWNS. I now renew the motion to take up the bill supplementary to an act providing for the taking of the seventh and subsequent censuses of the United States, and to fix the number of members of the House of Representatives, and provide for their future apportionment among the several States, approved 23d May, 1850.

Mr. BRADBURY. I had supposed that it was the purpose of the Senate to conclude the business they were upon the other day. I refer to the bill advocated by the Senator from California for the establishment of a navy-yard in his State. The bill which the honorable Senator from Louisiana proposes to call up, is one that must necessarily give rise to debate. The bill which has been reported by the majority of the committee will deprive California of one of her Representatives—a proposition which I apprehend will not be readily assented to. It seems to me that we had better conclude our action upon the other bill to which I have referred before taking up this. The Committee on the Judiciary were equally divided on this subject. I have had the honor of presenting a minority statement, but as I did not expect that this bill would be called up to-day, I am not prepared to go on.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to say that I think there is no bill on the Senate calendar which ought to be taken up and disposed of sooner than the bill referred to by the Senator from Louisiana. In consequence of untoward circumstances connected with the taking of the census in the State of California, the Secretary of the Interior is unable to do what he is required to do by the act passed by the last Congress—announce the apportionment of Representatives among the States. It is highly important that that apportionment should be made; that it should be known; and I would suggest to the Senator from Maine that the very fact which he mentions, that it is likely the bill will give rise to debate, shows the extreme importance of taking it up at once. I hope we shall take it up and dispose of it.

Mr. DAVIS. I most heartily join in that request. This is a question which really ought to be settled. It is quite time that it should be settled, and I hope it will now be taken up and disposed of.

The motion to take up the bill was agreed to, and it was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to proceed forthwith to apportion Representatives among the several States in accordance with the provisions contained in the 25th section of the act of 23d May, 1850, according to the returns of population which have been completed and received at the census office, including the population of the counties of San Francisco, Santa Clara, and Contra Costa, in the State of California, according to the returns thereof made by the census agent to the Secretary of State of that State, amounting to 25,224. It further provides, that if, at any future decennial enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States, the census of any district or subdivision shall be improperly taken, or if the returns of any district or subdivision shall be accidentally lost or destroyed, the Secretary of the Interior shall have power to order a new enumeration of such district or subdivision.

Mr. BRADBURY. I move to amend the bill, by adding the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the State of California shall be entitled to the same number of Representatives in Congress that said State now has; and that for this purpose the act of May 23d, 1850, providing for the apportionment of Representatives among the several States, be so amended that the whole number shall be two hundred and thirty-four instead of two hundred and twenty-three, until an apportionment under a new census.

Mr. DOWNS. This amendment brings up a question which was discussed in the committee, on which they differed in opinion. I hope it will not be adopted. I think the ground taken in the report of the majority of the committee cannot be departed from with propriety. It is alleged in the minority report, that an additional member more than she is entitled to, according to the returns, ought to be allowed to California, because the returns were imperfectly taken. But the ground on which the committee proceeded is, that in a matter so important as that of representation, nothing but the actual returns can, with propriety, be relied upon. We cannot ground our action upon mere estimates of population. The Constitution of the United States does not contemplate any such thing. It never has been done, except in a case where a State is first admitted into the Union, where there is no apportionment, and where, as a matter of necessity, the population must be computed, and representation allowed. But in no instance in the history of the Government has representation been fixed after a census was taken, by estimates, or on any other calculation than the actual enumeration of population as reported by the census takers. It would be unsafe to adopt any other rule.

It is said that the returns of California are very defective; that some of them have been lost. The difficulty in regard to those which are alleged to have been lost, or destroyed by fire, is obviated, not only with sufficient accuracy to satisfy the Senate, but in an official form, and such as is contemplated by the law itself; for there is a provision in the bill, directing the census to be taken, that, in addition to the returns which were made to the Secretary of the Interior, a copy of them should also be made to the Secretary of State of the State or Territory. Some twelve months ago, at the call of the Legislature of California, such a return was made. The duplicate returns, which had been sent to the Secretary of State for the State, were laid before the Legislature of California, and printed in their Legislative proceedings. A printed copy of those returns was laid before the committee. Thus the returns of those counties which were lost are known with sufficient accuracy. The committee have taken them, and allow the State the full returns as they were taken. This is going as far as the committee thought they could go with propriety. I shall not now go into the details; but as the report shows, the committee took the population as reported, and found that it would give to California but one Representative, and a very small fraction of some twenty-four thousand would remain. Now, can we ground our actions here upon estimates at all? Or, if we can go into estimates, is there sufficient data before us, by which we can say that the State of California is entitled to another Representative, although, according to the returns, she appears to have a much smaller fraction than other States? I think not. If we allow estimates of the population of California, where shall we stop?

It may be that there are errors in the returns of California. There may also be errors as to other States. If you once admit the principle, you cannot stop there; but you must go into a calculation, whenever any member gets up and alleges that the same error has been committed in the returns of his State. Whenever that is alleged, if you admit the principle, you will have to go into estimates of the population of that State. Hence the committee thought that this claim ought not to be allowed; that it would be unsafe to follow that principle.

There is another objection to these proceedings. It was settled in the census act of 1850, that a permanent number of Representatives for this census, and future censuses, should be fixed upon, and that it should remain fixed. There is a provision in that bill, that when, by the admission of new States, the number should be increased over the two hundred and thirty-three members allowed, that, at the next apportionment, the number should be reduced to that. There was a reason for this; and the committee thought that the policy of the bill ought not to be departed from. There have always been difficulties, heretofore, in fixing the apportionment, on account of fractions. That has been the case heretofore; because, until the census was ascertained, there was no number of Representatives fixed. Hence, there was difficulty about it, because it was impossible that the fraction should operate equally in regard to the different States. There has always heretofore been difficulty in settling that matter.

But, by fixing the number of Representatives, in the first place, before the population is ascertained, no State can complain, because the calculation operates equally upon all; and although, according to the apportionment, some States may suffer, by not receiving an additional member from a very large fraction, yet it will no doubt happen that, when another apportionment is made, those States which now lose on account of fractions, will have it made up.

If we are to change the number of Representatives whenever it suits the convenience of any particular State, you destroy the convenience of the bill of 1850, which fixed the number of Representatives permanently; and hereafter, whenever an apportionment is made, the number will be unsettled, and we shall have the same difficulty in settling it that we have had in all the apportionments heretofore.

There is another reason why this amendment ought not to be adopted. The Committee on the Judiciary took the returns from all the counties of California from which returns had been received at Washington; to those we added the returns presented to the Legislature of California for the remaining three counties. The Legislative returns give the county of San Francisco a population of 21,000; Contra Costa, 722; Santa Clara, 3,502, making, in all, 25,224. Add to this the population of the other counties, 92,597, and it makes the total population of the State 117,821. Apply to this the ratio, according to the latest and fullest returns from California, 93,420; and it gives her one member, and a fraction of 24,401. The addition of the population of these last counties would make a little difference, and lessen her fraction. The fraction of South Carolina is 47,478, and that of Louisiana is 46,196. Here we see, that, while in California there is a fraction of 24,000, in Louisiana, the next State, which, according to the returns, is not entitled to an additional member for her fraction, is 46,000, coming within a little over 1,000 of the number which gives South Carolina a member.

If we allow this claim of California, we do a strange act. We give to California an additional member, on a fraction of 24,000, while, at the same time, we refuse to Louisiana a member, upon a well-ascertained and undisputed fraction of 46,000 and odd. Now, I ask, are the Senate of the United States prepared to do this?

Mr. President, you will recollect, and we all recollect, that we have fixed the representation of California once before by computation. And I am inclined to think now that these returns show that a great mistake was then committed. I hope we shall not again commit such a mistake. It is evident that a very great mistake has always been made in regard to the population of California. For instance, take the case of the city of San Francisco. In our debates here, we spoke of it as a large city, of thirty, forty, or fifty thousand inhabitants. According to the returns, as they were sent us—and there have been no corrections in that respect made since—the population of that city is not more than 21,000. Look at the report of the Committee of the Legislature of California, which we had before us. It is true that they state that the population is undoubtedly larger; but they give us no facts to show that it is larger. So, in the report of the minority of the committee here, they say that the population is no doubt larger; but they give us no facts. Can they suppose that, in a matter of so much delicacy as that of representation, we are to go on mere conjecture?

Again, these returns were made to the Legislature of California in April last—a year ago. It was suggested in the Legislature then, that there were mistakes. The legislative committee thought there were mistakes in the returns; they thought the population ought to have been stated as larger than it was stated. We know, from the reports of the Secretary of the Interior, and the census agent, that the most earnest exertions were made during the last twelve months to complete, as far as possible, these returns. Yet, after the lapse of a year, we have no material change, showing, or tending to show, that the population of California is as much as it has been represented. I ask, how can it be as large as it is said to be, when the facts which you now have before you were, substantially, before the Legislature of California, and presented to the public by them as being erroneous and defective, and yet no errors can be found in them? There have been a few slight corrections; but there has been no material alteration, change, or modification, from that time to this. Yet now, after the lapse of nearly two years, since the census was taken, we are called upon to say, that California has a population sufficient to entitle her to two members. I cannot concur in it. I think it would be dangerous to proceed on any such principle.

Nobody can complain of me of having anything but the best disposition to do full justice to California. I have done so heretofore. There are no members of the Senate whom I would go further to accommodate and gratify, in a matter of opinion, than the distinguished gentlemen who represent California on this floor. But it does seem to me, as it did to the chairman of the committee, [MR. BUTLER,] whose absence now I very much regret, that it would be departing from all rule, and be doing great injustice to the other States, to admit, on a mere conjectural computation, an additional member for California. At any rate, if the Senate shall, contrary to my impression, allow California an additional member, then I certainly shall insist that Louisiana shall have an additional member. For it would be a hard measure of justice, indeed, to deny to my State a member, on a very large fraction, equal, I believe, to about one half of the ratio for a whole member, and yet give to California a member on about half the fraction which Louisiana has. If the proposition of the minority of the committee should be adopted, I shall certainly very earnestly insist that Louisiana be allowed an additional member; because, if you increase the number and depart from the rule—if you say that equity and justice require that California have an additional member, though it is contrary to my opinion, be it so; but, certainly, you cannot say, at the same time, that Louisiana shall not have an additional member on a fraction nearly twice as large as that of California.

Mr. BRADBURY. The Senate will perceive at once that this is a very important question. It is no less than this: Shall a State be deprived of her just representation on account of the imperfection, or want of an accurate census of her population? I think it can hardly be questioned that California possessed the requisite population to entitle her to her present representation in the House of Representatives; but it turns out that the census returns are so defective as to leave her a fraction above the ratio for one Representative—too small for a second Representative. The returns that have been received at the census bureau, with some additions which have been admitted by the committee, give California a population of 117,318; and it is upon the basis of this enumeration that the honorable Senator from Louisiana [MR. DOWNS] feels bound to deprive that State of its present representation, and cut it down to a single Representative. My opinion is, that before we deprive a State of her existing representation, we should inquire whether the census returns are accurate, or approximate to accuracy. I do not contend, that for slight inaccuracies, we should set aside the census returns; but when they are so grossly erroneous as to furnish no approximation to the true number of the population of a State entitled to be enumerated, it would be unwise and unsafe to establish the precedent that we would adhere to them, and apportion the representation upon them. It may happen hereafter that this may become a very important question—much more so even than in this case. It will be remembered that it is the duty of the Federal Government, and not of the State authorities, to see that the census is taken. This duty does not devolve upon the State governments; they have no control over it. If, then, the officers appointed by the Federal Government neglect their duty and make no accurate returns of any enumeration of the people of a State, is it safe, is it just, that we will adhere to whatever may be received in the form of a return, though known to be false, and acknowledged to be imperfect on its face, and make such false and imperfect returns the basis of representation? I think not. On this principle a State might be deprived of its entire representation in the other House, with the exception of a single Representative, if no returns were made. The largest State might be reduced to a single Representative, and that for no fault of hers, but from the neglect of the agents of the Federal Government. This is, indeed, a fearful penalty to fall upon a party guilty of no fault, and a most dangerous principle for us to sanction.

The first inquiry in this case, then, is, whether the census returns of the population of California that have been made are accurate, or approximate to accuracy? If they do, I would adhere to them, and take them for the basis of apportionment. But this is not the case. So far from it, the pretended returns are impeached by the very officer who had charge of the census in that State. I propose for a moment to call the attention of the Senate to some of the facts that show these returns are too grossly inaccurate to be depended upon in any degree whatever; and I apprehend that when that fact is established the State will not be deprived of its just representation upon such an erroneous basis. If it is, we know not whose turn it will be next, nor what State will be the next sufferer, if a false principle is adopted now, to become a precedent for the future.

In April, 1851, it became important for the Legislature of California to ascertain her population, for the purpose of apportioning the State for Representatives and Senators in the State Legislature. Application was made to the census agent of California for the census, to enable the Legislature to make that apportionment. The State had a right to expect that, under the authority of the Federal Government, the accurate census of her population would be taken that would furnish the information desired. The census agent addressed, to the committee of the Legislature appointed for that purpose, a communication, in answer to inquiries made to him, in which he stated, in substance, that the returns were not complete, and were so defective that reliance could not be placed upon them. He says, after, what had been done in the way of obtaining this census of about 117,000:

"The result of this enumeration, when completed, will, with all reasonable probability, fall short of the entire population of the State from thirty-three to fifty per cent. Such a result must naturally occur to the mind of every person conversant with the circumstances surrounding those engaged in the mines—probably the most numerous of our population—residing, as many of them do, in unknown and unfrequented localities, whilst others are constantly changing their places of abode; thus absolutely precluding the possibility of their being found at all by the census man."

Thus it will be seen that the returns which we have, are impeached by the very census agent who had charge of the business in the State. But the Committee on the Judiciary did not stop here. They received information from the Representatives and Senators from that State, which is believed to be entitled to respect. The Representatives both stated facts within their knowledge, showing the gross inaccuracy of the returns, and the manifest injustice that would be done by adopting them as the basis of an apportionment; and one of them reduced to writing some facts which it may be important for the Senate to consider. The honorable Mr. McCorkle, one of the Representatives, concurs with the census agent in regard to the imperfection of these returns. To show how grossly imperfect they are, I will read to the Senate one or two extracts from his communication:

"As an illustration of the gross inaccuracy of the census returns from California, I will give you my estimates of a few counties in the northern part of the State—counties with which I am perfectly familiar, and in which I have resided for the last two years and a half:

"The county of Shasta is returned by the commissioner as having a population of three hundred and seventy-eight. There are in this county four settlements of miners, each of which contains a larger population than the commissioner has returned for the whole county.

"The population of Shasta county I estimate at six thousand on the first day of June, 1850."

Here we have the estimate of a gentleman who was familiar with the people of the county, that there were at least six thousand inhabitants at the time of the census, and yet three hundred and seventy-eight only are returned. Can it be contended that a State is to be bound by such a mis-called enumeration? Again he says:

"Trinity county, which, since June, 1850, has been divided, and the county of Klamath set off and organized, contained, at that date, a population of not less than eight thousand, and is returned by the commissioner at one thousand six hundred and thirty-five.

"The population of Butte county is reported incomplete at three thousand five hundred and seventy-four. My residence, during the year 1849 and the spring of 1850, was in that county. All the Feather river miners are in that county, and I cannot set her population down at less than ten thousand.

"The enumeration of Yuba, as reported, is so far short of the real number of her population, that I am forced to think there must have been some clerical mistake in transferring the figures.

"The county of Yuba in June, 1850, embraced all of the territory now known by the name of Nevada, and in it are the cities of Marysville, Nevada, and Downsville—each of which has a larger population than is returned for the whole county. In addition to these cities, we find in Yuba county, at that time, the towns of Rough and Ready, Year's Valley, Parker's Bar, Rose's Bar, and others—each of which had a population of not less than five hundred, and polled, in September, 1850, the largest vote of any county in the State. I estimate the population of Yuba, in June, 1850, at 30,000, and in the return of the commissioner it is set down at 9,674.

"The county of Sutter, in June, 1850, embracing what is now known as the mining county of Placer, is returned as having a population of 3,444. This county I represented in the last Legislature, and estimate its population at not less than 7,500 in June, 1850."

Other details are given by the same gentleman. The other Representative from California [Mr. Marshall] concurred in the opinion as to the great injustice that had been done, and gross inaccuracies in the returns for portions of the State in regard to which he had personal knowledge. We have, then, this remarkable fact, that here are the Representatives from the State, who speak of localities with which they are perfectly familiar, who tell you that there are towns in a county that contained, in June, 1850, a larger population entitled to be enumerated, than the whole county is returned as having contained; and yet we are asked to adhere to these returns, and are told by the honorable Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Downs] that it would be unsafe to depart from them. At the time that the Legislature of California sought to ascertain the population of the State, and found that the census returns furnished, no adequate data to approximate to it, a committee of the Legislature was appointed to ascertain the population as a basis for the apportionment of the members of her Legislature. This committee having sought, as they say, every means of information which it was in their power to command, came to the conclusion that the State then contained a population of 300,000. This was in April, 1851. This would, of course, include the addition that had been received between June, 1850, and April, 1851—a period of ten months; but that addition could not have exceeded the number of 100,000. I must confess that the evidence satisfied my mind that California was fully entitled to two Representatives by her Federal population; and I feel unwilling to deprive the State of a Representative without any substantial evidence that should reduce her representation. I repeat, that in cases where the returns approximate to accuracy, we ought not to depart from them; but when they are shown to be so grossly incorrect as to afford no accurate basis for an apportionment, and no approximation to the actual population, it would be unjust to the State to be governed by them.

We have a precedent in the case of Alabama. The census returns of that State at a former census were not made in due season, and that State was permitted to retain the representation which it had under the prior census until a new census was completed. Upon the same principle applied to California, it has seemed to me that we ought not to deprive that State of the existing representation until a new and accurate census should show that we are right. If I had supposed that there could be the least doubt as to what the result of a new census would be, I should have recommended that the present representation remain until a new census could be taken, and to provide for the taking of such new census. But inasmuch as I had no manner of doubt on that point, I prepared the amendment, which I have proposed, to the effect that California shall retain her present representation under the present census. In order that no injustice may be done to South Carolina, which has the lowest fraction entitled to Representatives, if California is excluded, I have proposed that the whole number of Representatives shall be changed from two hundred and thirty-three to two hundred and thirty-four; so that California and South Carolina can neither have any cause for complaint. If California were permitted to retain her present number of Representatives without this alteration, South Carolina would be excluded; but as that State urges that, upon the records, she is entitled to a Representative on account of the fraction which she has, I have preferred not to deprive her of it.

In regard to the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Louisiana, that if California is permitted to have her existing number of Representatives, he shall propose an amendment giving an additional Representative to Louisiana, it will be time enough to consider that question when it comes up. We have now only to deal with California; and the question is simply whether we shall deprive her of the present number of Representatives, because no census has been taken approximating to accuracy.

Mr. GWIN. I did not anticipate that this question would come up to-day, and am therefore unable, at this time, to present to the Senate the facts upon which I base my opinions, in such an order as I would be glad to do. I must, however, express my astonishment that the honorable Senator from Louisiana should insist upon the returns, which have been made to the Department of the Interior, as being conclusive with regard to the actual population of California. The law authorizing the taking of the census, gave to the Secretary of the Interior power, when the census would be completed, to make the apportionment. He has no power, under that law, to make the apportionment until the census is completed. He comes now before Congress, and acknowledges it never has been completed in one of the States of this Confederacy. He not only acknowledges it, but he sends to the Senate the evidence, showing conclusively that in that State the census had not been completed in compliance with the law. The Senator from Louisiana, assuming that it has been completed, says, we propose to depart from the law, in asking that justice shall be meted out to California, by giving her two members instead of one as the bill proposes. He says, there is no precedent for what it is proposed to do in the amendment; that is, to give an additional member to a State, owing to a defective enumeration. Was there ever an instance before in which the census was not completed before the apportionment, except in the case of Alabama, which has been referred to? and did not Congress, in that case, provide by law that no injustice should be done to the State, on account of the failure of the census agent, from death or other cause, to complete the enumeration before the apportionment was made? He says he is opposed to the estimate which is presented by the minority of the Judiciary Committee in their report; yet he comes forward and gives an estimate on which he bases his statement of the population of California.

Mr. DOWNS. In the report of the committee, there is no estimate. I take the actual returns made by the census agent to the Legislature of California.

Mr. GWIN. The census agent says, in his letter addressed to the Secretary of State of California, that the returns, in some instances, were given in "round numbers;" that is, the figures were predicated upon the returns made by the deputies, which are only an approximation to the truth. He does not pretend that they are accurate; yet, the Senator assumes that they are strictly correct, and basis his argument upon that assumption.

Mr. DOWNS. In some cases then, you have no returns at all.

Mr. GWIN. And whose fault is it, that we have not? Is California to blame that we have not had the returns? The people of California threw no obstacle in the way. They contributed all that was in their power, to aid the officers engaged in taking the census. Are we to suffer in this respect, because the marshals failed to do their duty? Suppose the marshal of the State of New York had failed to take the census of that State: would the State, which is entitled to thirty-four members, be deprived, by the neglect of this officer, of her full representation, and be restricted to only one member? It is notorious that the census has not been correctly and completely taken in California. No man pretends to say that it has. The agent himself says he has not taken it correctly in any counties, and in some not at all. And where is the remedy? Are you to deprive a State of this Confederacy of her proper representation in the House of Representatives, because the officers of the Government have failed to do their duty? This is the question presented to the Senate for its decision. There is no man who will look at the facts as they are presented in the minority report, and say that we are not entitled to two members in the House of Representatives. It must be admitted that the statement of the member of the House from California, [Mr. McCORKLE] is entitled to infinitely more consideration than the returns of the census agent. The member from whose statement the honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. BRADBURY] has quoted, was a member of the joint committee of apportionment in the Legislature of California. The returns of the census agent were laid before the Legislature, and were known to be unreliable by every member of that body, and the joint committee proceeded to obtain information from all reliable sources, to ascertain, as nearly as they could, what was the population of the State. And what was the conclusion to which the joint committee came? That the population of the State exceeded 300,000. Why did they come to that conclusion? Was there any motive to induce that committee to overestimate the population? It was necessary there should be an equality of representation in the new apportionment that the Legislature was making; and to overestimate the population, would add to the burdens of taxation, by making the two bodies of the Legislature larger than the population justified. What motive could there be to increase the taxes by making the population of the State too large? There was no reason for such action. Besides that, all the emigration which started for California before the first of June, 1850, was to be enumerated as a part of the population of that State, according to the law authorizing the taking of the census. The second section of the supplementary census law says:

"And be it further enacted, That in enumerating persons residing in California, Oregon, Utah, and New Mexico, the several assistant marshals or agents shall include those who may have removed from their residence in any State or Territory of the United States, prior to the first day of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty, and settled subsequently to that date in either of the said countries."

This is the law. All the emigrants who left any State or Territory of the Union for California before the first of June, 1850, were to be enumerated. Now, how was California admitted into the Union with her two representatives? It was first on the requirements of her constitution, based upon an estimate of her population, and a memorial presented to Congress by the Senators and Representatives who were elected on the organization of the State. That apportionment was made under the apportionment of 1840, which gave a member for every seventy thousand inhabitants. The memorial of the Senators and Representatives of California went elaborately into the question to show that we were then entitled to two representatives, because in 1849 we had a population sufficient to entitle us to that number under the apportionment of 1840. We had estimates and figures, beyond all dispute, that our population exceeded one hundred and seven thousand, giving us a fraction which entitled us to the two members. In that memorial is set forth at large the original population, and the emigration by land and water. This was based upon the emigration of 1849. I have a statement from the Quartermaster's Department, showing that in 1850 there were upwards of forty thousand emigrants passed one point—Fort Larimer—on the emigrating route to California. This is the official return as furnished by one of the Government officers, and kept with great accuracy. This, alone, added to the population of 1849, which was one hundred and seven thousand, would give us two members under the law of 1850, not to estimate the thousands that emigrated by other land routes and by sea.

Now, Mr. President, to show you how fallacious it is to say that justice can be done to California by referring to these census returns, I will exhibit some portions of the correspondence which has passed between this Government and their agents in relation to it. There has unquestionably been a great deal of fault somewhere, in taking the census in that State. It is either the fault of the law, or those who were bound to execute it. I will not pretend to say whose the fault was, but certainly it is at the door of Congress or the Executive. Here are abstracts of letters from the census agent:

January 30, 1851.—"In consequence of the failure of several of the deputies first appointed to accept, and their remote situation, the completion of the census would be delayed longer than was expected."

March 1.—"Mr. Johnson states that he has forwarded the returns of thirteen counties, and hopes to be able to send the remainder on the 15th instant."

March 14.—"Mr. Johnson forwards the returns of two additional counties, all that he has then received. Owing to the great cost of living, most of the deputies had been compelled to resort to other pursuits at intervals, to raise means to meet their current expenses. This had been a leading cause of delay; that is, they had to go to gold-digging to get money to pay expenses, and when they resumed their labors, thousands of gold-diggers not enumerated, had gone to the enumerated districts."

April 29.—"Asks for an extension of the period within which the returns are to be made. He had received from the various deputies throughout the State, estimates, from which it appeared that, according to their enumeration, the population would be from one hundred and thirty-five to one hundred and forty thousand; falling short of the actual population, as was believed, fully sixty thousand. The chief difficulty in obtaining a full enumeration, has been this unsettled condition of the population during the winter. Upon consultation with many prominent citizens, he had determined to retake the census, at least to the extent of those not previously enumerated. An urgent necessity existed for more funds to complete the work."

May 14.—"Additional returns are forwarded, and the affidavit of Mr. Hall, deputy for San Francisco, is inclosed, which sets forth that a portion of the returns which he had been engaged in copying, were destroyed by fire. Mr. Hall hopes to be able to supply the loss from his private memoranda. The advice of the Department is desired in this case. The difficulties arising from the smallness of the compensation, allowed by law, is spoken of. Several accounts of deputies are forwarded."

June 13.—"Retaking the census has been commenced. Additional returns are forwarded."

September 13.—"This letter is in relation to the accounts of his deputies. No returns had yet been received from some districts."

October 14.—"Believes that he has done all that was possible to perform his duties as required by law, and recapitulates the difficulties he had encountered. Some of his deputies were still delinquent."

November 14.—"Partial returns of three counties are forwarded, and also certified statements in regard to the fire at San Francisco, previously mentioned."

December 13.—"Mr. Johnson states that he has forwarded the returns, except those lost by fire at San Francisco, in May, 1851—of the county and city of San Francisco, and part of Tuolumne county. That he has a copy of the returns for a part of Butte county, but declines transmitting the same to the Department on account of its not being executed in accordance with the law; but that he has instructed the assistant to make a copy in conformity with the law. He claims it has been no fault of his that these returns have not been forwarded; that he has fully done his duty in this matter; and concludes, 'if you should conceive, under the instructions of the Secretary, that I have not, there is but one course for you to pursue.'"

Here we have the statement of the census agent, that in the very midst of the business of taking the census, the agents would get out of money, and have to take to other pursuits, in order to provide themselves with the means of subsistence. It is well known that the great bulk of the population is in the mining districts, where great masses are continually roving from one set of diggings to another. It not unfrequently happened that these deputy marshals would get out of money, and would go to gold-digging, in order to pay their expenses, and it is ridiculous to say that justice can be done to the State by taking the population in that way. Here is the letter of the agent stating the fact; and yet when he comes forward and asks for an extension of the time, he is told by the Secretary of the Interior that the law will not permit it.

The Senator from Louisiana says, there has been nothing material done within the last year—

Mr. DOWNS. There has been no material change.

Mr. GWIN. I will bring to the notice of the Senate one fact which is very material. So convinced was the Secretary of the Interior that there had been neglect in taking the census of California, that he ordered the district attorney to bring a suit against the census agent on his bond. The inaccuracy of these returns was so flagrant and notorious, that the Secretary, under a sense of duty to the people of the whole United States, as well as California, ordered a suit to be brought against the agent.

Now, sir, has there, in the history of the United States, ever before been a suit ordered on the word of a census agent for neglecting to enumerate the population of a State? And what is the primary cause of all this inaccuracy? The difficulty has arisen from the fact that funds were not furnished to the census agent to enable him and his assistants to pay their expenses. I called on the census agent when in California, to ascertain why it was the census was not accurately taken and completed, and he complained most bitterly that he could not go on and take the census without money, which had not been furnished him by the Government—that he must have something with which to pay agents, or he could not have the census taken. He applied to the department to furnish him the necessary means, and received in answer that the department, in sending $5,000 for that purpose, had exceeded the powers conferred by the act of Congress. If, however, the department had sent $50,000 instead of $5,000, considering the price of labor and provisions, it would not have been more than was necessary, and the census would have been completed with some approach to accuracy. The census agent avers that $5,000 would not cover one-tenth part of the expense; that while engaged in the duty of taking the census, the deputies not unfrequently had to stop to dig gold, or to engage in other occupations, for want of the requisite funds to enable them to pursue the business; and one of them is now in this city, who has received but $200 for his labor, and has expended over $700 in taking the census of part of one county. That was his actual outlay. He has been paid $200. Here, then, is one officer who has expended $500 of his own money in taking the census of part of one county more than he has yet received from the Government, besides his labor and time, for which he, as yet, has received nothing.

The Senator says the population of California has always been overrated. It is not so easy to overrate it, because we know what the population was when we gained the country; and there are but few emigrating routes to that country, as I have shown on one of these emigrating routes, at a single post, the number of persons who passed in 1840, was upwards of forty thousand.

Mr. DOWNS. I would like to know how many have returned?

Mr. GWIN. Not one by that route.

Mr. DOWNS. It would be well to take into account those who have returned by any route.

Mr. GWIN. I have not spoken of those who went by water; when I do so I will also estimate those who have thus returned. I do not see what that question has to do with the census of 1850; for, up to that period, but few persons had returned, and since that year, five have gone to the country by sea, for every one that has returned.

Mr. DAVIS. According to my recollection of the act respecting the enumeration in California, those were to be enumerated who avowed their purpose to settle in California. No others were to be enumerated.

Mr. GWIN. No, sir. The only question to be asked under the law was, were you here or did you start here before June, 1850? As to the population of San Francisco, nothing was known except by estimate, for the enumeration, so far as it was made, was burned up, and the agent only professed to give the returns in round numbers. The Legislature of California set all these returns aside as inaccurate and unreliable, and made an estimate of its own. That estimate would increase the number of members of the Legislature very largely, and consequently the State taxes. They had no motive in ascertaining the population, but to discharge their duty to the State in apportioning the representation according to the actual number of people in the State.

There is one county in which the number of inhabitants is returned by the marshal at 8,351. When the apportionment bill was under discussion in the Legislature of California, I was present; and one of the representatives from that county stated that its population was over 36,000.

Mr. DOWNS. Why has he not given the returns of the census?

Mr. GWIN. Because he said they were not returned correctly; and a new enumeration was ordered to be made. The Senator asks why the census of this county, as stated, was not given. Was it the duty of the people of California to take the census of the State? They did, however, in the discharge of a duty to themselves, have it taken, as nearly as possible, in order to ascertain the population accurately, for their own apportionment. It was the duty of the Government to make the enumeration, but it has failed to do it; and I say again, that if such a failure had occurred in the case of New York, with her thirty-four members, instead of California, with her two members, isolated and alone as that State is, there would not be a question, for a moment, with regard to the course to be pursued. This is a neglect of duty, for which the State of California should not be punished. It was a transaction in which the State had nothing to do, either in making the law or in executing it; for the law was made before the State was admitted into the Union, and with its execution, as a State, we had nothing to do.

We have furnished such estimates as it seems to me should satisfy the mind of every member of this body. We do not wish to contest this question with South Carolina, although we do know that if the census returns had been made correctly we would have a larger fraction than that State. The census agent says he knows the returns are not accurate, and that they fall short from thirty-three to fifty per cent. of the actual population. His return must be taken as a whole. If he acknowledges he has not enumerated more than two thirds of our population, you must take this as part of his return and give us the advantage of it. The Senator says if we give California a member, Louisiana is entitled to another, as that State has a larger fraction than ours by the returns. I do not object to giving Louisiana another member for her large fraction. As to the magic number of two hundred and thirty-three, the Senator says there was an object in fixing that as the number of Representatives, and it may be dangerous to disturb it. There is no precedent violated by adding another member to the House. This is the first time the number of its members has been fixed in advance of taking the census, and there is no danger in adding another member if thereby you avoid doing injustice to one of the States of the Confederacy. Look at California for the future. You propose to limit that State to one Representative for ten years to come. What will be her population at the end of that time? I have no doubt, when the next apportionment is made, her population will be greater than that of the Senator's own State of Louisiana. As to the magic number of two hundred and thirty-three, I have very little respect for it. I am not opposed to the Senator's having another member for his State, since she has so large a fraction; but I must oppose her proposition to reduce the representation of California, and to deprive her of one member because her census has not been taken accurately and correctly. To do so would be an act of gross injustice.

Mr. SEWARD. I would ask the Senator from California, whether there is any statement or documentary evidence of the estimate of the population adopted by the Legislature of that State? I wish to know what are the facts as acted on by the State?

Mr. GWIN. I have a statement in an official report made by the joint committee to the Legislature. I had it before the Committee on the Judiciary, where I left it. In that report it is shown that the two Houses of the Legislature instituted an examination of the subject, and satisfactorily ascertained that the population exceeded 300,000. This is the basis on which their apportionment was made.

Mr. SEWARD. I would like to know whether the Legislature of California apportioned the representation for the Legislature upon that basis?

Mr. GWIN. They did.

Mr. DOWNS. The State of California acted in that matter, as the Senator shows, on estimates, and not on facts. I have not the report of the California committee on apportionment before me; but it appears to me that they go on the assumption that the population would number 300,000. I have looked through the proceedings of the Legislature of that State with some care, to see if I could find a fact—not an estimate, but a fact, but I could not find a trace of one anywhere in regard to the number of the population.

Mr. GWIN. What motive could the joint committee of the two Houses of the Legislature have in making the population larger than it actually was? They were seeking the truth from every source of information within their power; and to make the population higher in number than it really was, was merely to add to the burdens of the people by an increase of taxation in the support of a larger government establishment than was necessary.

Mr. DOWNS. I do not suppose that they had any motives one way or the other. I suppose they took an estimate of some particular portion of the State, and then assumed that one portion of the State was like the other. But this will not do. We want to know the actual population, in order that we may know what representation they should have. And these estimates vary unreasonably. One man says that a county has a population of ten thousand, and another that the population is thirty thousand. If the Legislature of California could not get at the fact which the gentleman wishes to assume, after all the examination which they gave to it, they must have gone on mere conjecture. The Senator says that there are no regular returns from California, and that, therefore, we might deprive her of her representation altogether unless we take this estimate. If I am not mistaken, there are returns which have been recognized by the Secretary of the Interior, and which have been sent here. In addition to these returns there is no doubt that the returns made to the Secretary of the Interior are strictly official and regular, because they are taken under and by the act directing the mode in which the census should be taken. It cannot, therefore, be said that we have no reliable returns. They may be imperfect. No doubt the returns of every State are more or less imperfect; but their being imperfect does not show that there are no returns. The Senator from California, therefore, does not mend his case by stating that there are no returns; because that being the case, the State will come under the general provision of the Constitution, which provides that each State shall be entitled to one Representative.

But it is said by the Senator from California, as well as the Senator from Maine, that no such case of injustice was ever practiced, and they referred to the State of Alabama. Now, the case of Alabama was altogether a different one, and so far from being against the position which I assume, and which the committee have assumed, is, I think, in corroboration of it, for they did not allow Alabama another Representative, on the ground that the returns had not come in in time; but Congress only provided that the representation should stand as it was, and that she should have a reasonable time to ascertain the actual population. That population was so ascertained, and she was allowed a representation accordingly. Now, there is no such proposition made here. If there was, it is evident that it could not be carried out; because such is the fluctuating condition of the population of California, and such her condition now, that it would be impossible to ascertain what was the population of California in June, 1850. The Senator from California says that there are faults somewhere; that the Government has commenced a prosecution against the census agent for his neglect in the discharge of his duties, and yet, at the same time, that Senator alleges that that officer was not to blame. Sir, I cannot see why the Government should prosecute that individual, if he was not to blame.

Mr. GWIN. If the Senator will permit me, I will repeat what I said; that if the apportionment is to be based upon these census returns, it will be an outrage upon the people of California. That wrong has been inflicted on us, either in the passage of the law, or in its execution. I do not blame the census agent; for he says he could not take the census for the want of money. The Secretary of the Interior says he had no power to give him money. I suppose Congress must be to blame, and now let Congress right the wrong inflicted. The law evidently does not authorize the advance of such sums as were indispensably necessary to the correct taking of the census. The census agent in California could not get assistants, because he had no money to pay them, or even to defray their necessary expenses. The Secretary is of the opinion the agent should have taken the census without money. The agent avers that it was not possible for him to do so. I think it is an extraordinary case, such as has not happened before, and one of peculiar hardship, so far as California is concerned. There was a fault in the law, in not providing the means for its execution, or by the officers of this Government, who, having the power under the law to furnish the agent with means, failed to do so.

Mr. DOWNS. The two honorable Senators rely on the report of the census agent, that these returns are defective and erroneous, and also on the statement of Mr. McCorkle, a member of the other House, which goes to show that they are defective, and who gives returns of one particular county. I would ask the Senator to consider whether you can take these estimates as conclusive, and act upon them, when we have the statement of this census agent, made in April last, a year ago, and when he has had instructions, and the Government has been urging him to correct his erroneous returns, and yet he shows that no material correction has been made since that time. Is there not strong reason to believe that that census agent was mistaken in his conjectures, inasmuch as during twelve months he has not submitted to the Government any facts on this subject, although it was his duty to do so, to show that there was an error? So with regard to the statements of Mr. McCorkle. I have no doubt he thought they were inaccurate. He says one county was returned as having a population of ten thousand, which, according to his estimate, has a population of thirty thousand. Now, upon a question of so much importance, although I attach all proper weight to the estimates which have been made, it would be much more satisfactory if the actual population of one county had been enumerated and counted, and not estimated in the manner that it has been.

When we consider that this question of the population of California has been so long the subject of inquiry—when there have been so many conjectures, and so few facts—when the question of the admission of California was one that met with the most serious objections on account of the supposed errors in regard to her estimated population—I say the fact, that after a year these errors have not been corrected, raises a very strong presumption that they are not so great as they have been supposed to be.

The Senator from California tells us that forty thousand persons passed by a single point on their way to California in one season. There is no doubt of that. But we know—I know, for I have seen the lists of the passengers by the steamers—that they have been returning, too, in great numbers. You see everywhere persons who have been to California and have returned. They are here, even, in Congress; and we see them in this city, and in every village and every settlement of the country. If gentlemen will estimate every man who ever has gone to California, I suppose they may make up the number of three hundred thousand. It is evident there must be some great mistake in the estimates with reference to the population of California. It is not like that of any other portion of the country which has been settled in our time. In every other State there is a certain degree of permanency in the population; but many who go to California leave their families in the places from which they go, and expect to return to them again at a future day. A large portion of them—it is impossible to say how many—a large majority, more than a moiety or those who have gone to California, have gone, not with the view of making that country a permanent residence, but for purposes of profit, or with the view of getting gold, and have returned to their native States, and settled where they were before. You cannot, therefore, apply any ordinary estimates in regard to this population. The only way you can ascertain their number is to count them.

Again, sir, you do not seem to attach any consequence to the constitutional provision in such a case. This is not a mere matter of expediency; it is not a mere matter of discretion; it is a rule of the Constitution, that the representation shall be based upon the enumerated population of a State. That rule never has been departed from, and it never can be departed from without a violation of the Constitution, except in the case of the admission of new States, where there had been no opportunity of taking the census.

But the gentleman has told you, also, that the population of California is increasing, and that by the next ten years she may be entitled to have more Representatives than many others of the States. Grant that that may be the case; but let me ask, is there no other State in the Union which will increase in its population within the next ten years as well as the State of California? Is all the population of the United States going to teem into California? We know that by their increase within the next ten years they may be deprived of a portion of their rights; but that is no reason why she should have more Representatives than her population at present would entitle her to.

Mr. GWIN. Are we to be subjected to the loss of our representation while the population of our State is actually reported to be increasing? There is no other State in the Union which is in the same situation as we are, with a rapidly-increasing population.

Mr. DOWNS. There are several other States that have larger fractions than California has, and yet we are not permitted to come in on the same terms. This is a matter of strict justice; not a matter of feeling or concession. There is a rule which should govern us on this subject. I invoke the application of that rule, sir. It is a rule that is applied to every other State in the Union, and I see no reason—favorably disposed as the Government of the United States has ever been towards California—why we should set aside our rules and Constitution, in favor of the State of California. We have, perhaps, done too much in regard to that already; but I, for one, am ready to stop, and am in favor of applying the same rule to her as to all other States. The committee have done so. They have given to each State that representation to which it is entitled, according to the returns. Yet we are now called on to take the estimates of the census agents. Nobody asks—nobody could ask—the same rule to be applied to any other State. The Senator asks too much, and I hope that the Senate will not accede to his request.

Mr. BRADBURY. The Senator from Louisiana made the remark that the Senator from California presented no facts to impeach the returns, or on which we can act with propriety. Now, I will allude to what I regard in the light of a fact: One of the Representatives of California refers to the returns from the county of Shasta, giving the number of inhabitants at three hundred and seventy-eight. He says he resided in that county; that he was intimately acquainted with it, and that it contained, in 1850, a population of six thousand souls.

Mr. DOWNS. I would ask the honorable Senator whether, if he were asked the enumeration of the population of his own town or county, he could state it with sufficient accuracy to make it the basis of a system of representation? I know the part of the State from which I come as well as it is possible for a person to know any place, but yet I could not state definitely its population.

Mr. BRADBURY. I suppose it would not be in the power of the Representative from California to state with accuracy the precise number; but I suppose, if the honorable Senator from Louisiana should state on this floor that the particular town in which he had resided for two or three years, and with which he was intimately acquainted, contained a population of six thousand, that estimate would be sufficient to impeach a census return which stated the population at only three hundred and seventy-eight, especially if, as in this case, it was admitted by the person who made the return that it was incorrect. And I insist, that when the returns are impeached, not only by the persons who make them, but also by the Representatives of the State, and who say that they know the localities, and give the particulars as to those localities, we are bound to respect the information that we receive from them. I would not contend that that information is sufficient to fix the precise population; yet that there is enough to convince us that we should do great injustice by assuming as a basis returns that are shown to be so grossly erroneous. Yet it is on such returns that the Senator from Louisiana feels bound to deprive the State of California of one of its Representatives.

I think that we have facts enough in the specifications which have been given to impeach these returns. I do not know that I was understood when reading the extracts from the communication from one of the Representatives from California. The united delegation from that State speak the same voice. They utterly repudiate the pretended returns as containing anything like a fair and full enumeration of the people of the State.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question? Did the Senator say that he had any returns furnished by one of the Representatives from California?

Mr. BRADBURY. I stated that one of the Representatives from California appeared before the Committee on the Judiciary, and communicated information in his possession; and that one of them reduced his information to writing. I will read an extract from it, for the information of the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, that we may see what the gentleman says in reference to one county:

"I will give you my estimates of a few counties in the northern part of the State—counties with which I am perfectly familiar, and in which I have resided for the last two years and a half.

"The county of Shasta is returned by the commissioners as having a population of three hundred and seventy-eight. There are in this county four settlements of miners, each of which contains a larger population than the commissioners have returned for the whole county.

"The population of Shasta county I estimate at six thousand on the first day of June, 1850."

That is an extract from the communication addressed by one of the Representatives of California to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Senator from Louisiana says that the California Legislature went on an estimate. I would ask whether they had not better grounds for forming an estimate there than we can possibly have in the Senate? And I submit to the Senate whether, when a gentleman gives such information as Mr. McCorkle does in regard to several counties with which he is intimately acquainted, and the returns from which he shows to be grossly inaccurate—whether it is not sometimes worse than an estimate for us to assume that those returns are correct? That the Senate may be in possession of the data on which to form an opinion, I beg leave to state that the fraction for which South Carolina is to receive an additional Representative is 47,417; that these imperfect returns give California, after allowing her one Representative, a fraction of almost 24,000; and if you take the statement of the census agent that the returns are so inaccurate that they fall short of the actual population from thirty-three to fifty per cent., the result is as follows: If you increase them thirty-three per cent., that will give California a fraction of 61,333. If you increase them fifty per cent., it will give a fraction of 82,650. Well, take the returns as you have them, coupled with the impeachment that comes with them, and California would have a fraction of 61,333 by an increase of thirty-three per cent., or of 82,650 by an increase of fifty per cent.; yet South Carolina is to have a Representative on a fraction of 47,413!

The Senator from Louisiana alludes to the fact that the returns were found to be incorrect a year ago, and that as yet no additional returns had been made. That should not prejudice the State. It was not the duty of that State to make the returns. The State had a right to expect that they would be made by the Federal Government. The census agents were not the officers of the State government, but of the Federal Government, and California, as a State, had no control over their action. As the fault was not attributable to the State, it would be unjust to deprive her of her just representation for a fault not her own.

Perhaps I ought to state that the Committee on the Judiciary were equally divided on the question of allowing California to retain her present representation. Two of the committee were of opinion that one of her present number should be cut off; two were of opinion that she ought to retain her present representation, notwithstanding the imperfect and inaccurate census returns.

Mr. SEWARD. I was inclined, in the first place, to look with disfavor upon the proposition to amend this bill so as to allow California a second Representative; but, upon examining the report of the committee, my mind has gone to the other conclusion. I will state the principal facts and considerations which seem to me to control the question. That California is entitled, like every other State in the Union, to representation in proportion to her population, is what no one will deny; that it is the office and duty of the Government of the United States to ascertain the representative population, is equally unquestionable. They have undertaken to do so; and while that duty was being performed, California necessarily was passive. The census has been taken; it is a nominal compliance with the requisition of the Constitution. It is not a full compliance, if the census be radically wrong, erroneous, and false. In that case there is no census of California. To make that point clear, I have only to suppose the case, that in the reports of the census there might be such an omission, by some merely arithmetical error, as to reduce the population of California from 117,000 to 10,000, or 12,000. Surely, there would then be no census of California.

The next consideration, then, is, whether there is such a radical and great error in the census in regard to California as to vitiate the returns as a census? I think that is very apparent prima facie. We are told that the census of California, with all the corrections of a majority of the committee, fix the population of that State as being only 117,821 souls—men, women, and children, of all classes and conditions. Well, I might say that we, historically, know that this result cannot be true. The State of California has paid, in duties, into the Treasury, during the last year, $3,000,000. There are no 117,000 persons in the United States, promiscuously collected together, who pay any such sum of revenue. The population of California export (annually) $5,000,000 of gold.

Mr. GWIN. Monthly.

Mr. SEWARD. I thought I said monthly. The population of California monthly export five millions of gold, that is, sixty millions a year. There are no one hundred and seventy thousand people on the face of this earth, with all the facilities to be obtained, who can procure from the earth, prepare, exchange, and send abroad, sixty millions of bullion per annum. It is apparent, then, that there is a radical defect in the census, and that it is not merely incorrect, but that it is so vicious that it is no census at all.

Now, what appears prima facie is corroborated by testimony which has been taken by the committee. It derives strong support from the circumstance, that when this question became very material on the admission of California, the population of the State was then estimated at one hundred and seven thousand. Since that time, there has been a lapse of eighteen months, I think—nearly two years—with a continual increase of population, as proved, not merely by emigration to the State, but by the consumption of merchandise, by the duties paid, and by the rapidly augmenting exports of productions. It is testified to by the Representatives of the State.

Well, then, it being clear that we have a vicious census, the question is, whether we have the materials by which we can correct it? Upon that point my mind has wavered most; it is, whether the evidence we have is sufficient to enable us to say, that the population is now two hundred thousand in fact, instead of one hundred and seventeen thousand, as it is put by the census. On that subject, it seems to me we have what, under all the circumstances, ought to be satisfactory to us; that is, the action of the Legislature of California. That Legislature had the responsibility of apportioning the representation in the Legislature, and the taxes among the people of the State, and among the different counties and districts of the State; that is to say, they have had to perform precisely the same duty we have had, for a different object, for a different purpose. They have had to ascertain precisely the same fact, with no motive, that we can conceive, to mislead them—certainly without any expectation, on their part, that their action was to be adopted by us, or to conclude us. They have assumed three hundred thousand, as the population of that State. They had an opportunity to know better than we. They had no motive to mislead them. They did decide; they decided under official responsibility. It is true it is their act, not ours. We are not concluded by it; but I do not see how we can refuse to take their action as being a fair guide for ourselves, when we ourselves have neglected to ascertain the fact, the responsibility resting with us, or, having undertaken to ascertain it, we have failed to do so, owing to circumstances which rendered it impossible.

These considerations lead my mind to the conclusion, that it is but just and fair to allow California the additional Representative which is proposed by the amendment under consideration.

There is one other question—whether we can do so consistently with the Constitution of the United States? Upon that point, I have only this to say, that the census contemplated by the Constitution of the United States is a census that is not so radically vicious as to be no census. We have taken a census; it is incorrect; it is erroneous; we must cause it to be corrected before it will be the census which the Constitution of the United States prescribes; otherwise, we shall be at sea in a case of greater magnitude hereafter. It may happen sometimes that the State of Pennsylvania, by erroneous returns, by erroneous enumeration, or by erroneous addition of the figures in the columns of the census, may be returned as having a population of only 100,000 or 200,000. Certainly such a census as that would not bind the Government of the United States, or conclude Pennsylvania. It must be corrected somehow; it must be corrected here, and nowhere else. We have, then, I think, the power to correct it, and it is our duty to collect the materials by which to correct it. Having done this, I think we are bound to allow to California the benefit of correction, which is an additional member to that State.

Mr. PRATT. If I concede, with the Senator who has just taken his seat, and others who have occupied the same side of this question, that the Congress of the United States has the power to do what this amendment proposes it should do, I might vote with my friend from California; but when I look at the Constitution, and find that it says that representation shall be based upon the actual enumeration of the inhabitants of each State, I cannot go beyond the Constitution to look at the estimates of any body, for the purpose of ascertaining a different basis of representation from that which is prescribed. The language of the Constitution is plain, that the representation shall be based upon the actual enumeration. Is there not an actual enumeration in this case? The Senator from California says there is not. If that is so, we have no power to give to California the Representative which is asked for by this amendment. We are required strictly, by the letter of the Constitution, to give representation according to the actual enumeration. Now, if there has been no actual enumeration made, we have no power over the subject. We have no other power than to do as the committee have done—give the representation to which, under the Constitution, each State is entitled in the absence of any regular enumeration. This is the view which I have; and, therefore, as I conceive, I have no power to travel beyond the Constitution for the purpose of giving an additional Representative to this State; however inaccurate the enumeration may be, I cannot vote for the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I listened to the remarks of the Senator from New York, and they led me to this difficulty: the Senator thinks that we have sufficient data for correcting this erroneous return; but then he does not propose to correct it. He proposes to give to California a Representative without the return; but how does that leave the other States? It does injustice to every other State in the Union; because the amendment still gives to South Carolina a Representative to which she is not entitled by the enumeration. If you proceed to allow to California an additional Representative, upon the ground that here is a difficulty—a vicious census, and that we have data enough before us to correct it—then what becomes of the South Carolina Representative? If California is entitled to another Representative, South Carolina is not entitled to the number which she will have under this amendment. You give South Carolina, without any pretense that there has been a mistake or a vicious census, a greater representation upon the floor of the other House than she is entitled to by the actual enumeration, and thus you do injustice to every other State in the Union; because while you apportion the Representatives to every State according to the actual enumeration under the Constitution, you give to South Carolina a Representative to which she is not entitled.

Now I would ask the honorable Senator from New York how he justifies that under the Constitution? I am saying nothing about its operation in California. If there is data by which you can correct the census, then stick to the census, and take a Representative away from South Carolina. If you adopt this amendment, upon the ground assumed by the Senator from New York, that you have data enough to correct the census of California, you then apply a constitutional provision to all the States of the Union, except South Carolina, and arbitrarily give to her a Representative to which she is not entitled under the Constitution. This is a difficulty which to my mind is insuperable.

Mr. DOWNS. I do not think the difficulty suggested by the Senator will occur. Take the facts as they are. There is no estimate—no computation as to South Carolina. Her actual population is known. It is unquestionable. There is a certain amount of population returned also from California which entitles her to one Representative. The report of the committee takes that return, gives her representation on that basis, and that leaves one to South Carolina. South Carolina gets her number upon no estimate, but upon the known amount of the population.

Mr. HALE. The Senator misunderstands me. That is the very view of it which I present. I say that, as it now stands, South Carolina is entitled to an additional Representative; but if you undertake to correct the census, and make California's fraction enough to give her an additional member, then South Carolina is not entitled, and therefore you give to her arbitrarily a Representative to which she is not entitled if you make the correction.

Mr. GEYER. The question presented by the amendment is not without its embarrassments. Indeed, after much reflection, I find it difficult to determine upon any rule which would conform to the act of 1850, and to the Constitution of the United States, as gentlemen interpret it. By the act of 1850, the representation of each State depends upon the returns from all the other States to a great extent. The ratio is to be fixed by assuming two hundred and thirty-three as a divisor. If, then, we cannot apportion the representation but upon actual returns, we cannot execute the acts of 1850 consistently with the Constitution. The representation of South Carolina will depend upon the returns from California. We are in a condition in which we must wait until these returns are complete before we can make any apportionment whatever. It has been correctly remarked by the Senator from New Hampshire, that if the returns from California should give her a large fraction over and above the fraction upon which South Carolina is proposed, by this bill, to be represented, then South Carolina would be excluded. If we make the apportionment now, according to the terms of the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, we are making an apportionment without returns from one of the States upon which depends the apportionment for all the other States. We are, then, under the necessity either of not making the apportionment at all, or of making it upon returns which are defective, and which do not furnish us data by which we can do justice to all the States according to the terms of the Constitution.

When this matter was before the Judiciary Committee, the evidence presented to us satisfied me that the population of California probably exceeded, at the time the census was taken, one hundred and forty-five thousand, which would have cut out South Carolina from her additional Representative; but, in the state of uncertainty which the facts presented, I was unwilling either to postpone the apportionment, or to decide upon the facts presented, whether California or South Carolina was entitled to the additional Representative. It seemed to me that the only way in which we could get over the difficulty would be to take the returns, as far as they went, and allow South Carolina her additional Representative upon the fraction as it appeared by these returns, and then allow also to California an additional Representative upon the assumption that her population, exceeding that necessary for one Representative, would be equal to the fraction of South Carolina. The only other alternative, consistent with the act of 1850, is to postpone this apportionment and direct an enumeration to be completed in California, and if the returns come in, showing her to have a representative population exceeding one hundred and forty thousand, and some few hundreds, it would give her two Representatives, and reduce the representation of South Carolina as it is proposed to be given her under this bill.

Now, the sole question, as it appears to me, which is presented here, is this: We are obliged to act upon conjecture; we have not got the official returns; it is not the fault of the State of California that the returns are not here; whether it is that the officers did not act for the want of means, or whether they neglected their duty, after having sworn to perform it, with the means in their hands, we do not know; but they were the officers of the Government; and seeing, as it seems to me, that we are doing great injustice to California by denying her an additional Representative, when, according to the weight of the evidence, her fraction would be as great as that of South Carolina, I am disposed at once to make an apportionment and allow the additional Representative to California.

This is not without precedent to some extent. It is true that the fourth enumeration was not like the present. Congress then did not limit the Representatives beforehand; but, having made the apportionment, there being, I think, by occasion of the death of a marshal in the State of Alabama, defective returns for a portion of that State, time was given to complete them, and Congress provided that the State should have an additional Representative, if, on the return being made, she should be entitled to it according to the apportionment then adopted. The returns were made, and the additional member was allowed.

I do not see that we are in danger of an infraction of the Constitution by adopting this course. We cannot, under the bill as it is presented, make the apportionment upon the enumeration, for the enumeration has not been made. The representation from South Carolina did depend upon true returns from California, and all the other States of the Union; and, according to the system adopted in 1850, the apportionment must also await the returns from all the States; and, if the interpretation put upon the Constitution by the honorable Senator from Maryland be the true one, we must wait until all the returns are in, and then we shall have a question whether, under the Constitution, a fraction can be represented at all?

Upon the whole, without detaining the Senate further, I think the subject is involved in difficulty. We have to adopt one of two alternatives. If we order an enumeration of the inhabitants of California, we must wait the returns before we can make the apportionment according to the act of 1850. If you decide to deny to California the additional Representative, you deny it to her because your officers have neglected their duty, and when the weight of the evidence before you shows her to be entitled to an additional Representative, and shows that in all probability she has a larger fraction than South Carolina, which would deprive that State of one Representative. I am disposed, therefore, to compromise the matter, and give to each of the States an additional Representative for their fraction.

Mr. PRATT. It seems to me, that by pursuing the course indicated by the Senator from Missouri, the only effect of it will be to insure that injustice shall be done. Now, I submit to the consideration of the honorable Senator himself, whether the proposition I am about to state is not undoubtedly correct? South Carolina is not entitled to an additional Representative for her fraction if California is. He now proposes to do, in reference to other States, the double injustice of giving an additional Representative to each. In order to secure to California all that she may possibly be entitled to, if this actual enumeration had been made, the proposition or argument therefore of the Senator from Missouri is to insure that injustice shall be done; whereas if we take the course indicated by the committee, it is doubtful whether injustice will be done to California or not. If we take the course which we are asked to take by the Senator from Missouri, we give undoubtedly either to California or to South Carolina a Representative to which one or the other is not entitled; and, consequently, you insure that injustice shall be done. It may be that California would have a larger fraction than South Carolina, if this actual enumeration had taken place. If so, South Carolina would not have her Representative; and the course indicated by the Senator from Missouri will have the effect of doing injustice certainly to all the other States, by giving to both South Carolina and California an additional Representative, when undoubtedly only one of them can be entitled to it.

Mr. GEYER. It is very true that if South Carolina is entitled to an additional Representative under the act of 1850, California is not. But we cannot execute the act of 1850 at this time, for you have not the returns from the State of California, upon which the representation can be apportioned according to the rule established by that act; so that I take it, the act of 1850 is out of the question. It may be observed as a general rule, but it cannot be executed now. To execute that act will require us to make additional provisions to take the enumeration in California, and postpone the apportionment until the returns shall be made. Now, what will be the consequence of that? If it shall turn out that the representative population of California amounts to 300,000, as it was estimated by the General Assembly of that State upon the evidence before them, it would have a very sensible effect upon the new apportionment all over the Union. It would entitle California to three Representatives—it would cut off some other State, at all events, now represented upon a fraction—it would increase the ratio of representation, and in some of the States having a great number of Representatives, might cut off their fraction, and change the entire representation all over the Union. The question, I repeat, is an embarrassing one. There is a difficulty in it. We are obliged to meet it, and meet it now, I think, in order to be prepared for the election of the next Congress. I know of no better way in which we can get over it than by allowing an additional Representative to each of the States.

Mr. BADGER. I agree with what has been said on this subject by my friend from Missouri. There are undoubtedly embarrassments and difficulties surrounding it. It is impossible to carry out technically and accurately the execution of the act of 1850. To say that under the circumstances we will consider the population of California as ascertained by these imperfect and defective returns would, I think, begreat injustice. We cannot carry out, therefore, technically the rule of the act of 1850, without manifest injustice to this new State. Well, where is the injustice of what is proposed by the minority of the committee? They propose to add to the permanent number of the House of Representatives fixed by the act of 1850 one member—to add one member to the two hundred and thirty-three fixed by law—during the operation of the present enactment, and by giving that member to California, to leave the census, as taken, to operate among all the other States of the Union. Where is the injustice of that? Where is the strict right, under the Constitution, that is withheld from, or imparted to, the other States of the Union?

It has been assumed that, according to the Constitution, no allotment of members to a State can be made, except upon an actual enumeration. I confess my opinion has been that that was probably the correct interpretation of the Constitution; but the legislation of Congress has settled that matter, that a State can be entitled to Representatives on the floor of the House of Representatives not based upon actual enumeration; otherwise, when any State was newly admitted into the Union, she should be entitled to but one Representative. The rule of the Constitution is, that the States shall be entitled according to the population, as ascertained by the census or enumeration; but that every State shall be entitled to at least one Representative; when, therefore, a new State is admitted, in respect to which there never could have been a census or enumeration, within the meaning of the Constitution, if the rule insisted upon were the true interpretation of the Constitution, that State would be entitled to but one Representative in the House of Representatives. But yet, time and again, Congress have assigned to new States two Representatives. Texas and California were each admitted with two. Therefore we have established this proposition by our legislation, that Congress, under extraordinary circumstances, can give additional Representatives upon estimates and not upon actual enumeration. That is settled; and we must go back, and undo what we have done in divers instances heretofore, before it can be considered an open question.

Mr. BAYARD. Are there any other instances but those of California and Texas?

Mr. GWIN. Iowa and Wisconsin were admitted with two Representatives.

Mr. BAYARD. The proposition contended for by the honorable Senator from North Carolina, as I understand it, is, that supposing this to be a clear violation of the Constitution of the United States, two violations by Congress justify a third.

Mr. BADGER. That is not my proposition.

Mr. BAYARD. I so understood it.

Mr. BADGER. That may be the honorable Senator's understanding of it, but I do not consider myself as having a very peculiar faculty of knowing what the Constitution means. I think that the various members of Congress who passed those acts, were as competent to decide the question as myself. I take it, that inasmuch as this has been done by Congress, these acts have declared the sense of the Congress of the United States, that in extraordinary cases, members may be given by estimate. Congress seem to have gone upon the idea that, in the admission of new States, the rule of the Constitution should not be considered strictly applicable; that it was an extraordinary case; a case in which some latitude must be allowed to legislative enactment. Be that as it may, here are four cases in which States have had Representatives upon estimates, and not upon enumeration. We are brought to this condition of things. I have said it would be grossly unjust, under the particular circumstances in which California was placed, under which this census was taken, to hold her bound by these imperfect returns. It would be extremely unjust to her. Those returns do not furnish an approximation to the truth; they not only cannot be relied on as certain, but they are absolutely discredited by those who made them. That being an injustice, I suppose Congress will not be inclined to perpetuate it. On the other hand, I should be extremely unwilling to assume that California had a larger fraction than South Carolina; to assume that California would be entitled, by the actual number of her inhabitants, to two Representatives, and so exclude South Carolina from the additional member to which she would be entitled under the census.

Now, admitting, as I do, with my friend from Missouri, that the case is attended with difficulties and embarrassments, do not we, upon the whole, do as little wrong and accomplish as much good by meeting this extraordinary state of things, by the addition, during the present decennial period, of one member to the number in the House of Representatives, and allowing California to take that member, as by pursuing the other course suggested? There is every probability in the world that she is strictly entitled to it. She is a new and growing State. This enumeration is to stand for ten years. If an influx of inhabitants continue to pour into that State as they do now, she will, in two or three years, be inadequately represented by even two members, which she now has. Upon the whole, although I admit there are difficulties, and room for divers opinions, I think the best course to pursue is that indicated by my friend from Missouri, in voting for this amendment. I think it does as little harm, and accomplishes as much good, and perhaps more, than any other course we could pursue.

One word as to repeating the enumeration. That is utterly impossible, because it was to have ascertained the population in 1850; therefore, if we had the time, which we have not, how could we possibly ascertain now what was the population of California in 1850? With regard to that, then, in the first place, it is impossible to ascertain what it was; and in the next place, if it were possible, we have not got the time. The new enumeration, under the Constitution and law of 1850, has to go into effect on the third of March next. It must, therefore, be settled now; and upon the whole, I do not see a better mode of settling it than that suggested by my friend from Missouri.

Mr. BRADBURY. I desire to make a single remark in reference to a question which has been raised. The honorable Senator from Maryland refers to the clause of the Constitution that provides that representation shall be based upon an actual enumeration of the people, and then says that there has been no actual enumeration of the inhabitants of California. The fact is so. There has been no actual enumeration. We have mere conjecture as to three counties.

Mr. PRATT. I said that on the Senator's side of the question the allegation is, that there has been no enumeration.

Mr. BRADBURY. I understood the Senator to make the statement himself; but I take his correction. I think the facts show conclusively that there has been no actual enumeration—that there has not been an enumeration of much more than one half of the inhabitants. I feel bound to disregard returns when a Representative states that, from his own knowledge, not a twelfth or a fiftieth of the population in a county where he has resided for two or three years has been enumerated. The true question is this: Shall we cut down the representation of California without an actual enumeration of her inhabitants?

Where would the argument of the honorable Senator from Maryland lead us? Take the State of New York, and suppose that no returns were made from that State; the honorable Senator would then contend that, inasmuch as there was no actual enumeration, her representation should be cut down to the one allowed by the Constitution. So far from this position being correct, or demanded by the Constitution, I believe the safer and sounder rule would be not to change the representation when there is no actual reliable enumeration. We do not propose in the amendment which has been offered, to change the representation. We leave the representation of California to stand as it is, because there is no actual enumeration, that demands the change. We call upon gentlemen who raise the constitutional objection, to say whether they are prepared to change the existing representation without an actual enumeration. Will they change the existing representation because there has been a failure to comply with the law—a failure to make an actual enumeration, which has not been owing to any fault of the State? I think not.

Mr. DAVIS. I should be glad to obtain some more information than I have derived from this debate, before giving a vote upon this bill. As I understand the papers in reference to this matter, having run my eye cursorily over them since this discussion commenced, there is a return of the census for the State of California of 117,821. But this return is supposed to contain some inaccuracies. If we are to assume a certain amount of inaccuracies, I should be very glad to see some method proposed by which we are to arrive at a satisfactory result in that particular. I will explain myself by drawing the attention of the Senate to some of the figures that are given in the report of the majority and the minority of the committee. They allow to South Carolina a fraction of some 49,000. The proposition contained in the amendment is to give South Carolina a member of the House of Representatives upon that fraction, the ratio of representation being some 93,000.

The amendment also proposes to give California an additional member. That goes, I suppose, upon the presumption that California has a fraction large enough to let her in, and yet not a fraction so large as South Carolina. See, now, the effect of that. The State of Louisiana has a fraction of forty-six thousand. It is very clear, then, that Louisiana is entitled to the member, and not California. The law gives it to the largest fraction. You are therefore driven to this alternative: you must raise the fraction of California over that of South Carolina, or over that of Louisiana—one or the other. If it is raised over South Carolina, it is also raised over Louisiana, of course. Well, here are returns to a certain extent made official; and, as I suppose, admitted to be correct—I do not know that it is, but I take it for granted, for the present, that they are considered to be correct. How are they shown to be incorrect? Partly by persons who took the census admitting inaccuracies, and, further, by certain estimates made in the legislative body of the State of California, putting the population at three hundred thousand. Then the honorable Senator from California says that forty thousand persons passed Fort Laramie, and went through the mountains. Where they went, I do not know. Some of them, perhaps, went to the Salt Lake, some to Oregon, and some to California. But the number to be enumerated there depends upon another consideration. They were not to be enumerated, unless they were entering California with a view to be settled in that State as inhabitants of the State. That is the condition of the law. It is quite impossible to ascertain what portion of these forty thousand people (if there were that number) passed Fort Laramie upon that condition, and when they were asked if they were about to make themselves permanent residents of California, replied in the affirmative. That there is a great deal of transient population in California at all times, is, I think, a fact that will not be questioned by anybody.

What does all this prove? That there is very considerable difficulty in regard to this question, is proved beyond all doubt. There is a constitutional difficulty, and a difficulty of fact—a very serious one—in regard to it.

I wish now to draw the attention of gentlemen to another point. I should like to see the estimate made by the legislative body of California; and, if here are accurate returns, as it is supposed they are, I should like to see the estimates put against the accurate returns, that I might know how they would compare. Let us see how the estimates will stand when compared with the accurate returns. If it can be shown that there is sufficient reason to justify raising the population of California some twenty-four or twenty-five thousand, which would be necessary in order to give her an additional member, I shall be very much inclined, for one, to do it. But I am not quite willing to proceed upon a mere open conjecture—upon a naked fact not sustained by proof—that there have been certain erroneous proceedings on the part of those who took the census in California. I do not feel quite authorized to infer that there is an error of twenty-four or twenty-five thousand. It must be remembered, that in order to carry this fraction of California over that of Louisiana, we must assume that there is an error to an amount rising twenty thousand in the taking of the census of California. I understood there was a document of that description; if so, I should be glad to see it.

Mr. DOWNS. I think I can put the Senator right on that subject. As to the computation of the Legislature of California, there is nothing in the book I saw except the statement of the committee of the Legislature. They give no details; no estimates of the different counties, no enumeration but a mere general statement that the population amounted to some three hundred thousand. I could not find in that any data—any distinct facts—to show upon what they based their statement. Probably the Senator from California can tell us.

Mr. GWIN. The statement of the census agent was laid before the committee of the Legislature. In the judgment of the committee, and of the members of the Legislature, it was entirely inaccurate, and not worthy of consideration. This report (and I am very sorry the Senator from Maine has not got it here—I gave it to him) states that the committee made the most diligent inquiry to ascertain the exact population of the State, and came to the conclusion that it exceeded three hundred thousand. They examined persons from all parts of the State, who corrected the returns of the census agent, and made a correct estimate of our population. While up, I will refer to my statement of the number of persons who passed Fort Laramie in 1850. It is stated by the assistant quartermaster that they were going to California and Oregon, not to the Salt Lake. These are the very persons the law says shall be enumerated. I do not know the exact number of these emigrants who went to California, but it is very well known, that of that year's emigration a vast majority went to that State, and comparatively but few to Oregon.

The State of California did not take a census, because they expected the United States to do it, and upon the census taken by the United States, we intended to make our apportionment. The United States failing to take the census, we had to collect from the most authentic sources within our reach, information upon which to make our apportionment, which resulted in the report of the joint committee before referred to, which places our population at more than three hundred thousand.

Mr. DOWNS. I wish to make a few remarks, in reply to the honorable Senator from North Carolina, who supposed that Congress had settled the question that representation might be allowed without even an enumeration. That is very true, in a case where no enumeration has been made; but they never have, in any instance, made such an allowance where an enumeration has been made. On the contrary; the phraseology of the Constitution itself clearly contemplates, that before an enumeration has been made, as in the origin of the Government, and when a new State is admitted, they must necessarily allow a Representative without an enumeration. The language of the Constitution is not that a Representative shall be allowed without an enumeration; but that whenever an enumeration is made, then there shall be no representation without enumeration; so that the decision of Congress on which the gentleman relies, has no application to a case of this kind. The language of the Constitution is: "Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this 'Union, according to their respective numbers,' and so forth. The Constitution, after prescribing the mode of computing the representative population, says: "The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of ten years, in such manner as they shall by law direct. The number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty thousand, but each State shall have at least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire," &c. The Constitution then goes on to enumerate how many Representatives each State should have until an enumeration should take place; so that the Constitution itself recognizes the principle adopted by Congress afterwards, that when no enumeration had taken place, Congress would go into an estimate, and allow an apportionment accordingly; but in no instance, neither in the case of Alabama, cited by the Senator from Missouri, nor any other, has it ever been allowed when an enumeration has been taken.

I think too much importance is attached to the idea that there are no returns here, which the Senator from Missouri and others seem to anticipate. That is not the fact. There are returns. There are returns, in fact, from every county of California—certainly from every county but one—about which there is some dispute. All these returns were made directly, either to the Secretary of the Interior, or to the Secretary of the State of California, and adopted by the committee. This is not a case where there are no returns, for there are returns.

The suggestion, however, is made that the returns are erroneous. I venture to say that errors may be suggested in the returns of other counties. There may be errors suggested in reference to almost every county of the Union, perhaps. What the committee ask is, that we should rely upon the returns we have, and make them the rule. The Senator from Missouri estimates the population of California at some one hundred and forty thousand, and therefore says that it was doubtful, according to the estimate, whether the fraction of California would be greater than the fraction of South Carolina. He thought it hard, therefore, to deprive South Carolina of a member. Now, there is only a difference of about one thousand between the fraction of Louisiana and the fraction of South Carolina. If the gentleman was in so much doubt about South Carolina, I should like to know why there should not be the same doubt in regard to Louisiana? The case is as strong in the one instance as in the other. He has doubts about South Carolina. I can show him that Louisiana has a fraction of some twenty-five thousand more than the fraction which the actual returns give to California; yet he would give California an additional member for her fraction, and exclude Louisiana. It seems to me that there is more difficulty in the amendment than a great many suppose.

Mr. BADGER. I think the Senator from Louisiana has been entirely unsuccessful in endeavoring to show that there is anything in the Constitution contrary to the view which I took upon the subject, or warranting by its direct terms, or the meaning which could be attached to it at the time by those who framed it, the admission of members on the floor of the other House by estimate in any case. Take new States at their admission. The Constitution says that representation shall be distributed according to population. It says that the actual enumeration shall be made within three years after its adoption, for the purpose of ascertaining the population by which enumeration is to be fixed; and then it says, until that enumeration has been made the States shall be entitled to so and so. The argument founded upon that is clearly this: Representation shall be given according to population always after the enumeration has been made. The Constitution itself gives representation by estimate. That was absolutely necessary. But its language is, that until the enumeration which it directs shall be made, this representation by estimate shall obtain. If you argue from that provision, so far from its authorizing representation by estimate upon the admission of a State, it would absolutely forbid it. The rule is, representation according to the population ascertained by actual census, or enumeration; but until there shall have been a census—until the first census—the States should be entitled to so and so. How are they entitled to be afterwards? According to enumeration, beyond all dispute; and therefore, it would have followed, carrying out that literal interpretation, that when a new State was admitted, in respect to which there had been, and could have been no enumeration, the State would have been entitled to but one member; for if you refer to that provision, which gave representation, under the Constitution, conjecturally or by estimate, that obtained only until the first enumeration had been made, and after an enumeration, according to the express provisions of the Constitution, the representation was to be distributed according to the results of that enumeration; each State, however, being absolutely entitled to one member of the House of Representatives, it would have followed that the new States coming in would have had but one member.

Now, what has Congress done? In four different instances of the admission of new States, they have received two members by estimate upon their admission. That settles, if anything can settle, the interpretation of Congress upon the subject; and that is, that although the rule given by the Constitution is to go by the enumeration—although the rule given in the Constitution is, that without any enumeration, a State can be but entitled to one member, yet it is only a general rule, and in extraordinary cases, in order to do justice, Congress may give representation by estimate. My friend from Louisiana says, that cannot apply to this case, because there has been an enumeration. Why, has there been an enumeration? Has there been such an enumeration, as for his State, or for my State, or any other State in this Union? Doubtless, in many of the States there may have been errors. There will be errors. Absolute certainty—precise accuracy—cannot be attained; but has there been in California anything that deserves the name of enumeration? Does it furnish us an approximation? Is there any reasonable probability that what is called an enumeration furnishes us with the inhabitants of California? These questions must be all answered in the negative; and then we must either regulate the representation of California contrary to the plainest and most evident probabilities of the case upon a defective and discredited enumeration, or we must do justice to her, by assuming, what there is the highest probability of, to believe, that she had in 1850 a population ample to entitle her, under the census act of 1850, to two Representatives.

I do not put it upon the size of the fraction. I am satisfied that California had population enough to entitle her by actual numbers to two Representatives. Whatever we do, I would not willingly do injustice to her, nor would I, by any means, take any movement by which South Carolina should be deprived of a member to which, under the act of 1850, she is entitled. In order to do justice to California, and meet as well as we can as statesmen, as men acting under peculiar circumstances, what better can we do than for the present decennial period to add one member to the House of Representatives, and to give that member to California, without interfering with the apportionment among the other States?

My friend says that Louisiana comes within a thousand, or something like that, of having as large a fraction as South Carolina. I should have precisely the same feeling if Louisiana had the larger fraction. It is not that I would be unwilling to do justice less to Louisiana than to South Carolina; but South Carolina is actually entitled, under the law of 1850, to this member, because she has the largest fraction. Why should we take that right from her? It is a right under that law—an unquestionable and clear right. Why take it from her? If her fraction exceeds that of Louisiana by one, it gives her, under the law, a right. On what principle could we take it from her? Then it seems to me that the only alternative left to us is to add a member to the House of Representatives, and give it to California.

These are the views that strike me. I have no interest in this question. It does not concern my State. It neither decreases nor enlarges her representation. She has no fraction to entitle her. She loses one member under the census. She must submit to the law. South Carolina loses one, and but for her fraction, would lose two. I think, on the whole, that under the circumstances, what was said by my friend from Missouri is true.

This is a difficult case. It is not without its embarrassments. But I think the proposition contained in the amendment is the best we can do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not exactly prepared to vote on this question this evening. I would rather it should lie over until to-morrow, and, therefore, I move an adjournment.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 5, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. L. F. MORGAN.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

THE COMPROMISE MEASURES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces that the first business in order is the resolution in reference to the compromise measures, proposed by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. JACKSON,] on the 22d March, upon which the previous question has been demanded.

The resolution is as follows:

"Resolved, That we recognize the binding efficacy of the compromises of the Constitution, and believe it to be the intention of the people generally, as we hereby declare it to be ours individually, to abide such compromises, and to sustain the laws necessary to carry them out—the provision for the delivery of fugitive slaves and the act of the last Congress for that purpose included—and that we deprecate all further agitation of questions growing out of that provision, of the questions embraced in the acts of the last Congress known as the compromise, and of questions generally connected with the institution of slavery, as unnecessary, useless, and dangerous."

Mr. HILLYER. I would respectfully ask my colleague [Mr. JACKSON] to withdraw his motion for the previous question, that I may propose an amendment to the resolution. I will renew the motion for the previous question after the amendment which I am about to propose has been accepted. I ask that the amendment may be read for the information of the House.

Mr. JACKSON. I do not understand what my colleague [Mr. HILLYER] wishes. I wish to understand from him what his object is?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILLYER] appeals to his colleague, [Mr. JACKSON,] who offered the resolution before the House, to withdraw the demand for the previous question, to enable him to propose an amendment, which will be read for the information of the House.

Mr. STANLY. I rise to a point of order. I want to get in some resolutions myself for information. But before that is done, I make the point of order, that the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. JACKSON,] who offered the resolution two weeks ago, is not entitled to the floor.

Mr. GENTRY. Is not, or was not?

Mr. STANLY. Was not entitled to the floor, and is not, as a matter of course; and, to sustain that, I send to the Chair, to be read by the Clerk, an extract from the Congressional Globe of the next day, which shows what the proceedings were, and upon that, after it is read, I propose, with the permission of the Speaker, to submit most briefly such remarks as I have to make, to show that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JACKSON] was not entitled to the floor, according to the rules of this House. I hope the papers which I send to the Chair may be read by the Clerk.

Mr. HALL. Is it not too late to rise to a point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair trusts that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] will be permitted to state fully his question of order, and that the Chair will be heard in response. The Chair doubts, however, whether the question is debatable.

Mr. STANLY. I do not wish to violate the rules of the House. I only want to state distinctly the point.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have the paper read?

Mr. STANLY. I do.

The paper was then read by the Clerk, as follows:

"Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It is about the usual time for adjournment, and as we are not likely to make any progress in the bill to-day, I move that the committee do now rise.

"The motion was agreed to.

"The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 62.

Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 207, being a bill "to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1852," and had come to no conclusion thereon.

"COMPROMISE MEASURES."

"Mr. JACKSON. I ask the Chair, what is the regular order of business?"

"The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the call of the States for resolutions, beginning with South Carolina."

"Mr. JACKSON. I move that the House do now proceed to the regular order of business. If there are no resolutions to be offered from the State of South Carolina, I have a resolution to offer when Georgia is called."

"The SPEAKER. Resolutions are in order from the State of Georgia."

"Mr. JACKSON. I offer the following resolution, upon the passage of which I move the previous question."

"Mr. CARELL of Florida. I move that the House do now adjourn."

"Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to make this inquiry of the Chair: If the House adjourn now, what will be the position of the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia?"

"Mr. GENTRY. The resolution has not been received nor read."

"Mr. JONES. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Georgia, as I understand it, is upon the floor until his resolution is read; and until he yields the floor no gentleman can get it to move that the House adjourn."

"The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the resolution would be in order when resolutions are again called for. The resolution will, however, be read for information."

"[The resolution was then read.]"

"The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves the resolution which has just been read, and upon its passage he calls the previous question."

"Mr. FOWLER. I move that the House do now adjourn."

"Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, demanded the yeas and nays; but they were not ordered."

"The motion was then agreed to—yeas 84, noes not counted; and

"The House adjourned till twelve o'clock to-morrow."

Mr. HALL. Is that the Journal?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. HALL. I ask that the Journal be read.

Mr. STANLY. I desire to get through with my point. What I wish to call the attention of the House to now is this: The Speaker stated, according to the Congressional Globe just read, that "the first business in order is the call of the States for resolutions, beginning with South Carolina."

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. STANLY. But the Chair did not begin with South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs the gentleman's pardon, and he will allow me to correct him.

Mr. STANLY. I beg pardon of the Chair. I say, according to the Speaker's annunciation, according to this report, and according to my recollection of it, that the first business in order was a call of the States for resolutions, beginning with South Carolina. After it was so announced by the Speaker, Mr. JACKSON said:

"I move that the House do now proceed to the regular order of business. If there are no resolutions to be offered from the State of South Carolina, I have a resolution to offer when Georgia is called."

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will allow the Chair a single moment, he will state that at that precise point in the proceedings, the Chair stated distinctly, that if there be no resolutions from the State of South Carolina, resolutions are in order from the State of Georgia. Thereupon the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JACKSON] took the floor, was recognized by the Speaker, and offered his resolution. That is what the Chair recollects distinctly having stated. There can be no mistake about it. No gentleman rising from South Carolina, the Chair, as he supposes regularly, recognized the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. JACKSON], and if he was not entitled to the floor, the Chair would respectfully ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] who is?

Mr. STANLY. That is the point. Somebody from South Carolina is, and my recollection in all respect differs from that of the Speaker. South Carolina was not called. It seems to have been taken for granted that there was nothing further from South Carolina, without putting that question.

The SPEAKER. In that I beg to assure the gentleman that he is mistaken.

Mr. STANLY. I was not complaining of the conduct of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. I so understand; but it is necessary, in order to understand the history of the proceedings, that the facts be stated as they really occurred. I recollect noticing, the next morning, that the report was imperfect in that respect.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I recollect very distinctly that the Chair did announce that there were no resolutions from the State of South Carolina, and that resolutions were in order from Georgia.

Mr. STANLY. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] speaks from his recollection; but we must all have our own opinion in the incalculable confusion which sometimes prevails. My friend from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES] was well aware of what was going on, of which I may comment hereafter. In the report which has been read, Mr. Gentry said, "the resolution has not been received nor read," which shows that the resolution did not get fairly before the House. I make the point of order, that this resolution is not fairly before the House, and that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JACKSON] offered it before the State of South Carolina was called, and before any member from Georgia was entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY], and begs leave to state to the House, and the Journal will show it, that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JACKSON] rose to inquire what was the regular order of business. That inquiry, being made at so late an hour of the day, the Chair was taken by surprise; and, after some hesitation, the Chair remarked that "resolutions are in order from the States, beginning with South Carolina." The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JACKSON] stated that if there be no resolutions—or something to the same effect—from the State of South Carolina, he had a resolution to offer from the State of Georgia. I stated distinctly, that "if there be no resolutions from South Carolina, resolutions are in order from Georgia," and the Chair immediately recognized the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. JACKSON.] The Chair thinks the business was perfectly regular under the rules, and overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY.]

Mr. GORMAN. I move a call of the House.

Mr. HILLYER. I hope before action is taken by the House, that the amendment I propose to offer to my colleague's resolution may be read for information.

Mr. STANLY. I will interpose no objection, provided that three resolutions which I intend submitting, may also be read for information. I will vote for either of the three. I want the House to have all the information.

[Cries "Read all of them!" "There is no objection."]

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the reading of the papers indicated by the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk then read the proposed amendment of Mr. HILLYER, as follows:

Resolved, That the series of acts passed during the first session of the Thirty-first Congress, known as the compromise, are regarded as a final adjustment and permanent settlement of the questions therein embraced, and should be maintained and executed as such.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent was given also to the reading of the amendments of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KING, of New York. I object.

Mr. MEADE. I have an amendment I wish read.

[Cries of "Send it up!" "Send it up to be read."]

Mr. KING, of New York. I object. I object to the whole matter—to the whole and every part of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs leave to state to the gentleman from New York, that in connection with the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia, he distinctly asked whether or not the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY], as well as the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILLYER], should have certain papers read, which they proposed to have read for the information of the House only, and the Chair heard no sort of objection.

A VOICE. There was none made.
Mr. KING. So far as this whole matter is concerned, the Chair stated that these proceedings were had with the unanimous consent of the House. Now, I desire to state that I do not consent to any part of it, but object to the whole matter.

Mr. HOUSTON. The objection is too late.
The SPEAKER. The reading is only for the information of the House. The objection to the reading comes too late.

Mr. MEADE was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. HILLYER. I rise to a question of order. I am not certain, however, whether it be a question of order or a privileged question. I think I am entitled to the floor, and make this point for the decision of the Speaker. The floor was given to me. I proposed to my colleague an amendment to the resolution which he had pending before the House, and asked him to withdraw the previous question that my amendment might be offered, with the pledge upon my part to renew the call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will allow the Chair, all that the Chair begs leave to state is, that but for the courtesy of the House no gentleman can rightfully occupy the floor at all, during the demand for the previous question. But by the unanimous consent of the House, it was agreed that the paper proposed by the gentleman, as well as the papers of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY], should be read for the information of the House.

Mr. STANLY. I hope mine will now be read for the information of the House.

[Cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

Mr. GORMAN. I object to the reading.
Mr. STANLY. I had the unanimous consent of the House for its reading.

The SPEAKER. There can be little difficulty growing out of this matter. The Chair begs leave to state to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. GORMAN], that the objection comes too late, for the reason that, by unanimous consent, it was agreed that these papers should be read for the information of the House.

Mr. GORMAN. What becomes of my motion to have a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. The unanimous action of the House set it aside, as it would all other matters proposed at the time.

Mr. GORMAN. I made my motion for a call of the House before it was proposed that these amendments should be read—before the propositions of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. But for the confusion in the House, the gentleman would remember, that after he submitted his motion, the unanimous consent of the House was asked and obtained to read these papers. The Chair is now acting by order of the unanimous vote of the House. There can be no doubt about the matter.

Mr. STANLY. Read my resolutions.

Mr. MEADE. My object in addressing the Chair was to have read an amendment which I intend submitting to the resolution, for the information of the House.

[Cries of "I object!" "I object!"]

Mr. STANLY. The Chair has decided three times that I have the unanimous consent of the House for the reading of my resolutions. I ask that they be read.

The SPEAKER. The papers now in the hands of the Clerk, according to the unanimous consent of the House, will be read. The resolution of the gentleman from Virginia, if there is no objection, will then be read.

Mr. GORMAN. I object to the reading of the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia. I am in time now, I think, for that proposition.

The Clerk then read Mr. STANLY's resolution, as follows:

Polk's No. 1:

Resolved, That the series of acts passed during the first session of the Thirty-first Congress, known as the compromise, are regarded as a final adjustment and a permanent settlement of the questions therein embraced, and should be maintained and executed as such.

No. 2.—Resolution of Whig caucus at the beginning of this session:

Resolved, That we regard the series of acts, known as the adjustment measures, as forming, in their mutual dependence and connection, a system of compromise, the most conciliatory, and the best for the entire country that could be obtained from conflicting sectional interests and opinions, and that, therefore, they ought to be adhered to and carried into faithful execution as a final settlement, in principle and substance, of the dangerous and exciting subjects which they embrace.

No. 3.—Resolutions offered by Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, according to Mr. BAYLY's letter—amended, in italics and brackets:

Resolved, That we regard the series of measures passed at the Thirty-first Congress, commonly called the compromise measures, as a settlement of the questions involved therein, and will abide by them as a permanent adjustment of the sectional controversy, and do hereby declare that good faith and a patriotic regard for the interests of the country demand that the provisions contained in said measures should be strictly maintained and honestly executed.

Resolved, That any act of Congress abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia, without the petition and consent of the owners thereof, or any act abolishing slavery in places within the slaveholding States, purchased by the United States for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, navy-yards, and other like purposes; or any act suppressing the slave trade between the slaveholding States; or any refusal to admit as a State any Territory hereafter applying, because of the existence of slavery therein, [or because of its prohibition therein]; or any act prohibiting the introduction of slaves into New Mexico or Utah; [or any act allowing the introduction of slaves into New Mexico or Utah]; or any act repealing or materially modifying the laws now in force for the recovery of fugitive slaves; [or any act repealing the law to suppress the slave trade in the District of Columbia]; and all agitation which has for its purpose any of the above named objects, will be in violation of the provisions of the said measures of adjustment, and must be regarded as opposed to the best interests of the country, destructive of the peace of the Union, [and is an attempt to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts].

Mr. STANLY. I will take either one of my resolutions in place of the dodging resolutions, from Georgia, of the other side.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia, the original mover of the resolution, withdraw the demand for the previous question, at the suggestion of his colleague, [Mr. HILLYER?]

Mr. JACKSON. In good faith to my colleague I was disposed to allow him to offer his resolution, which is the same as that of Mr. Polk, submitted in the caucus; but notices have been given of so many resolutions, and apprehending the whole day may be consumed in the consideration of them, I decline to withdraw my call for the previous question.

Mr. KING. Let us have the order of business. Mr. HILLYER. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that my colleague—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. KING, of New York. I object to discussion, and call for the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is called to order.

Mr. HILLYER. I wish only—

Mr. BAILEY, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I desired to make an appeal to—

Mr. KING. I object to any discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is called to order! and the Chair must enforce the rules.

Mr. KING. Let us proceed regularly. I insist upon the strict enforcement of the rules of the House.

Mr. BAILEY. I rise, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of information.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. BAILEY. It is to ask my colleague whether he does not entrap the House, and myself especially, by calling for the previous question upon this resolution?

Mr. KING. The practical mode is to vote down the call for the previous question. I call the gentleman to order.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is out of order; and, being called to order by several gentlemen, it is the duty of the Chair to enforce it.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that—

The SPEAKER. The Chair must perform his duty.

Mr. KING. I insist upon my call to order.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope I may have the opportunity to ask—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must perceive that it is the duty of the Chair, however disagreeable it may be, when gentlemen are called to order to enforce the rules. During the demand for the previous question, discussion cannot be allowed except by unanimous consent in any form.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not wish to disturb the order of the House. I will, then, ask the Chair, if the previous question is not seconded, will I have the right of being heard upon the proposition?

Mr. KING. Certainly, if you obtain the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot possibly tell what will come up next.

Mr. BAILEY. I will be heard at some time, then?

Mr. HILLYER. The Chair has decided me to be out of order, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does so decide.

Mr. HILLYER. I do not know by what rule of this House.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. KING. I call the gentleman to order, unless he appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first respond to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILLYER.] The gentleman from Georgia claims the right to interrogate his colleague, [Mr. JACKSON,] upon the subject of his resolution. The Chair decides it is not in order. The gentleman feeling he may possibly be aggrieved under the decision of the Chair, appeals to the Chair for the rule upon which his decision is based. The Chair begs leave to refer the gentleman from Georgia to the fact, that during the demand for the previous question, no debate, no amendment, is in order. No discussion is in order until the call for the previous question is disposed of. There can be no doubt about it, and the Chair must insist upon the gentleman's preserving order.

Mr. HILLYER. The Chair misunderstood my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia rises to a point of order.

Mr. HILLYER. I did not intend to interrogate my colleague. My only purpose was, to ask him to withdraw the previous question, to admit my amendment.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILLYER,] that that is done always under the courtesy of the House, but not under the rules of the House, when they are strictly enforced. It is moved that there be a call of the House.

Mr. GORMAN. I will withdraw my motion for a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on seconding the demand for the previous question. Is there a second for the previous question?

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to inquire—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise to a point of order?

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to make an inquiry, whether it is now in order to move to lay the resolution upon the table.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to make the proposition. It is in order to move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. FOWLER. I move, then, to lay it upon the table, and upon that motion ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

[Cries of "Call the roll!" "Call the roll!"]

Mr. FOWLER. Some gentlemen here are anxious for the previous question, and I will withdraw my motion to lay upon the table.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I object.

Mr. POLK. I renew the motion to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. STANLY. Will a motion for a call of the House take precedence of that motion?

The SPEAKER. It will, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. STANLY. I make that motion, and upon it ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. POLK. At the suggestion of gentlemen, I withdraw my motion to lay on the table.

Mr. BEALE. I renew the motion to lay the motion and all its attendants upon the table.

Mr. HIBBARD. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] moves a call of the House, and upon that motion demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken and resulted—yeas 88, nays 89:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, William Appleton, Barrere, Bartlett, Bennett, Brenton, Brooks, Geo. H. Brown, Buell, Burrows, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Conger, Cullom, George T. Davis, Dean, Dockery, Doty, Dunnham, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Floyd, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gaylord, Goodenow, Goodrich, Grey, Grow, Harper, Haws, Haven, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, Ives, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kulms, Landry, Mace, Mann, Martin, Meacham, Miller, Miner, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Newton, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Penningman, Perkins, Porter, Rantoul, Russell, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Scudell, David L. Seymour, Smart, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Strother, Sutcliffe, Sweetser, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Walbridge, Ward, Washburn, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Williams, and Yates—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Ashe, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Benie, Boeck, Bragg, Breckinridge, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Busby, Caskie, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Edmundson, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gentry, Gorman, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Hart, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Jackson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, Kurtz, Letcher, Lockhart, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McKee, McDonald, McLanahan, McMullin, McQueen, Meade, Millson, Nabers, Outlaw, Praslee, Penn, Phelps, Polk, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Scurry, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Snow, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Starnot, Abner P. Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Stratton, Stuart, George W. Thompson, Venable, Wallace, Walsh, Watkins, Wilcox, and Woodward—89.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, said that he was requested by his colleague, [Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee,] to state that he was confined to his room in consequence of sickness.

So the House refused to have a call.

The question then recurred upon the demand for the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay the resolution and amendments upon the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NABERS asked the reading of the several propositions.

Several members objected.

Mr. TUCK. As this Union-loving, President-making business, can be pursued with more dignity in committee—

Several Voices. Order! Order! Order!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Tuck] must be aware that no remarks are in order.

Mr. TUCK. But I am on the floor to make a motion, and shall do so, as soon as gentlemen are patient—

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman rises to make a motion, he will submit it. The gentleman will excuse the Chair, but as he is called upon by so many to enforce strictly the rules, he will do it, if he has the power.

Mr. TUCK. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a question of order. I remind the Chair, that it was decided after a call for the previous question—

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that a motion to suspend the rules to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is not in order until this motion is disposed of.

[Cries of "Call the roll!" "Call the roll!"]

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 81, nays 102, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Bartlett, Beale, Bennett, Brenton, Brooks, Buell, Burrows, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Conger, George T. Davis, Dean, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Floyd, Fowler, Gaylord, Goodenow, Goodrich, Grow, Harper, Haven, Holladay, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Hunter, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Mann, McMullin, McQueen, Meacham, Millson, Miner, Molony, Morehead, Murray, Newton, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Pennington, Perkins, Powell, Rantoul, Russell, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Stuart, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Stratton, Sweetser, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, and Woodward—81.

YAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, William Appleton, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Bocoock, Bragg, Breckinridge, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Busby, Caskie, Clark, Cobb, Cullom, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dockery, Dunham, Edmundson, Ewing, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gentry, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Hart, Haws, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, Kurtz, Landry, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Martin, Mason, McCorkle, McDonald, McLanahan, Meade, Miller, John Moore, Nabers, Outlaw, Peaslee, Penn, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Price, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scurry, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, George W. Thompson, Venable, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—102.

So the House refused to lay the resolution and amendments upon the table.

The question recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. JACKSON. I desire to know whether it is competent for me, at this time, to change the phraseology of my resolution?

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "No!"]

The SPEAKER. It is competent for the gentleman to withdraw the several motions he has made, and withdraw his resolution, if he chooses.

[Mr. Polk made some remarks not distinctly heard by the reporter.]

Mr. JACKSON. I desire to make a verbal change in the resolution.

Mr. POLK. Is not the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JACKSON] privileged to withdraw the motion for the previous question, and alter the phraseology of his resolution, and renew it?

The SPEAKER. He has that privilege.

Mr. POLK. He does not lose the floor by it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide these points when they arise.

Mr. STANLY. Is it in order to ask what we are going to do now? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JACKSON] has not as yet submitted his proposition. The immediate question before the House is the demand for the previous question.

Mr. STANLY. I object to caucuses in the House.

Mr. BROOKS. If there is no other business before the House, I move that we adjourn. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BROOKS] is not in order.

Mr. JACKSON. I was about to say, that I know very little about the rules of the House.

Mr. STANLY. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remind the gentleman from Georgia, that not one word of discussion is allowable under the rules—discussion is not in order.

Mr. JACKSON. Then I ask that the question be taken now, whether the previous question shall be sustained, or not.

Mr. GORMAN. That is the question.

Mr. DEAN demanded tellers on the second; which were ordered; and Messrs. FULLER of Maine, and EWING were appointed.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg leave to make an inquiry of the Chair, whether this resolution—and I presume it ought to be made before the previous question is sustained—is divisible? I desire a division.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide the proposition when it comes up regularly.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 85.

So the previous question was not sustained.

Mr. HILLYER. I offer the following resolution, as an amendment to the resolution of my colleague; and upon that I ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. In the shape of a substitute, or amendment?

Mr. HILLYER. As an amendment.

The resolution was then read as follows, viz:

Resolved, That the series of acts passed during the first session of the Thirty-first Congress, known as the compromise, are regarded as a final adjustment, and a permanent settlement of the questions therein embraced, and should be maintained and executed as such.

Mr. AVERETT. I think we have had voting and speaking enough upon these questions. The friends of the compromise claim the credit of having settled them. I move to lay—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. MEADE. I presume that proposition—

Mr. ORR. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. MEADE. The proposition is open to amendment—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia rise to a question of order?

Mr. MEADE. I rise to inquire whether the previous question has been demanded?

The SPEAKER. It has been.

Mr. MEADE. Then I ask the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw the demand—

Mr. ORR. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Virginia suspend until the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] submits his question of order?

Mr. ORR. Whenever an objection is made to a resolution, I understand it has to go over.

The SPEAKER. That is the rule.

Mr. ORR. Now, I submit to the House, that the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia upon my right, [Mr. HILLYER], amounts to an objection to the original resolution, and the original resolution must go over.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "No!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR], and refers him to the universal practice of this body. It is true, that if a resolution offered to-day, gives rise to debate, it goes over; but it is also true that the previous question intervening, and cutting off debate, has been allowed ever since I have been a member of this body.

Mr. MEADE. Do I understand that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILLYER] called the previous question on his amendment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did demand the previous question.

Mr. MEADE. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw his demand for the previous question, in order that I may submit, as an amendment, the paper which I hold in my hand, trusting that he will adopt it instead of his own.

Mr. HILLYER. I cannot withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. MEADE. Then I ask the unanimous consent of the House to suffer my amendment to be read.

Mr. SMART. I object.

Mr. BOCOOCK. I move to lay the whole subject upon the table.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to hear the resolution and amendment read before I am called to vote on laying them upon the table.

The SPEAKER. They will be read, if there is no objection.

Mr. SMART. I object.

Mr. JONES. I do not ask it as a privilege. I have a right to hear them read before I am called upon to record my vote.

The SPEAKER. The original resolution and the amendment having been read to the House, the Chair is bound to decide that the gentleman cannot, by his own volition, compel the House to hear them read again.

Mr. HAVEN. I am somewhat in the same dilemma as my friend from Tennessee; and although those papers have been read, I do not understand that the proposition to amend includes the striking out of anything. I desire to know whether they are both to go together. If not, I should like to offer a substitute for them both, which I think—

[Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes that the House will hear the rule in relation to the reading of papers. It is the 57th rule, and is as follows:

57. "When the reading of a paper is called for, and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined by a vote of the House."

The question was then put, "Shall the papers be read?" and it was decided in the affirmative.

The Clerk accordingly read the original resolution and the proposed amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to make a single inquiry of the Chair. If the previous question is sustained, will not the House be brought first to vote upon the amendment, and then upon the original resolution, whether amended or not?

The SPEAKER. That will be the history of the voting of the House.

Mr. STANLY. I want to inquire of the Chair what motion is now pending before the House?

The SPEAKER. The motion now pending is to lay both the original resolution and the amendment upon the table.

Mr. STANLY. The motion is, then, to lay on the table the original secession resolution?

[Loud cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is aware that debate is not in order.

Mr. McMULLIN. I wish to know if, when a resolution is proposed to-day—as this has been by the gentleman from Georgia—and objection is made to it, it does not lie over?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already decided, that if the previous question is sustained—which will have the effect of cutting off debate—under the uniform practice of the House, it will be in order to consider the resolution under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. BOCOOCK. At the request of some friends around me, I will, for the present, withdraw the motion to lay upon the table.

Mr. EDGERTON. I renew the motion to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. HIBBARD demanded the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The question was then put, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 78, nays 104, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Bartlett, Beale, Bennett, Bragg, Breton, Buell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Clingman, Conger, George T. Davis, Dean, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Floyd, Fowler, Gaylord, Goddow, Goodrich, Grow, Harper, Holladay, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Mann, McMullin, McQueen, Meacham, Millson, Miner, Molony, Murray, Newton, Olds, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Pennington, Perkins, Powell, Rantoul, Russell, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Stuart, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Stratton, Sweetser, Benj. Thompson, Tuck, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, and Woodward—78.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, William Appleton, Thos. H. Bayly, Bocoock, Bowie, Breckinridge, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Caskie, Clark, Cobb, Cullom, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dockery, Dunham, Edmundson, Ewing, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gentry, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Hart, Haws, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Martin, Mason, McCorkle, McDonald, McLanahan, Meade, Miller, John Moore, Morehead, Nabers, Outlaw, Peaslee, Penn, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Price, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scurry, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, George W. Thompson, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—104.

So the House refused to lay the resolution and amendment upon the table.

The question recurred upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. VENABLE. If the previous question is sustained, will not the vote be first taken upon the amendment?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair. I have every reason to believe, at least from my limited means of judging, that what is proposed as an amendment is a substitute for the resolution; and I ask whether it can be offered as an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is germane to the subject, and in order.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether what has been offered as an additional resolution, can be offered to-day, if objection is made to it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again decide that point, and trusts that every gentleman on the floor will hear the decision, and that, if there is objection to it, some gentleman will make an appeal. The Chair has stated, three or four times to-day, that under the rules, any resolution offered to-day, giving rise to debate, would go over; but that under the uniform practice of the House, when the previous question is called and sustained—cutting off, as it does, all debate—action can be had upon the matter. The Chair, therefore, decides that this proceeding is in order.

Mr. FOWLER. May we hear the rule read under which that decision is made?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object.

Mr. WASHBURN. I desire to inquire whether this resolution, if not offered as a substitute, is not an additional resolution, and is not, therefore, liable to be objected to? And if objected to, whether it is in order to receive it to-day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair again states that the resolution last offered is an amendment, not a substitute; that upon offering it, the mover demanded the previous question, and if the previous question be sustained, there can be no debate either upon the original resolution or the amendment, and it is in order for the House to dispose of them.

Mr. KING, of New York demanded tellers, on seconding the demand for the previous question; which were ordered, and Messrs. CHANDLER and WILCOX appointed.

The question being put, it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 97, noes 61.

So the previous question received a second.

The question now being, "Shall the main question be now put?"—

Mr. KING, of New York demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. POLK. Will the vote be upon the resolution as amended, or upon the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs leave to state to the gentleman, and for the information of the House, that if the main question is ordered to be now put, the House will be brought first to vote on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILLYER,] as an addition to the original resolution, and, when that is disposed of, the House will be brought to vote upon the original resolution, amended or not, as the case may be.

Mr. FLORENCE. If the substitute for the resolution is adopted, does not that settle the question?

The SPEAKER. It does not. The House would then have to vote on the original resolution as amended.

Mr. BEALE asked for the reading of the amendment.

Mr. STANLY objected.

The question was then taken, "Shall the main question be now put?" and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 109, nays 68, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Beale, Bowie, Bragg, Breckinridge, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cullom, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dockery, Dunham, Edmundson, Ewing, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gentry, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Hart, Hays, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, E. C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Martin, McCorkle, McDonald, McLanahan, McMullin, Meade, Miller, Milson, John Moore, Morehead, Nabers, Olds, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Pensler, Penn, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Powell, Price, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scurry, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, George W. Thompson, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Williams—109.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Bartlett, Bennett, Bocoek, Brenton, Buell, Burrows, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Chandler, Chapman, Conger, George T. Davis, Dean, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Floyd, Fowler, Gaylord, Goodnow, Goodrich, Grow, Harper, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Mann, McQueen, Meacham, Molony, Murray, Newton, Orr, Penningman, Perkins, Rantoul, Russell, Sackett, Scudder, David L. Seynour, Smart, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stratton, Sweetser, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, Woodward, and Yates—68.

So the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. AVERETT. Is it now in order to move that the resolution, with the amendment, do lie upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. AVERETT. Then I make that motion, and upon it I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. POLK. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know, and I ask the Speaker whether, after the House has decided by a vote of the House that the whole subject shall not be laid upon the table, it is in order for the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. AVERETT] to renew the same motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it is in order for the gentleman from Virginia to make his motion, other action having intervened since the question was taken upon the previous motion to lie upon the table. When any business or action by the House has intervened, it is always in order to move to lay upon the table. That motion is a privileged question, and in very many respects similar to that to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were then ordered, forty-two gentlemen rising for that purpose.

Mr. STANLY. I ask the Speaker whether the motion is to lay upon the table the free-soil and secession resolution of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. JACKSON,] or the compromise resolution of his colleague? [Mr. HILLYER.]

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" "Order!"]

The question was then taken, and the result was—yeas 74, nays 102, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Bartlett, Beale, Bennett, Bocoek, Bragg, Brenton, Buell, Joseph Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Chapman, Clingman, Conger, George T. Davis, Dean, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Floyd, Fowler, Gaylord, Goodnow, Goodrich, Grow, Harper, Holladay, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Mann, McQueen, Meacham, Milson, Miner, Molony, Newton, Olds, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Penningman, Perkins, Powell, Rantoul, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Scudder, David L. Seynour, Smart, Benjamin Stanton, Stratton, Sweetser, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, and Woodward—74.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, William Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Bowie, Breckinridge, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Cullom, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dockery, Dunham, Edmundson, Ewing, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gentry, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Hart, Hays, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Martin, Mason, McCorkle, McDonald, McLanahan, Meade, Miller, Morehead, Nabers, Outlaw, Pensler, Penn, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Price, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scurry, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Snow, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, Geo. W. Thompson, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Yates—102.

So the resolution was not laid upon the table.

The question recurred on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. CLINGMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. SACKETT. I rise to a privileged question. This subject is being protracted too far.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. SACKETT. I wish to stop agitation, and move that the House do now adjourn.

[Loud cries of "No!" "No!" "Withdraw your motion!"]

Mr. POLK. I suppose the purpose of the other side is to stave off, until they can marshal their forces.

Mr. SACKETT. I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. BEALE. I desire to know whether it is in order to ask that the amendment be read?

The SPEAKER. It will be again read, if not objected to.

Mr. STANLY. I object. I want nothing more read upon this subject.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BEALE] insists, the Chair will put the question to the House upon ordering the amendment to be read.

Mr. BEALE. I ask that both the original proposition and the amendment shall be read for the information of the House; and I think there will be no objection.

Mr. STANLY. I do object.

The question was then put, and the resolution with the amendment were ordered to be read; and they were read by the Clerk.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish to propound a question to the Chair, for this matter does not seem to be well understood by the House. I desire to know whether the amendment is offered as a substitute to the original resolution or as an addition?

The SPEAKER. It is offered as an amendment, or additional resolution.

The question now being upon the adoption of the amendment to the resolution—

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE demanded the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. WOODWARD. I desire to ask the Chair whether we are to vote upon the original resolution first, or upon the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The vote will first be taken upon the adoption of the amendment as an additional resolution—

Mr. WOODWARD. But if the amendment be an additional resolution, ought not the question to be taken last upon it?

The SPEAKER. The question must first be taken upon the adoption of the amendment, and if it be adopted, it will then be competent for the House to order a division of the question, so that the vote shall first be taken upon the adoption of the original resolution.

Mr. WOODWARD. I was under the impression that the amendment, being an additional resolution, the question should be last taken upon it.

The SPEAKER. Not in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the indulgence of the House to allow me to propound a simple question to the honorable gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILLYER.]

The SPEAKER. It can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDGERTON. I object.

Mr. ALLISON. I only wished to say to the gentleman—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" and confusion.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair must insist upon a rigid execution of the rule. The gentleman cannot proceed.

Mr. VENABLE. I rise to a question of order. In the first place, I will inquire whether the vote is to be first taken upon the original resolution or upon that additional resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already decided that the question must first be taken upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILLYER.]

Mr. ALLISON. I desire also to propound a question to the Chair. I ask if this resolution be adopted to-day, whether the same necessity which calls for its adoption now will not demand that it shall again be adopted to-morrow, again the next day, and so on?

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" "Order!" great confusion in the Hall.]

The question was then taken, and the result was—yeas 103, nays 74, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Beale, Bowie, Breckinridge, Briggs, Brooks, George H. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Cullom, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dockery, Dunham, Edmundson, Ewing, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gentry, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Hart, Hays, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, George W. Jones, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, E. C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Martin, Mason, McCorkle, McDonald, McLanahan, McMullin, Miller, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Nabers, Outlaw, S. W. Parker, Pensler, Penn, Polk, Porter, Price, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, G. W. Thompson, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Williams—103.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Bartlett, Bocoek, Bragg, Brenton, Albert G. Brown, Buell, J. Cable, L. D. Campbell, T. Campbell, Caskie, Chapman, Clingman, Conger, Daniel, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Floyd, Fowler, Gaylord, Goodnow, Goodrich, Grow, Harper, Holladay, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Preston King, Mann, McQueen, Meacham, Meade, Milson, Molony, Newton, Olds, Orr, Penningman, Perkins, Powell, Rantoul, Russell, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Scudder, Smart, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stratton, Sweetser, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, Woodward, and Yates—74.

So the amendment was adopted.

The question then recurred upon the adoption of the resolution as amended.

Mr. HALL demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. MEADE. I ask if it is not competent to divide the question, so that a separate vote shall be taken upon each resolution?

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the resolution as amended is so divisible, that the question can be taken first upon the original resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. JACKSON.]

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask if the first resolution is not divisible? I think the first clause, down to the word "included," will make a separate and distinct proposition from the latter clause.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion, that the resolution, as he understands it to be offered by the gentleman from Georgia, is not susceptible of division.

Mr. STANLY. From that decision, I take an appeal.

Mr. STUART. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. STANLY. I think the gentleman will have to wait till he can get the floor first. I ask the Chair, whether I am not entitled to the floor, and whether I have not a right to say anything upon the appeal?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot debate his appeal, but he has the right to state his proposition. The gentleman will be good enough to state his distinct proposition.

Mr. STANLY. My distinct proposition is, that down to the word "included" is a proposition upon which a separate vote may be taken; and the remainder of the resolution is another proposition upon which a separate vote may also be taken. I will read it. The first clause is as follows:

"Resolved, That we recognize the binding efficacy of the compromises of the Constitution, and believe it to be the intention of the people generally, as we hereby declare it to be ours individually, to abide such compromises, and to sustain the laws necessary to carry them out—the provision for the delivery of fugitive slaves and the act of the last Congress for that purpose included."

The SPEAKER. That is a proposition which would stand by itself, the Chair will admit.

Mr. STANLY. Then, with due deference to the Chair, I submit that the resolution is divisible. The latter clause reads thus:

"And that we deprecate all further agitation of questions growing out of that provision."

The SPEAKER. What provision? That refers to the first clause of the resolution.

Mr. STANLY. I call the Chair to order for interrupting me while I was reading a proposition. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a right to be heard to the exclusion of all others, under an express rule of the House.

Mr. STANLY. The Chair is right. He has a right to be heard to the exclusion, but not to interrupt me while I was reading my proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was endeavoring to facilitate the gentleman's object by stating his proposition clearly.

Mr. STANLY. The Speaker's mind is made up, I suppose, but I take an appeal from his decision nevertheless.

Mr. WOODWARD. I desire to ask this simple question. Would one of these clauses be intelligible without the other, or grammatical?

Several MEMBERS. Certainly not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The Chair begs leave to call the attention of the House to the language of the resolution, in order to show the grounds for his decision. The first clause of the resolution reads:

"Resolved, That we recognize the binding efficacy of the compromises of the Constitution, and believe it to be the intention of the people generally, as we hereby declare it to be ours individually, to abide such compromises, and to sustain the laws necessary to carry them out—the provision for the delivery of fugitive slaves and the act of the last Congress for that purpose included."

The Chair admits that proposition would stand alone.

Mr. FITCH. I beg leave to state, that I think that proposition would not stand alone; because it refers to the substantive proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair differs with the gentleman upon that point. The next proposition would then read:

"Resolved. And that we deprecate all further agitation of questions growing out of that provision."

This refers to the first part of the resolution.

Mr. STANLY. I withdraw my appeal, because I see that the resolution was so framed that it cannot be divided, as stated by the gentleman from Indiana. The Chair is right. I withdraw my appeal.

Mr. CONGER. I submit whether the first resolution is not divisible in this respect?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already decided that it is not divisible.

Mr. CONGER. I submit that the first part of the resolution refers to the compromise measures and the Constitution, while the latter makes reference to the fugitive slave law. I submit that these are two distinct propositions.

[Cries of "Order!" ]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to state his proposition.

Mr. AVERETT. Has not the previous question been ordered?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. AVERETT. Then I submit that the gentleman is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to ask a division of the question, and to state his proposition. It will then be for the House to decide whether it is divisible or not.

Mr. CONGER. I will again state my proposition. The first part of this resolution provides for maintaining the compromises of the Constitution. The second provides for carrying out the fugitive slave law, as one of those measures. Now, I can readily conceive that gentlemen may unite in support of these propositions, without being united in support of the other. If the resolution is read so as to stop where it refers to the fugitive slave law—

[Cries of "Order!" ]

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the resolution is not divisible.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!" ]

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Did I understand the Chair to decide that a vote could not be taken upon supporting the fugitive-slave law as a separate proposition?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman asks for a division, he will state his proposition, and the Chair will decide upon it.

Mr. MARSHALL. I will state, that, as I understand it, the resolution is susceptible of division. We can have a separate vote upon maintaining the compromises of the Constitution in general terms, and we can have a separate vote upon maintaining the fugitive slave law; and I want that separation made.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will designate the particular point at which the resolution can be divided, the Chair will then decide in relation to it.

Mr. WOODWARD. I would inquire of the Chair, whether it is not as well necessary that the two clauses should have a separate and independent grammatical construction, as well as that they should be distinct substantive propositions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will respond to the gentleman's inquiry, when he understands what is the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL.]

Mr. MARSHALL. I understand the rule to be, that a question is divisible whenever you can take away a part, and leave that remaining, in substance, an intelligible proposition. You are not to stop to inquire whether it is according to grammar.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman specify the point at which he asks the resolution to be divided?

Mr. MARSHALL. I think it might be divided after the words "carry them out."

The SPEAKER. Then what would remain? If the first part of the resolution were stricken out, the remainder would then read:

"Resolved. The provision for the delivery of fugitive slaves and the act of the last Congress for that purpose included, and that we deprecate all further agitation of questions growing out of that provision," &c.

The Chair decides that it is not divisible at all.

Mr. MARSHALL. I would suggest to the Chair that if he may put in the word "resolution," he may also supply such words as will make it read intelligibly.

Several MEMBERS. "No!" "No!"

Mr. HIBBARD. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. MARSHALL. I do.

Mr. HALL. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

The question was taken and the appeal was laid upon the table.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move to lay the whole subject upon the table—that is, the original resolution, with the amendment.

Mr. HALL. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FLOYD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the House do now adjourn, when will this question come up?

The SPEAKER. When the House again meets.

Mr. GORMAN. I will inquire if—

Mr. ORR. Is not the roll being called?

The SPEAKER. The calling of the roll has not yet commenced.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to know if the Chair decided the proposition of the gentleman over the way, [Mr. STANLY?]

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not decided that question, but will do so when the question comes up.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to inquire if it is the intention of the gentlemen on the other side to worry us out?

Mr. BAYLY. We will worry them, if they try it.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" ]

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn, and there were—yeas 57, nays 115; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ashe, Babcock, Barrere, Bartlett, Brenton, Briggs, Buell, Burrows, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Clingman, Conger, Culom, Curtis, George T. Davis, Dean, Doty, Eastman, Edgerton, Ewing, Floyd, Fowler, Goodrich, Grow, Hunter, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Preston King, Kuhns, Mann, Martin, McQueen, Meacham, Miner, Molony, Newton, Penniman, Perkins, Rantoul, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Smart, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, Woodward, and Yates—57.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Averett, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Beale, Boock, Bowie, Bragg, Breckinridge, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Caskie, Clark, Cobb, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Doekery, Durkee, Edmundson, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Goodnow, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Hamilton, Harper, Hart, Haws, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Horsford, Houston, Howard, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Ingersoll, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, Kurtz, Landry, Leitcher, Lockhart, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McDonald, McLanahan, Meade, Miller, Millson, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Nabers, Olds, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Phelps, Polk, Powell, Price, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scudder, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham F. Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Stratton, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, Sweetser, Benjamin Thompson, George W. Thompson, Tuck, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Williams—115.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw that motion to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. EDGERTON. I renew the motion to lay the resolution on the table, and demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to a question of order. I wish to make the simple inquiry, whether if one resolution be laid upon the table, there being two in one series, both be not laid upon the table?

Mr. EDGERTON. I moved to lay both upon the table.

Mr. HIBBARD. That makes it plain.

The yeas and nays were then ordered.

Mr. HENN. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Let's adjourn; the question will come up in the morning.

Mr. GENTRY. I desire to know what will be the effect of adjourning now? Will this question come up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The first effect will be to bring the House together at twelve o'clock to-morrow. [Laughter.]

Mr. GENTRY. Will this question come up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, it will be the first business in order to-morrow.

Mr. GENTRY. Then I vote for an adjournment.

Mr. GORMAN. Do I understand the Chair to decide that this will be the first business up in the morning?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that if the House adjourn now, that this resolution will be the first business in order, after the reading of the Journal, to-morrow morning.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, I rise to a point of order. It is, whether a motion to adjourn is in order? A motion was made to lay the resolution upon the table, and the House was divided upon that, and we have had no vote announced upon that.

The SPEAKER. A motion to lay upon the table, and a motion to adjourn, are both privileged questions, but the motion to adjourn having the precedence, is clearly in order.

Mr. McMULLIN. I request the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EDGERTON] to withdraw his motion, and we will adjourn.

Mr. POLK. I desire to know the question now pending?

The SPEAKER. It is that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MARSHALL. I want to understand how the Chair decides the question I made as a question of order. The House divided upon the question of adjournment. The yeas and nays were called upon that question, and the House decided that they would not adjourn. A gentleman then rose to make a motion to lay the resolution upon the table. No division of the House has occurred upon that, and the yeas and nays were ordered upon it; and my proposition is, that until the House does divide upon it, the motion to adjourn is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order taken by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL.]

Mr. HENN. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I renew the motion to adjourn.

Mr. POLK. I am willing to vote for the adjournment, provided the gentleman from North Carolina desires to marshal his forces upon the other side by to-morrow morning.

Mr. STANLY. Did the gentleman refer to me?

Mr. POLK. No, I did not; I referred to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] raises this question of order: A motion was made, and a vote taken upon the adjournment; following that, a motion was made to lay the resolution upon the table, and upon that proposition the yeas and nays were ordered. Then followed another motion to adjourn, which is now pending. The Chair has no doubt that the motion to adjourn is in order, for the reason that the House has taken such action as renders it perfectly in order for the House to adjourn, otherwise the House would never adjourn until some distinct vote was taken upon some measure before it. The Chair has no doubt of the correctness of the decision. Does the gentleman appeal?

Mr. MARSHALL. No, sir.

Mr. WILCOX. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Sooner than consume the time of the House, I will withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. FOWLER. I renew the motion to adjourn.

Mr. FLORENCE. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

They were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 64, nays 103; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ashe, Averett, Bartlett, Brenton, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Clingman, Conger, Dean, Dockery, Doty, Eastman, Edgerton, Floyd, Fowler, Goodrich, Grow, Harper, Holladay, Horsford, Hunter, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Mann, McQueen, Meacham, Molony, Newton, Orr, Perkins, Powell, Russell, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Scudder, Smart, Benjamin Stanton, Stratton, Sutherland, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Ward, Washburn, Wells, Alexander White, Williams, Woodward, and Yates—64.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, William Appleton, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Beale, Bocoock, Bowie, Bragg, Breckinridge, George H. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Caskie, Clark, Cobb, Curtis, Daniel, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dunham, Durkee, Edmundson, Ewing, Faulkner, Picklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Goodenow, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Hart, Haws, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Howard, T. M. Howe, Ingersoll, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, George W. Jones, Kurtz, Landry, Lecher, Lockhart, Humphrey Marshall, McCorkle, McMullin, Meade, Miller, Milson, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Nabers, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Penniman, Phelps, Polk, Price, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scudder, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sweetser, Benjamin Thompson, George W. Thompson, Walsh, Watkins, Addison White, and Wilcox—103.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HENN. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. A motion for a call of the House is not in order during the pendency of the previous question, which has been ordered to be put.

The question was then taken upon the motion to lay the resolution upon the table, and there were—yeas 65, nays 97; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, David J. Bailey, Bartlett, Beale, Bocoock, Buell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Chapman, Clingman, Conger, Dean, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Floyd, Fowler, Gaylord, Goodenow, Goodrich, Grow, Harper, Holladay, Horsford, Thomas M. Howe, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Mann, McMullin, McQueen, Meacham, Milson, Miner, Molony, Newton, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Penniman, Perkins, Powell, Rantoul, Russell, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Scudder, Smart, Benjamin Stanton, Stratton, Sweetser, Benj. Thompson, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, Woodward, and Yates—65.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, William Appleton, Thos. H. Bayly, Bowie, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dockery, Dunham, Edmundson, Ewing, Faulkner, Picklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Hart, Haws, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, George W. Jones, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Lecher, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Martin, McCorkle, McDonald, Meade, Miller, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Nabers, Outlaw, Peaslee, Penn, Phelps, Polk, Price, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, George W. Thompson, Venable, Walsh, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Williams—97.

So the House refused to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. BUELL. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. WILCOX demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. AVERETT. I would ask if a motion for a call of the House will be in order? There is a very thin House, and I desire a full vote.

The SPEAKER. Such a motion is not in order.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 81, nays 86; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ashe, Averett, Bartlett, Beale, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Buell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Clingman, Conger, Cobb, Conger, Dean, Dockery, Doty, Eastman, Edgerton, Ewing, Floyd, Fowler, Gaylord, Gentry, Goodenow, Goodrich, Grow, Hamilton, Harper, Holladay, Horsford, Thomas M. Howe, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Mann, Martin, McMullin, McQueen, Meacham, Meade, Miner, Molony, Newton, Orr, Outlaw, Perkins, Powell, Rantoul, Richardson, Russell, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Scudder, Smart, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Stratton, Sutherland, Sweetser, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Ward, Washburn, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Williams, Woodward, and Yates—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, William Appleton, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bocoock, Bowie, Bragg, Breckinridge, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Caskie, Clark, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dunham, Durkee, Edmundson, Ewing, Faulkner, Picklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Hamilton, Hart, Haws, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Landry, Lecher, Lockhart, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, McCorkle, McDonald, Miller, Milson, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Nabers, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Phelps, Polk, Price, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanly, Richard H. Stanton, Ab'm P. Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, George W. Thompson, Walsh, Watkins, and Wilcox—86.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the adoption of the first resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Is it in order to move to lay the resolutions upon the table?

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair it is not.

[Cries of "Call the roll!" "Call the roll!"]

The question was then taken upon the adoption of the first branch of the proposition, being the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. JACKSON,] and it was agreed to—yeas 101, nays 64, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, William Appleton, Thos. H. Bayly, Bocoock, Bowie, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Caskie, Clark, Cobb, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dockery, Dunham, Edmundson, Ewing, Faulkner, Picklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gentry, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Hart, Haws, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, George W. Jones, Kurtz, Landry, Lecher, Lockhart, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Martin, Mason, McCorkle, McDonald, McMullin, Meade, Miller, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Nabers, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Phelps, Polk, Price, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, George W. Thompson, Venable, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Williams—101.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, D. J. Bailey, Barrere, Hart, et al., Brenton, George H. Brown, Buell, J. Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chapman, Clingman, Conger, Dean, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Floyd, Fowler, Gaylord, Goodenow, Goodrich, Grow, Harper, Holladay, Horsford, Thomas M. Howe, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Preston King, Kuhns, Mann, McQueen, Meacham, Milson, Miner, Molony, Newton, Orr, Penniman, Perkins, Powell, Rantoul, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Scudder, Smart, Benjamin Stanton, Stratton, Sweetser, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, Woodward, and Yates—64.

So the first branch of the proposition was adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which that resolution was adopted, and to lay that motion upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the adoption of the remaining resolution, being the one offered by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILLYER.]

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Have we not taken the vote upon dividing the proposition—upon the first branch?

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs leave to state that the vote has just been taken upon the first branch of the proposition, which was the original resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. JACKSON.]

Mr. MARSHALL. The point I wish to present to the Chair, is this: The question came up upon adopting the resolution as amended. That was the question propounded. A division of that question was asked. We have voted upon the first branch of that division, and is the whole question put as required by the rule until we vote upon the second branch—in other words, can the motion to reconsider clinch the first proposition and leave the second to be lost?

The SPEAKER. It can, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. MARSHALL. I appeal from that decision.

Mr. STANLY. I move to lay that appeal upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. Do I understand the gentleman from Kentucky to make the point of order that it is not in order to move the reconsideration? If that is the point—

Mr. MARSHALL. I will withdraw my appeal.

Mr. JENKINS. I move the House adjourn. The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. SMART demanded the yeas and nays upon the remaining branch of the proposition; which were ordered.

Mr. EDGERTON. Mr. Speaker—[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" "The roll is being called."] "The roll is being called."

Mr. EDGERTON. I addressed the Chair before the roll was commenced.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman address the Chair until there was a response.

Mr. EDGERTON. I did address the Chair prior to the call.

[Cries of "It is too late!" "It is too late!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be gratified to hear what the gentleman has to say.

Mr. EDGERTON. I rose to a question of order, and I addressed the Chair before the call was commenced.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. EDGERTON. I ask—

[Cries of "I object!" "I object!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is bound to rule the gentleman out of order.

The question was then taken upon the remaining branch of the proposition, which was Mr. HILLYER's amendment, and it was agreed to—yeas 100, nays 65, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Wm. Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Bowie, Breckinridge, Brooks, George H. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dockery, Dunham, Edmundson, Ewing, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gentry, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Hart, Haws, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hubbard, Hillyer, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Geo. W. Jones, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Letcher, Lockhart, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Martin, Mason, McCormick, McDonald, McMullin, Miller, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Nabers, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Polk, Porter, Price, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, George W. Thompson, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—100.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, David J. Bailey, Barrero, Bardett, Bocock, Bragg, Brenton, Buell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Caskey, Chapman, Clingan, Conger, Daniel, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Floyd, Fowler, Gaylord, Goodenow, Goodrich, Grow, Harper, Holladay, Horsford, Thos. M. Howe, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Preston King, Mann, McQueen, Meacham, Meade, Milson, Miner, Molony, Newton, Orr, Pennington, Perkins, Powell, Rantoul, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Scudder, Smart, Benjamin Stanton, Sweetser, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, and Woodward—65.

So the second branch of the proposition was adopted.

Mr. BRIGGS, previous to the announcement of the vote, said: I ask permission of the House to vote, not having been inside the bar at the calling of my name.

A VOICE. I object.

Mr. BRIGGS. Had I been here to vote, I would have voted in the affirmative.

Before the result was announced,

Mr. STANLY said: Mr. Speaker, I was in my seat when the roll was called. I decline to vote, and will publish my reasons for my constituents, and will not trouble the House.

Mr. STANLY handed the Reporter the following:

I asked to be excused from voting, because I believe the resolution is carefully framed to enable Democratic Free-Soilers, and Southern Secessionists, to appear to favor the compromise, and yet to be able to say at home in particular localities, that they did not vote to "abide by the compromise measures"—to regard them as a finality.

The resolution was, as first offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Fitch,] in these words:

"Resolved, That we recognize the binding efficacy of the compromises of the Constitution, and believe it to be the intention of the people generally, as we hereby declare it to be ours individually, to abide such compromises, and to sustain the laws necessary to carry them out—the provision for the delivery of fugitive slaves included—and that we deprecate all further agitation of questions growing out of that provision, of the questions embraced in the acts of the last Congress known as the compromise, and of questions generally connected with the institution of slavery, as unnecessary, useless, and dangerous."

The words, "and the act of the last Congress for that purpose," were inserted on consultation with several Democrats, including the gentleman from Georgia, as follows:

"Resolved, That we recognize the binding efficacy of the compromises of the Constitution, and believe it to be the intention of the people generally, as we hereby declare it to be ours individually, to abide such compromises, and to sustain the laws necessary to carry them out—the provision for the delivery of fugitive slaves [and the act of the last Congress for that purpose] included; and that we deprecate all further agitation of questions growing out of that provision, of the questions embraced in the acts of the last Congress known as the compromise, and of questions generally connected with the institution of slavery, as unnecessary, useless, and dangerous."

I object to voting upon resolutions, when my own course may be misunderstood, and when my vote may enable others to be misunderstood, who so desire. I object to all party resolutions on slavery in this House. I think Southern men—

Union men, anti-Secession men—should act together upon resolutions relating to the compromise acts. I believe the resolutions of the gentleman from Georgia will enable Southern Secessionists to appear as favoring the compromise measures, and to deny at home that they did ever vote to abide by them—to regard them as a "final settlement."

I know no party in matters connected with slavery and the compromise acts. They are questions above all party considerations. I have offered a resolution, introduced in the Democratic caucus by a member from Tennessee, [Mr. Polk,] as mentioned in the letter of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Bayly] in the early part of the session. I have offered another, with amendments, as handed to the Globe Reporter, and read at the Speaker's table this morning, numbered three. It is the resolution offered in the Democratic caucus (see Mr. Bayly's letter) by the member from Arkansas, with the amendments noted by me in the resolutions handed to the Globe Reporter. I take either of these, and will vote for any distinct, intelligible resolution, offered by Whig or Democrat, approving of the compromise measures.

But I will not vote on any resolution, no matter by whom offered, that may enable dodgers to appear what they are not; that will enable Free-Soilers and Secessionists to stand on the same platform, and make the slavery question a plaything, a mere "game," as it has been made by Van Buren & Co., in 1840-'44-'48, and as Messrs. Hallett, Rantoul, Preston King, and others of like political opinions, wish to make it in the elections of 1852.

Reasons more in detail I will give hereafter.

Mr. HILLYER moved that the vote just taken be reconsidered, and that that motion do lie upon the table; which motion was agreed to.

So the proposition as adopted is as follows:

Resolved, That we recognize the binding efficacy of the compromises of the Constitution, and believe it to be the intention of the people generally, as we hereby declare it to be ours individually, to abide such compromises, and to sustain the laws necessary to carry them out—the provision for the delivery of fugitive slaves, and the act of the last Congress for that purpose included—and that we deprecate all further agitation of questions growing out of that provision, of the questions embraced in the acts of the last Congress known as the compromise, and of questions generally connected with the institution of slavery, as unnecessary, useless, and dangerous.

Resolved, That the series of acts passed during the first session of the Thirty-first Congress, known as the compromise, are regarded as a final adjustment and a permanent settlement of the questions therein embraced, and should be maintained and executed as such.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved the House adjourn, which motion was agreed to.

And the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, April 6, 1852.

To the Editor of the Congressional Globe:

My being absent from the House yesterday at the time the final vote was taken on Colonel JACKSON's resolution in reference to the compromise, and the amendment of Mr. HILLYER, may require explanation, particularly as it appears from the Journal that I moved to lay the resolution of Colonel JACKSON on the table. My early views as to the settlement of the question subsequently embraced in the several acts of Congress, known as the compromise, are familiar to all my friends, and were expressed by a letter to my constituents several months before the action of Congress. Believing it unnecessary and improper to agitate any of the questions included in the compromise acts, as they were the laws of the land, and generally acquiesced in by the people, the reaffirming them by Congress, neither made them more binding nor acceptable to the country: I, therefore, for the purpose of preventing a renewal of those exciting scenes which occurred in the Thirty-first Congress, and to promote harmony and peace in the country, moved to lay the resolution on the table, believing this to be the most prudent course at the time. This motion not prevailing, and fully believing from the effort made to postpone a direct vote, it would be at a late hour before the House could obtain direct action on the resolutions, I left for my lodging. The day being inclement, I was detained longer than I anticipated. On my return to the House the roll was being called on Mr. HILLYER's amendment, and, my name being passed, I had not an opportunity of recording my vote, which I regret, as I should have voted for the original resolution and amendment. Very respectfully,
J. M. H. DEALE.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, April 7, 1852.

To the Editor of the Congressional Globe:

Sir: Having been detained, by indisposition, from my seat in the House on Monday, the 5th instant, when the final vote was taken upon the adjustment resolutions of Messrs. JACKSON and HILLYER, of Georgia, I desire to state that, if I had been present, I should have voted for each of those resolutions, and I doubt not, in doing so, should have reflected the will of almost if not the entire constituency that I have the honor to represent. Very respectfully, ISHAM G. HARRIS.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. WRIGHTMAN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the ascertainment of public lands and the settlement of land titles in New Mexico, and for other purposes.

Also, a bill to provide for the survey of the public lands in New Mexico, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. ROBBINS: The petition of William W. Jurvel, Esq., asking pay for the witnesses examined before the commissioner appointed to take testimony in the case of the contested election in the fourth district of Pennsylvania, in the Thirty-first Congress.

By Mr. MILLER: The petition of 247 citizens of Randolph county, Missouri, praying Congress for a grant of alternate sections of public land, to aid in the construction of the North Missouri Railroad.

By Mr. MACE: The memorial of Dr. Hartwell Carver and his associates, asking a law to construct a railroad from some point on the Mississippi or Missouri rivers, or from Lake Michigan, to the Pacific ocean.

By Mr. DURKEE: The remonstrance of G. W. Mygatt and 209 others, of the county of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, against the renewal of Woodworth's patent.

By Mr. DOTY: The petition of E. Fox Cook, President of the Cascade and Lake Michigan Railroad Company, asking a grant of land to said company in aid of the construction of said road.

Also, the petition of A. G. Cook, Charles J. Randall and others, asking a mail route from Theresa to Columbus, by Mayville, Horriken, Juneau, Oak Grove, and Lowell.

By Mr. MARSHALL, of California: Petition of the State officers and both branches of the Legislature of California, for the establishment of a branch mint at San Francisco.

Also, the petition of merchants and citizens of San Francisco for the same purpose.

By Mr. —: The petition of heirs of Captain Thomas Shubrick, of South Carolina, for commutation pay.

By Mr. FICKLIN: The petition of H. H. McPherson, and numerous other citizens of Washington, praying for free suffrage and the abolition of the poll tax as a qualification for voting under the city charter.

By Mr. WRIGHTMAN: The memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, praying Congress that the law organizing the Territory may be so amended as to allow an annual session of ninety, in lieu of forty days; to provide for the payment of interpreters and translators, and two sets of clerks.

Also, a joint resolution of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, memorializing Congress, in consequence of doubts which "exist in the mind of the comptroller of the United States" in regard to the legality of the late session of the Legislature, to legalize the same so as to conclude all such doubts, and declaring that the Legislative Assembly has no doubt on the subject.

Also, the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, praying Congress to provide by law for the enfranchising of certain Mexicans, resident in New Mexico, who declared their intention of retaining their character as Mexican citizens, on condition that they renounce allegiance to Mexico and take the oath of allegiance to the United States.

Also, the memorial of a citizen of New Mexico, with accompanying papers, praying that provision be made for paying a commission which, by authority of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, drew up a code of laws for that Territory.

By Mr. FLORENCE: The memorial of Harriet Ward, of Philadelphia, praying the passage of an explanatory act of the "act of the Senate No. 279, first session of the Twenty-ninth Congress, granting her a pension as the widow of Joseph Ward, gunner's mate, United States Navy."

By Mr. FOWLER: The remonstrance of C. Nash and 142 others legal voters of Norfolk county, Massachusetts, against the reestablishment of the practice of flogging in the Navy.

By Mr. HOUSTON: The petition of sundry citizens of Alabama, praying the establishment of a mail route from Jonesboro', Alabama, to York, in Walker county, Alabama.

By Mr. KUHN: The petition of James B. McCright, Sen., and other citizens of Pennsylvania, praying Congress to authorize by law the construction of a railroad from Council Bluffs, on the Missouri river, and extending up the valley of the Platte river, to the South Path, in the Rocky Mountains, to California and Oregon.

By Mr. AIKEN: The petition of a number of citizens of Charleston, South Carolina, for a light in the harbor.

By Mr. WELLS: A petition of certain citizens of Fulton county, New York, praying for a donation of public lands towards the completion of the Saratoga and Sackett's Harbor Railroad.

By Mr. FULLER, of Maine: The remonstrance of Matthew Hastings and 66 others, citizens of Calais, Maine, against the passage of any law which shall render more valuable to Thomas Blanchard, or his assigns, a patent for turning irregular forms.

By Mr. STUART: The petition of 2,300 citizens of Michigan, asking an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at the mouth of the Kalamazoo river, in that State.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 6, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, in answer to a resolution of the Senate calling upon him to express his opinion as to the expediency of a reconnaissance of the routes of navigation in the Northern seas, and in the China and Japan seas; and whether any vessels belonging to the service can be used for that purpose; and, also, what would be the expense of such a reconnaissance; which was read, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a report of the Chief of the Ordnance Bureau, as to the necessity of establishing suitable depôts for the preservation of gunpowder belonging to the United States; which was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a petition of citizens of Dallas county, Alabama, remonstrating against an extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. RHETT presented the petition of John W. Stuckey, assistant marshal for taking the seventh census in Sumner district, South Carolina, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BORLAND presented a petition of citizens of Clark county, Arkansas, remonstrating against an extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. WADE presented a petition of residents of Ohio, praying the enactment of such laws as will authorize the erection of bridges over the Ohio, and other navigable rivers; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, presented the petition of Absalom Kyle and William C. Kyle, praying the compensation for transporting the mail, due according to the terms of their contract; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of J. H. Jones, praying that land may be granted to settlers on the Menomonee Purchase, who are not possessed of other land; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I present the memorial of Henry O'Reilly, proposing a system of intercommunication by mail and telegraph between the Atlantic and Pacific States. I would state in presenting this memorial, that Mr. O'Reilly has had great experience in the business of telegraphs throughout the United States, especially in the Southern and Western States. He proposes to establish a line of telegraphs from the Mississippi valley to the Pacific. He asks no appropriation of money or lands from the Government; he asks no donation, no grant, no gifts of any kind. He only asks to be protected along the line, so that his communication can be kept up. He suggests, in his memorial, that, inasmuch as present laws provide for a line of military posts from the Mississippi valley to the Pacific, those posts shall be so arranged that they may protect the telegraphic communication that is to be established along that line. The suggestion is, that instead of establishing large posts, with a large number of men at each, you should reduce them so that they shall be twenty miles apart, and only twenty men, or other small number, at each, and thus keep up the communication throughout the line. He also suggests that these men along that line may be made the instruments of carrying the mail, each post sending a file of soldiers, when the mail arrives, to the next post with it, and thus carry the mail at the same time that they effect a line of communication, and protect the emigrant route. The object of his memorial is to establish a telegraph; but he suggests, in connection with that, these other advantages that would result from it. He suggests, also, in connection with it, that by encouraging a system of emigration, to be established along the line, by throwing the lands open to actual settlers, it would soon become a populated country. These other considerations, however, are merely incidental, and may be adopted by Congress or not. All he asks is permission to establish a telegraphic line from the Mississippi valley, where the wires now terminate, to the Pacific ocean, and to be protected by this line of military posts, so that he can keep up the communication for the benefit both of the Government and of the public.

I will state that this same plan was laid before a railroad convention at St. Louis in 1849, and received their approval. It is the firm conviction of all those living in the Mississippi valley—of the intelligent men who have directed their attention to the subject, that this line could be well protected, and thus the means of communication kept up constantly between the Atlantic and Pacific. Mr. O'Reilly states, in his memorial, that within two years from this time, with this line completed, he would be able to deliver the European news on the shores of the Pacific, within one week from the time it left the European continent. I move that the memorial be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Territories.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The motion to print will go to the Committee on Printing under the rule.

Mr. BORLAND. I wish to suggest that it would save time to order the printing now. It is a matter of interest, and I suppose there can be no doubt as to what would be the report of the Committee on Printing. By unanimous consent, I suppose the printing can now be ordered.

The PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent, the printing can now be ordered.

There being no objection, the question was then taken, and the motion to print was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Charles S. Matthews, Charles Wood, and James Hall, reported it back with an amendment.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the bill for the relief of Thomas Develin, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of John McAvoy, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Nathan Weston, jr., late additional paymaster in the United States Army, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Russell & Jones, surviving partners of Brown, Russell, & Co., asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee of Claims; which was agreed to.

MANUFACTURE OF PERCUSSION CAPS.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Richard M. Bouton, praying for compensation from the United States Government for the use of the machinery discovered by him for the manufacture of percussion caps, has instructed me to report a bill, accompanied by a written report. In making out this report and bill, we found that there were three persons equally interested in this invention, which is a machine for making and filling percussion caps; and the committee has instructed me to report a bill that covers the case of all three. We do not separate them. But I find that the Committee on Naval Affairs has already reported a bill in favor of one of the parties—for the relief of the widow of Marvin W. Fisher, granting to her $20,000. We report $5,000 in the same case, after having thoroughly examined the subject. I ask that the bill reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs may be taken up, so that I may offer this bill as an amendment to it, that both may lie upon the table together.

The PRESIDENT. When that bill comes up this can be offered as an amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. It may, perhaps, be overlooked then, and both bills might accidentally be passed.

Mr. DAVIS. Report this bill and let it go on the docket.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will pursue that course. I accordingly now report a bill for the relief of Richard M. Bouton, George Wright, and the widow of Marvin W. Fisher.

The bill was read, and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BADGER, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to amend and to extend the provisions of an act, approved July 29, 1846, and entitled "An act in relation to the payment of claims;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

MAIL SERVICE ON THE OHIO AND MISSISSIPPI RIVERS.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask leave to introduce a bill, of which I did not give formal notice; but, I think, that, from my own remarks, and those of other Senators, the other day, sufficient notice was given of my intention to introduce it. It is a bill to establish mail lines on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers.

The PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent to obtain leave to introduce the bill now, notice not having been given.

There being no objection, leave was granted; and the bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask that the bill may have its second reading now, with a view to reference; and I wish that it may be read through for the information of the Senate.

The bill was read a second time.

It proposes that the Postmaster General be required to establish lines of mail service on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, from Louisville, Kentucky, and from St. Louis, Missouri, to New Orleans, Louisiana, in proper connection with the lines now in operation on the Ohio river above Louisville and on the Cumberland river; and cause the mails to be carried on those lines once a day; and that the service thus required be procured in the same way, and in conformity with the general laws and regulations of the Post Office Department, from the lowest and best bidder, by contract, after advertisement made and published in the regular and usual manner.

It was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

A message from the President of the United States was received, by Mr. M. P. FILLMORE, his Secretary, announcing that he had signed the enrolled bill entitled "An act amendatory of the act entitled 'An act to provide for holding the courts of the United States in case of the sickness or other disability of the judges of the district courts,' approved July 29th, 1850."

BILL PASSED.

The engrossed bill, entitled "An act for the relief of James Jones," was read a third time and passed.

BILLS FROM THE HOUSE.

The following bills from the House of Representatives, were severally read a first and second time by their titles, and referred to their appropriate committees, as follows:

To the Committee on Pensions:

A bill for the relief of Isaac Cobb;
A bill for the relief of William Dwelly;
A bill for the relief of Catherine Clark;
A bill for the relief of Jacob Shade;
A bill for the relief of Thomas P. Dudley;
A bill for the relief of George Cassady;
A bill for the relief of John Hazen;
A bill for the relief of David Murphy, of Ohio;
A bill for the relief of Jonas D. Platt, of New York;

A bill to increase the pension of Henry Click, of Cocke county, Tennessee;

A bill for the relief of B. E. Bennett; and
A bill for the relief of Maurice K. Simons.

To the Committee on Private Land Claims:

A bill for the relief of the heirs of Jeremiah Wingate;

A bill for the relief of Ira Baldwin;
A bill for the relief of Robert Nelson;

A bill for the relief of the heirs of William McFarland; and

A bill for the relief of the heirs of Semoice, a friendly Creek Indian.

To the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill for the relief of Sergeant Leonard Skinner.
To the Committee on Naval Affairs:
A bill for the relief of James A. Fawns; and

A bill for the relief of Monmouth B. Hart, Joel Kelly, and William Close, securities for the late Benjamin F. Hart, a purser in the United States Navy.

CREEK INDEMNITY CLAIM.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to furnish to the Senate all information in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, showing the names and number of claimants of the liquidated balance of indemnity due to friendly Creek Indians for losses in the Creek war of 1812, and the amounts respectively due to them.

Mr. S. I expect to call up the subject-matter of that resolution for the consideration of the Senate at an early day. The statement which it requires, will give information necessary to illustrate the nature and character of the claim referred to. I hope that there will be no objection to considering the resolution at this time, as it merely asks for information with respect to business which must necessarily come before the Senate at an early day.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

INDIAN COMMISSIONERS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. WELLER. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate, first, whether the Indian commissioners or agents in the State of California, in their negotiations, have contracted any debts for which the Government is liable; and if so, the amount thereof; second, whether any drafts, drawn by said commissioners or agents, have been protested by the Department; and if so, the amount.

Mr. W. I shall ask for the consideration of that resolution now, as the information sought will be of importance when we come to act upon the deficiency bill. I know that debts have been contracted to the amount of $700,000, for which certificates or drafts have been given by the Indian commissioner. Those drafts are in the hands of citizens of California, who have furnished supplies to the commissioner to be furnished to the Indians. It will be necessary, if these debts have been contracted in good faith, for the Government to pay them, unless it be that the Indian commissioner has transcended his authority in these contracts. This resolution simply calls for the amount of these debts, if any have been contracted. In my judgment, they are so large that the subject should receive the prompt attention of the Senate. The resolution was agreed to.

FLORIDA ELECTION COMMITTEE.

Mr. MASON. I received a letter, about a week ago, from the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. BRIGHT], dated at his residence in Indiana, informing me, that in consequence of an afflictive death in his family, he should probably be detained at home for three or four weeks. He therefore requests me to ask the Senate to excuse him from serving on the select committee on the Florida Senatorial election case.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Virginia whether he has not heard from the Senator from Indiana more recently than the time to which he refers?

Mr. MASON. I have not.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Is he not already on his way here?

Mr. WALKER. Perhaps it may be as well to mention that, from information which I have received, I expect Mr. BRIGHT to be here in a day or two, and that it may be advisable not to take action on the proposition of the Senator from Virginia, for that time at least.

Mr. MASON. In reply to the Senator from Wisconsin, I may state that I have heard nothing from the Senator from Indiana since the letter I have alluded to, which I received a week ago, and which was dated some three or four days prior to the time I received it. I have no objection that action should be delayed for a few days on the motion I have made.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator withdraw the motion?

Mr. MASON. I do.

JUDICIAL SALARY IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. RHETT submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary do inquire into the propriety of increasing the salary of the Judge of the district court of the United States for the State of South Carolina.

OTTAWA AND CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

Mr. FELCH submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making provision for the amicable arrangement with the Ottawa and Chippewa Indians of all questions arising under the treaty with them of 1836, relative to the continued occupancy of the lands reserved to them, and the consideration to be paid for such cession; and, also, as to the expediency of making an appropriation to enable the proper Department to consummate such measures as may be necessary for their permanent settlement in the country where they now reside.

NON-INTERVENTION.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone all the special orders preceding the resolution respecting the doctrine of non-intervention.

Mr. BORLAND. Before a vote is taken on that question, I desire to say, that but for the general understanding that the resolution whose consideration it is now moved to resume, was to be considered to-day, to the exclusion of everything else, I should have moved to take up the resolution of inquiry with regard to the expedition to Japan. I shall to-morrow move to take up that resolution. I make this suggestion in justice to myself, lest it might be supposed that I had abandoned it altogether.

Mr. GWIN. I wish to state that I hope that when the Senator from Virginia shall have concluded his remarks to-day, we may resume the consideration of the subject which was before us yesterday.

The motion to postpone all other special orders, and to proceed to the consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, was agreed to, and the Senate resumed its consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MASON addressed the Senate for two hours in support of the doctrine of non-intervention. A report of his speech will be found in the Appendix.

Mr. BELL. The Senate are aware that it has been my desire to be heard on this subject. I submit to the Senate to appoint some day on which to take up this subject again.

Mr. UNDERWOOD and others suggested Monday.

Mr. BELL. If there are any measures to be pressed in the mean time, I have no disposition to ask to be heard before Monday or Tuesday next. Several SENATORS suggested Tuesday.

Mr. BELL. I move to postpone the further consideration of the resolutions until Tuesday next.

Mr. COOPER. I should be glad if the Senator from Tennessee would fix a day early in the week. I desire to obtain the floor, if no one else does, at the conclusion of the Senator's speech; and I should like to have an opportunity to address the Senate on some early day during the next week.

Mr. CASS. I wish to suggest whether it would not be better to go on and terminate the discussion, before we take up any other subject.

Mr. BELL. I desire to accommodate gentlemen. When I made the motion to postpone until Tuesday, I had in view the measure reported by the honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER], in relation to the public buildings. I thought that by postponing these resolutions until Tuesday next, that measure and the apportionment bill also might be taken up and disposed of in the mean time. I have no objection, however, to any day that may suit the convenience of the Senate.

Mr. COOPER. Wednesday will suit me; and therefore I have no objection to fix Tuesday next for hearing the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BADGER. I wish merely, at this time, to remind the Senate (what perhaps has escaped their recollection) that on the first or second day of February, if my memory serves me correctly, I commenced a speech on the compromise resolution offered by the late Senator, now Governor of Mississippi, which I have consented to postpone, from time to time, rather than interfere with the convenience of other gentlemen. Believing, as I did then, and do now, that the views I have to submit contain salt enough to keep them sound for any reasonable period, I have not pressed the Senate to hear me; but I beg leave to suggest to my friend that I think it is not unreasonable that I should be allowed, in the course of some few days, to complete the speech which I then commenced. I believe it has been longer on the carpet than any speech I ever heard of in either House of Congress. I wish to give notice now, that to-morrow, during the morning hour, I shall ask the Senate to take up that resolution, with a view of appointing some particular day for its consideration. I will add that I do it less on my own account than on account of a friend on this floor. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BROOKE] has reasons which induce him to think it a matter of interest and importance to himself to be heard upon that resolution; and I assure the Senate that it is far more with a view to his gratification than my own that I shall to-morrow ask the Senate to take up that resolution, and fix a day for its consideration.

The motion to postpone the further consideration of the resolutions until Tuesday, was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. ATCHISON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 6, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

DISCIPLINE IN THE NAVY.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the proposition to reconsider the vote by which the bill to enforce discipline in the naval service was rejected; and upon it the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MEACHAM. I ask the unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution; and I ask that it be read for information.

Mr. GORMAN. I object to its reading.

Mr. STUART. Mr. Speaker, I desire—

Mr. GORMAN. The order of business, I believe, is the call of the committees for reports.

CHARGES AGAINST THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter, and ask leave to present a memorial of a singular character.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] is upon the floor.

Mr. GORMAN. During the morning hour, I understand, the time is to be devoted to the call of committees.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill to enforce discipline in the Navy was rejected.

Mr. GORMAN. What is the first thing in order during the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill to enforce discipline in the Navy was rejected, and upon which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] is entitled to the floor. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WALSH] addresses the Chair, and appeals to the House to present a memorial.

Mr. WALSH. There has been a memorial placed in my hands by Henry May, of the Baltimore bar, making complaints against the circuit court of the District, and contains charges. I do not want to file it under the rules, for, if ever a matter required broad daylight, it is this. I file all my memorials generally under the rules.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to say a word to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. WALSH], and it is this—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object? Mr. HOUSTON. I will be forced to object, unless my suggestion is heard. I want to make a suggestion.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not want to debate it.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WALSH] chooses to offer his memorial, let it be received. The gentleman from Maryland asks to offer a memorial.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is true; but I understood him further to say that he means to debate it.

Mr. WALSH. I do not mean to say a word upon the subject of the memorial. I wish merely to say to the House why I trouble them with the presentation of this petition. It asks for a change of venue in the case of Dinsmore against Wilkes from the circuit court of the county of Washington to the criminal court of said county and District, by Henry May, of the Baltimore bar. He prefers charges against the circuit court in the District. I move a reference of the petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOUSTON. I shall not object.

Mr. LETCHER objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WALSH] asks leave to introduce a memorial, that it may be referred.

Mr. KING, of New York. Having made this statement, the gentleman from Maryland can present it under the rule.

Mr. WALSH. Having obtained my main wish, to bring to the notice of the House the character of the paper, and to present it openly, I will now file it under the rule.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have been instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to submit a report of a bill which came from the Senate. It will give rise to no debate, and my object is, to have it made the special order at some early day.

Mr. OLDS objected.

Mr. DANIEL. I wish simply to suggest to the House, as we have not had reports for a great while, and as there are a great many on hand, that we may, by general consent, be permitted to receive reports during the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DANIEL] suggests, that the House proceed to a reception of reports from committees.

Mr. SACKETT. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair, whether the morning hour will begin until we are through with the privileged question?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour will not commence until the privileged question is disposed of.

A MEMBER. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has again and again stated that the business first in order, is the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill providing for discipline in the Navy was defeated, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. Will it be in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It will not; the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] claiming the floor, and being upon it. If that gentleman will yield for such a purpose, such a motion would be in order.

Mr. STUART. I do not propose to consume any unnecessary amount of time in the discussion of this question. Had the debate upon it the other day been of a different, and in my judgment, of a legitimate character, I would not have said anything. I adopted such a course on that occasion as I thought was quite proper when I asked of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the House to permit that question to go over until Thursday then next, that the bill might be printed, and that members might have an opportunity to examine it, so that we might act understandingly upon the whole subject. Succeeding that request, a most remarkable state of things occurred in this House. Gentlemen who are not members of the Naval Committee took up this question and proclaimed to the House that they had examined it; and one gentleman made a speech, and, upon the heel of it, moved the previous question, and against the request of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who asked for leave to amend the bill, and thus forced this House to vote upon it as it was. Now, I think that a little remarkable in the history of legislation; and I hope that by this time the gentleman has become satisfied that, however much the House are disposed to listen to him, or any other gentleman who has examined and understands a question, they are not disposed to have a measure forced upon them without their consent. We are told, that since flogging had been abolished in the Navy of the United States, there was now no power of discipline left, and that the Navy was afloat upon every sea without any power whatever to control or discipline the petty officers and seamen. This was one of the reasons which was urged upon us for immediate action. The other one was, that a fleet was about to sail for Japan, and would sail before Thursday, and it was indispensable that this bill should be passed, in order that the fleet might have the advantage of it.

